FIRST ANNUAL REPORT.

In presenting the First Annual Report of the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association, we are compelled to speak of judgment as well as of mercy; to record the afflictions of our Heavenly Father as well as His blessings; to mourn the early loss of beloved and highly-valued fellowlaborers, while we rejoice in the continued life and health of the great body of our associates at home, and our missionaries abroad. Since our organization as a Missionary Association, a little more than one year ago, two of the members of that Convention, who were also chosen members of our Executive Committee have ceased from their labors and entered into rest. One of them, the Rev. Amos A. Phelps, was permitted to take his seat in the meetings of the Executive Committee and mingle in its councils, but twice before going to the West Indies, in what proved to be an unfounded hope of restoration to health. His visit to those Islands, though contributing nothing towards his recovery, was yet of great advantage to the Executive Committee, in the information which he was there permitted to gather, and subsequently to appart to the Committee and the world. Despairing of deriving any advantage from a longer residence there, and having accomplished all that he could hope for in behalf of our Association, Mr. Phelps returned to this country early in the spring, fully assured that his days were numbered, and that he came home but to die. His last energies were expended in re-examining the principles contained in his letters to the Rev. Dr. Stowe, and prepar. .g them for the press, thus re-affirming with his last expiring breath, the principles which lie at the foundation of our existence as a missionary body: He departed this life on the morning of the 30th July, 1847. His record is on high, but we feel, permitted to allude to so much of it in detail, from the fact, that his labors. more perhaps, than those of any other one, contributed to create and foster that christian public sentiment, whose demands can be met only by the existence of an association, which shall combine the labors of the friends of God in an effort to save mankind, untrammeled by any voluntary connection with a stupendous evil, which, more than any other thing in Christendom, is heathenizing the whole family of man.

In March of the present year, the Rev. Theodore Sedgwick Wright, another member of our Executive Committee, as well as of that of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, heard the invitation "Come up higher," and, escaping from the contumely and scorn which, on account of his color, he often met with among false brethren here, he left the humble scene of his highly valuable labors, and entered into the joy of his Lord

Of the Missionaries under the patronage of this Board whose field of labor is in heathen lands, one, Mr. Thomas Garnick of the Mendi Mission, has passed to his reward. The remainder of our Missionaries, with the exception of the Rev. Mr. Barnard of the Red Cedar Lake Mission, have been blessed with the enjoyment of health.

Previous to the formation of our Association, three distinct Missionary organizations, holding views substantially the same on all points wherein we differ from most other Missionary bodies, were found in operation. The oldest of these bodies was the Union Missionary Society. This Society was the peculiar property of Anti-Slavery men. By the providence of God, at a time when Anti-Slavery Christians were in danger of abandoning all effort for the salvation of the heathen world,-from dissatisfaction with the sanction given to Slavery by the silence of the American Board in relation to it, by its ready acceptance of the donations of Slaveholders, as gifts acceptable to God, by its fellowshipping them in receiving them as officers of their own body, and its approval of their reception into the Mission Churches-thirty-six Africans were thrown upon our shores, and after earnest and long-continued efforts on the part of our own government, and the agents of a foreign power, to brand them as slaves, or punish them as murderers, were declared free. Here was an enterprise prepared of God to our hands. The cordiality with which the work of sending these liberated men and women back to Africa, under the care of Christian teachers, was entered upon, proved that Anti-Slavery Christians had not forgotten their duty to the degraded of other lands, through their care for the oppressed at home.

The men who united their exertions, first, for procuring the legal recognition of the rights of these suffering ones, and secondly, for giving to them the gospel and religious teachers to take with them to Africa, eventually formed the Union Missionary Society, whose principal care was the Mendi Mission, while they also received contributions and forwarded them, for Missionaries in other parts of the world.

The emancipation of the slaves of the West-India Islands was the occasion which eventually led to the formation of the West-India Missionary Committee. The West In in Mission, for whose support the Committee was formed, was commenced in the fall of 1839, by five Congregational ministers, who went to Jamaica in the expectation of receiving a plain support from the emancipated people among whom they labored. Finding themselves disappointed in their expectations, after enduring trials, and suffering from want, they secured the organization of the West India Missionary Committee, under the care of which the Mission at Jamaica remained until after the formation of the American Missionary Association.

Providential circumstances, connected with the same Anti-Slavery spirit, led to the formation of the Western Evangelical Missionary Society. A number of young men and women in a western State, having had their zeal aroused and their sympathies for the perishing heathen quiekened, by the visits of some faithful Missionaries from among the Indians, resolved to devote themselved to the work of their evangelization. Poor themselves, they began to inquire for some means of reaching their field of labor, and of support while engaged in it. Shrinking from the contaminations of slavery, and in sympathy with Him who hates robbery for burnt-offering, they made their appeal to Anti-Slavery men of the West. The appeal was successful, the Western Evangelical Missionary Society was formed, under whose patronage they went forth joyfully, bearing with them the gospel of the great salvation.

Thus the Eastern states had their West-India Missionary Committee. The seat of the Union Missionary Society's labors was in New-York; and the West had its Western Evangelies Missionary Society. All these had a common Anti-Savery sentiment, each having its distinct Mission in different parts of the world, while the two last held themselves in readiness to send the gospel to all parts of the earth, as the men and the means should be furnished them.

While it is not denied that the existence of these separate bodies had its advantages, it was thought by the friends of all, that strength would be found in the union of their forces; accordingly they came together at Albany in September last, and formed the American Missionary Association.

MISSIONAR-Y OPERATIONS IN AFRICA.

MENDI MISSION, AT KAW-MENDI.

Missionary, Rev. Wm, Raymond. Native helper, John Bunyan. Absent, Mrs. Raymond.

For the last year this Mission has been surrounded by wat; but the shield of the Lord has been over it, and no man has been permitted to harm it. For the last six months the war has been raging almost within sight of the Mission, and the smoke of the burning villages has gone up before them: in the midst of these scenes, the missionsries have been called upon to give sanctuary to the persons and the property of the victims of the war,

Under date of May 6th, Mr. Garniek wrote, (in his report,) We have received news this morning, that the war has taken a town but a few milles from this place, and the people around us begin to bring their effects here. . . . It is now certain that snother town has been taken still nearer to us than the first. I never saw people so much afraid as I have seen them this morning.

The existence of such a war left little to be immediately hoped for from the preaching of the gospel to those most exposed. The labors of the missionaries were therefore early turned to the instruction of the youth. The people, aware of this purpose, without splicitation, sent their children to the Mission house to be educated, and thus, somewaht in anticipation lof his purpose, Mr. R. was constrained to commence his school. Under date of July 23, 1846, he wrote: "The school is now in operation, with 24 scholars." At our latest devices it numbered 105.

The Executive Committee approved of the opening of the school, as almost the only means of reaching the African mind, at a time when nearly all the chiefs within reach of the mission were too deeply engaged in war and slave-trade enterprises, to permit their people to hear the gospel. The ancedote related by Mr. Bunyan, the converted Mendian sent into the interior by Mr. Raymond, will show the general feeling of the people, and the hopelessness of any attempt to reach them with the words of life. The chief, Bu-raw, refused to call his people together to hear the gospel, because, and he: "I am a war man. I have gun powder and cuttess in my hand to fight with." Even his dark mind saw the inconsistency of listening to the gospel while presenting with purdences intent to attach his fellow men.

From the time of starting the school up to late advices from Africa, the war had been approaching the mission premises, until the villages nearest them have been utterly destroyed and the people scattered. Before the news of these dreadful ravages had reached us, the Corresponding Scoretary had written to Mr. Raymond, suggesting that he should reduce the number of his scholars, and send some of them back to their homes.

Before this letter reached Kaw-Mendi, the desolating curse had rolled over the villages from which most of the children came, and they had no home to which they could go. In referring to this suggestion, Mr. R. writes: "This thought has so wrought upon my mind that I have hardly been able to write this letter. Send my children home! I CANNOT. To some of them at least it would be the same as to take a knife to their throats. Many of them, when they came, had homes, but now they have none. * * For humanity's sake

I cannot send my children away. I know there is not a member of the Committee, nor a Christian in the land who would ask such a thing if they knew the circumstances."

The Executive Committee could not devote these children to the sword, and giving Mr. Raymond instruction to reduce the expenses of the Mission in every way in his power, they have left this part in the hands of God.

One of the Amistad captives, Sarah Margru, is now in this country at school. She came here with Mrs. Raymond in the summer of 1845, since which time she has been pursuing her studies in Ohio. The reports of her teachers concerning her rapid progress in acquiring an education, and her simple, unaffected, yet fervent piety, are of the most gratifying nature, authorizing us to hope that she may soon be prepared to return to Africa, to superintend in the education of the benighited of her own sex, and to give to them that gospel which has been made so great a blessing to her.

DEATH OF MB. GARNICK.

It is our painful duty to report the death of Mr Thomas Garnick, of this Mission. He died at the Mission, July 10, 1847, after an illness of about seven weeks. He sailed from Philadelphia the last of Dec. 1846, and arrived at Kaw-Mendi, Feb. 27, 1847. During the first three months of his sejourn there, he enjoyed good health, and entered most heartily into the missionary work. In May he wrote for the Executive Committee a valuable report on the condition of the Mission. Our next intelligence was that he had been sick with fever, but was recovering. No apprehension was expressed or felt, as to the result. The letters next received, were dated July 1, and stated that Mr. G. had suffered a relapse. Nine days after, we received another letter from Mr. R., written just at the hour of the departure of a vessel for this country, informing us of Mr. G.'s death. He says, "Brother Garnick was taken sick the 21st of May, and died on the 10th of July. His disease appeared to be typhus, or slow nervous fever. His case was entirely different from any I had ever seen; from the beginning, he seemed to suffer no pain, neither did his fever run high; but he grew weaker and weaker every day till he died. I am left alone, and that too, when I most need help.

I am left alone, and that too, when I most need help.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee held the evening of the day on which the intelligence of Mr. Garnick's death reached us, the following resolution was passed:—

"Whereas, intelligence has this day been received of the death of Mr. Thomas Garnigk, one of the Missionaries of this Association at Kaw-Mendi, West Africa Resolved. That the Committee, while they are deeply affected by the melancholy event, and sympathize with the friends of the deceased, would how submissively to the decree of the Great Head of the church, earnestly praying that the mission may ever be under the divine guidance and productive of good; and that other devoted servants of Christ may be disposed to lay their hodies upon God's altar, and, taking their lives in their hands, enter upon this field of labor."

An urgent appeal is sent forth in the October number of the American Missionary for aid in the support of the Mission school, and for another missionary to take the place of Mr. Garnick.

This Mission has lost one of its importance in the estimation of the Committee. From reports already published, we are led to believe that it has obtained such influence in Africa, that on the cessation of the war now raging the whole of the interior of Africa, for many day's journey, will be open to the missionaries at Kaw-Mendi. The Mendi nation, seven days in the interior, express their strong desire that Mr. Raymond will plant his Mission there, saying that he came to Africa to plant a Mission among them, and that they shall never consent to his stopping short of their nation.

shall never consent to his stopping short of their nation.

It is hoped that Mr. Garnick's death will not deter others from enlisting in this service. The fever of which he died was not the usual fever of the country. The yellow fever is this year prevailing on some parts of the coast, and the whole country is at this time unusually unhealthy.

One Mission on the Island of Jamaica. Four stations and three out-stations. Brainerd. Rev. Wm. H. Evarts and wife. C. B. Venning and wife, Teachers. Miss. Northover, Assistant Teacher.

Eliot. Rev. Lorin Thompson and wife.

Oberlin. Vacant, The church supplied by the brethren from other atationa Union. Rev. S. T. Wolcott, Missionary, and Mrs. Wolcott and Miss.

Rennie, Teachers.

Cool-shade. An out-station of Brainerd. Vacant.

Providence. An out-station of Oberlin. Dr. J. S. Hyde and his wife, Teachers, now on their way to Jamaica.

Devon Pen. An out-station of Union. Teacher, Anderson Rennie.

General Physician, Charles C. Terrel, M. D. Fern Hill.

There are five churches connected with this Mission-one at each station. and one at the Providence out-station.

The services of the missionary at Oberlin are usually shared with the church at Providence out-station-hence, but four ordained missionaries are required for the supply of the churches of this Mission.

At our last reports from these churches, there were about three hundred members in good standing connected with them. The church at Ellot has enjoyed a refreshing out-pouring of the Spirit of God—as the first fruits of which, twelve or fourteen members have been added to the church, and some backsliders restored.

The past history of this Mission has been a record of trial and loss of health, resulting, not as it is supposed, from insalubrity of climate, but from excess of labor occasioned by inadequate support. Six missionaries, it is believed, have been compelled by loss of health, either on their part or their wives, to leave the Mission for other fields of labor. One of these remains in the wives, to sewe the mission for other needs of moor. One of these remains in the island of Jamaica, and two of them have been employed, in whole or in part, during the part year, in plending the sause of the Mission in this country.

The Rev. Mr. Renshaw, who has been for some time in the United States, has, until within a few weeks, been expecting to return to Jamaica this full. By the advice of physicians whom he has consulted, he has now given up all idea of returning, and an ordained missionary should soon be sent out to supply his place.

Soon after the formation of this Association, the W. L. Missionary Committee resigned their stations, and transferred the care of the Mission, so far as it had devolved on them, to the Association. The Committee, however, had had no control whatever over the Mission, either us to the amount of funds appropriated to it, or the manner of their disbursement; their sole office being to plead the cause of the Mission in this country, and forward to Jamaica whatever of funds came into their hands. This office the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association have performed the last year, keeping agents in the field, pleading for this specific object, and have forwarded to Jamaica from time to time the funds, as they have received them. The amount thus received, and the present condition of that account, is stated in the report of the Treasurer.

In the opinion of all the parties concerned, some more intimate connection, involving greater responsibility on either part, was desirable. A correspondence was had with the brethren at Jamaica and with Messrs. Hovey and Renshaw, formerly Missionaries there, and at the time acting as agents of this Association in behalf of that Mission; and the Executive Committee, at its last session, adopted the Report of a Sub-Committee, recommending a plan of union between this Association and the Jamaica Mission. From the expressed wishes and views of the brethren connected with the Mission, it is not doubted that this plan will prove acceptable to them, and the union be consummated at an early day.

The several stations and out-stations of this mission have in possession, in all, about fifty acres of land, the title to which, with that of the chapels and buildings thereon, is vested in trustees, to be held by them for the use of the Churches and Congregations in the worship of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and the free use of the premises is guaranteed to the Missionaries in

The plan of union gives the Association the control of the funds collected for the Mission, and the determination of the amount appropriated to it: requires that the Executive Comittee should be consulted in all changes involving any alteration in the expense of the Mission, and leaves the ministers and churches free in the choice of the Presbyterian or Congregational form of Church Government, and in the administration of the discipline and ordinances of the Church of God, in accordance with the Constitution of the American Missionary Association.

Rev. Mr. Wolcott and wife sailed from New-York, for Jamaica, in the fall of 1846. They nearly suffered shipwreck, and were constrained to put into Charleston, S. C., for repairs. Sailing again from Charleston, they reached the Island the early part of this year, and are now stationed at Union.

Dr. C. C. Terrel, since his arrival at Jamaica, has received appointments from Government as a physician, the income from which will be more than sufficient for his support and that of his family. He has written to the Ex-centive Committee, expressing his wish still to be considered a Missionary, and that a definite sum should be fixed upon as his salary, the remainder of his income to be sacredly devoted to the good of the Mission. The Corresponding Secretary has been requested to continue the correspondence with Dr. Terrel, and with his consent, prepare an agreement to be presented to-the Executive Committee for their approval.

Two highly recommended young ladies in the West have offered them-selves for Missionary Teachers in the Jamaica Mission; and a correspondence is now in progress in reference thereunto. Dr. J. S. Hyde, from Tioga Co., N. Y., has been approved by the Executive Committee, as a Missionary Teacher, and is now under appointment to sail with his wife for the Jamaica Mission some time during the ensuing month.

A Missionary for the Oberlin and Providence stations, to supply the place of Rev. Mr. Rensbaw, is greatly needeed. The people left as sheep without a of key. Mr. Ressusw, is greatly necteed. Ine people let as sneep without a shepher lare going satray, and the enemy is at work in valious ways, to destroy the little churches planted there. The people, just emerged from the darkness and degradation of slavery, are but too easily affected by the evil influences surrounding them, and need the constant supervision of a pastor. At this stage of their career to leave them long destitute, is to give them over At this stage of their career to leave ment long destatute, he we give them over to destruction; and the brethren now ministering there are too much burden-ed at their own stations, to give them the attention they need. A correspon-dence has been opened with the Rev. J. O. Beardslee, formerly connected with the Mission, with a view to secure his services as Missionary at those stations. The chapels and buildings at several of the stations and out-stations are much out of repair. The Committee would gladly avail themselves of the labors of some Christian brother, a house builder, to superintend the necessary improvements, with a view to his becoming permanently connected with the Mission, in the capacity of a Teacher.

As a whole, the condition of the Jamaica Mission is considered prosperous; although much labor is yet needed, and some thousands of dollars must yet be expended, before the work requisite for the spiritual welfare of the people can be accomplished without a fearful waste of health, and even of life.

Too sanguine expectations, concerning missionary success in this Island, must be guarded against, lest, when those expectations are not met, an unwarranted depression follow. Emancipated slaves are but men, and are subject to like passions, and like vices, with other men.

Already is this shown; and some promises of good from which too much was expected, are beginning to fail; and the labors of our brethren there are consequently made more arduous and trying.

Attracted by the novelty of learning, and inspired with the hope of soon rising, through education, to the platform on which the white man stood, they applied themselves to their books, and urged the attention of their children to them with an enthusiasm, that secured unlocked-for facility in acquiring knowledge; and there began to be produced the idea that the black man's or the black child's capacity was not inferior indeed, but superior, to that of the white. Time and experience soon convinced them that it was only by long-continued and unremitted effort that much could be hoped for; the enchantment of novelty passed away, and the time has already come, when they, like the ignorant among the whites, need to be labored with, to induce them to avail themselves of the privileges offered them. So also, concerning their support of the gospel, a change not to be wondered at, however much it may be regretted, has come over them, and with increased ability, their willingness to support their religious teachers has not increased. Once unaccustomed to the possession of money, they knew not its uses, and were ready to contribute freely to what they knew to be a good. With freedom and the possession of funds, came the desire for luxuries, and the love of hoarding; and there, among them as with ourselves, contributions to the cause of Christ, the service of our Lord, have not then proportioned to the blessings enjoyed.

OJIBEWA MISSION.

The Mission among the Ojibewa Indians has two stations. One at Red Lake, and one at Red Cedar Lake.

Red Lake Station. — Dr. Wm. Lewis and wife, Physician and Teacher; S. G. Wright and wife, Teachers: and O. A. Coe, Farmer; Mrs. Coe.

Red Cedar Lake. — Rev. Alonzo Barnard and wife. Rev. A. B. Adams and wife. David B. Spencer, and Miss Cornelia Leonard, Teachers. Total—twelve

This Mission is wholly under the care of the Western Evangelical Missionary Society, Auxiliary to the American Missionary Association, and has received its support mainly in the Western States.

The Rev. J. P. Bardwell, acting as agent under a joint commission from this Association and the Auxiliary Society, has had his exclusive attention devoted to the support of this Mission.

During the last year, the Mission has been strengthened by the addition of Mrs. Wright, wife of S. G. Wright, to the Red Lake Station, and Rev. A. B. Adams and wife, and Miss Cornelia Leonard, to the Red Cedar Lake station. The expenses of this Mission for the last year, have been greater than for any previous year, and probably greater than they will be for the enrent year.—The report of this Auxiliary says. "Our Missionaries are now comfortably supplied with most articles needed by them for the present year. A more generous supply would, however, very much lessen their labors, and enable them to accomplish more for the benighted heathen around them."

During the past winter, a Church was formed at Red Cetar Lake, composed only of the Mission Family, now six in number. Rev. Mr. Barnani is the chosen pastor of the Church. One of the brethren writing, concerning the season enjoyed by them at the formation of the Church, says, "Our minds naturally reverted back to the time when it could be said, 'And the church that is in thine house.' True it is the day of small things with us, but not the less an object of kind regard by the great Head of the Church. Who knows to what this little vine may grow! Who can tell what numbers shall be added to it of such as shall be saved? Great are our anticipations; and though we may be gathered to our long home, ere we shall be permitted to see much fruit as the result of our labors, yet we feel that we shall not be disappointed. He who, as the Hearer and Answerer of prayer, draws out our hearts continually for the early and latter rain, will assuredly accomplish his own designs of love and mercy. Our prayers are commingled with our labors, both in private and in concert, as many a spot in these wilds that surround us could testify. Besides, is there not a choice band of God's little, ones who daily remember us at a throne of grace?"

May the faith of these brethren be sustained, and their lives be preserved, until they are permitted to see an abundant harvest as the result of their labors.

The station at Red Lake is occupied jointly by the brethren sent out by the Western Evangelical Missionary Society, and a Missionary and his wife ander the patronage of the American Board. The brethren have found it good to labor thus together, although the support of the different families comes from entirely separate, distinct bodies.

During the winter of 1845 and 1846, and before the removal of Messrs. Barnard and Spencer from that station, a precious revival of peligion was enjoyed there. The most satisfactory testimony is given of the stability of these converts. Some of them have been sorely tried, especially in reference to their observance of the Sabbath, while out on their annual buffalo hunt with their band. Twice were they left by their friends, because they could not go with them on the Sabbath. Remaining true to their profession, they succeeded in convincing their heathen neighbors that they were governed by a principle of which they as yet knew nothing.

of which they as yet knew nothing.

The Schools at both the stations are reported to be in a flourishing condition, but the number of scholars is not given.

At both stations there is regular preaching to such congregations as may be gathered, and in addition to this labor, and that of the school, the brethren set apart a portion of time to be devoted exclusively to visiting the people in their lodges, and conversing with them about the salvation of the gospel.—These pastoral visitations have been productive of great good, and it is the purpose of the brethren to continue them.

The results of gospel labor bestowed on these sons of the forest have been marked and beneficial, even on those whose souls are not yet saved. The bands of superstition are breaking, and they are gradually yielding themselves to the influence of the gospel. It must not, however, be supposed that their roving, hunting, and war-like habits are to be broken up at once. True, the grace of God could do this, but that grace is usually imparted with the use of means; these means are now in exercise, and your missionaries labor on in strong reliance, that He who has begotten within them burning desire to see an out-pouring of His Holy Spirit, will not dissappoint their high hopes, but will Himself gratify the desires he has created.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

During the past year we have been permitted to publish interesting intelligence from the Rev. J. S. Green, Mount Pleasant, Makawao, East Maui, Sandwich Islands. Four year ago Mr. Green commenced the enterprise of a self-sustaining church among the converted at Makawao. His latest report is under date of May 11, 1846, at the end of the third year. His experiment has thus far been eminently successful. As a Society, we have extended him aid in furnishing him with such books and periodicals, as he has needed from this country. The support of himself and family is furnished by his own labor and the contributions of his people.

Mr. Green, having used his influence with the government to procure for the people the right to become owners in fee simple of the land, has been made Agent for the sale of Makawao. In order to secure a favorable result in his efforts to elevate the people, he wrote to the Executive Committee of the Union Missionary Society, requesting that a farmer and a teacher might be sent out to his assistance. In accordance with his general plan for a self-sustaining mission, these assistants were to receive their support there, the Society being called upon only to select the men and furnish means to convey April 18th, the Executive Committee, having received satisfactory testimonials as to the christian character and qualifications of Mr. John S. Edes, of Allentown, N. H., resolved to engage him to go to Makawao as a Missionary Farmer, to be connected with Rev. Mr. Green.

Mr. Edes sailed from Boston in the ship Minstrel, the last of June, furnishing his own passage-money, and providing not only his own outfit, but many implements of agricultural and mechanical labor for the Mission.

A Teacher is yet to be provided for Mr. Green's station.

CANADA MISSION.

The Fugitives from Republican oppression finding refuge in Canada, have demanded and received our aid.

The larger share of appropriations to this Mission has been of goods and slothing, a large amount of which has been sent into Canada.

The brethrea and sisters residing there, have performed a most self-denying labor. With but few of the comforts of life themselves, they have been called upon to divide those few with the panting, hungry, almost naked fugitive, as he has reached that inhospitable clime. We hope that this department of our labor will secure the attention of our friends the coming year.

HOME OPERATIONS.

These have not been extensive; the treasury having been exhausted in the support of Missions already commenced.

Four brethren at the West have received aid, as home Missionaries, from this Association. From some of these, encouraging reports have been received. There have been some hopeful conversions through the blessing of God on their labors.

It is submitted to the Association, whether a wise economy does not demand of us more enlarged operations as a Home Missionary Society. A large number of abla and useful ministers in the Western States are becoming dissatisfied with their connection with a Society that supports Missionaries in the Southern States, who receive slave-holders into the Church, and through whom the contributions of slave-holders flow into the Society's Treasury.

These men are able, self-denying, and laborious, and the blessing of God rests on their labors. This wins for them the favor of God's people; and the good that such men accomplish, is that which secures for the Society that sus tains them, the contributions of the churches. Are we not as a Society, bound to use in behalf of the spread of a pure gospel, in behalf of the slave, the influence which the support of such men would give us? The applications from them to be received under our care have been numerous; the greater number have been rejected: to the few we have been able to give a meagre assistance.

The Committee have also had under their care a City Mission, under the charge of Rev. C. B. Ray, designed mainly for the benefit of the colored population of the city of New-York. Mr. Ray has a small church under his care, and superintends a flourishing Sabbath-School, having an average attendance of sixty scholars. Seven members have been received into the Church during the past year; besides these, Mr. R. reports four other hopeful conversions of individuals, who have since died. The support of Mr. Ray is made out from collections secured by him for this specific object.

The extent of our operations as a Society, and the amount of money contributed to our treasury, constitute no just indication of the progress of our cause. The great foundation principles stated in the Address of the Albany Convention, and sought to be embodied in our Constitution, are everywhere in the Northern States, but more especially in the North-West, obtaining favor. In one form or another, they are recognised as true by nearly every Christian Convention of the last year. To this general statement there is one distressing exception. National Societies,-General Assemblies, and American Evangelical Alliances, -though constrained, for the most part, to testify against slavery, as a gigantic enormity, still resist all efforts made to dissuade them from fellowshipping the supporters of, and participators in, the evil. With these exceptions, the Christian assemblies in the Free States have, during the last year, almost uniformly protested against some form of fellowshipping the slaveholders. A Convention, representing 48 Presbyterian and Congregational churches in Northren Ohio, resolved. "That the Missionary Boards with which we stand connected ought to make a declaration of sentiment, disapproving of the admission of slaveholders to the Mission churches." Individual churches, Presbyterian and Congregational, resolve that "slaveholding is a proper subject of discipline in the Church of Christ," that they "cannot admit to any of the ordinances of the Church, those who are living in the practice of slaveholding; that no advocate of slavery, or slaveholder, who does not give satisfactory proof that his slaveholding is involuntary, should be admitted to membership in a Christian church, or invited to a participation in its ordinances; that no voluntary slaveholder, or advocate of slavery, should be admitted to our pulpits, to officiate as a gospel minister; " and that "Missionary Boards should manifest their decided and unqualified disapprobation of the admission of slaveholders to the mission churches." In Pennsylvania and Ohio, distinct enterprises are on foot for the organization of an Anti-Slavery Presbyterian Church for the United States of America. The principal men in both branches of this movement look to our Society for sympathy, and would be glad to co-operate with us in our efforts.

It is believed that the Editor of the "Herald of the Prairies" speaks correctly when he says. "We speak the sentiments of nineteen-twentieths of the churches that sustain the American Board when we say-We are unwilling that the American Board should propagate a Slaveholding Christianity.-Slavery exists at the South, and if the churches there sustain it, we are not partakers in their sin. Neither our money nor our fellowship countenances or sustains the institution. But shall the free North and West propagate a slaveholding religion? Such a thought ought not to be tolerated. We cry out against our civil authorities for propagating republican institutions marred by the curse of slavery. Shall we then through the Board propagate a slaveholding religion? We believe our churches in the free states, if they were to vote directly upon the question, without a single exception, would say NO !"

These Churches, these Presbyteries and Associations, and these Conventions, do, however, in one form or another, still fellowship the slaveholder in the church, the Assembly, the Evangelical Alliance, or, as a member of their missionary organizations.

Some do it from a reluctance to leave the men with whom they have associated, and the organizations through which much good has truly been accomplished; some hope that these organizations may be induced to take right ground HEREAFTER on all the questions pertaining to the interests of humanity and the purity of the church-therefore, they will by their contributions support them, while they send us their congratulations, as being already right; others still, do it from a misunderstanding of the true position and influence of these bodies.

In a Presbyterian and Congregational Convention held in Chicago, the past summer, a question arising on the adoption of a resolution recommending the American Board and its missionaries, to the churches, one of the Secretaries of that Board being questioned as to its position, gave the Convention to understand that the Board had conveyed to their missionaries their views that "Slavery should be terminated in the mission churches where it exists, and that the missionaries shall receive no more slaveholders into their communion." "The representatives of the Board present, and the Convention generally, unitedin approving and commending these principles." Under the influence of the impression thus produced, strong resolutions in favor of the Board, expressing satisfaction in its anti-slavery action, were passed. Eastern Editors, members of the Board, deny that any such action has been taken by that body, or can be taken—and thus different views of the position of the Board are held in different parts of the country.

Whether the Editor of the Herald does, or does not, interpret aright the explanations of the Secretary of the Board, of this there can be no question, that if that body do but distinctly take ground assumed for them by the "Ohristian Observer" of Philadelphia, and the "Observer" of this city, both edited by members of the Board, they will alienate from them a large majority of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches in the North-West, and force them to seek other missionary organisations, in whose anti-slavery feeling and action they can have more confidence.

In conclusion, the Executive Committee see no reason for fainting in their work, or abandoning it. The principles laid down at the organization of the Association are as true now, as they were then; - the claims of humanity are as important, and pressing; - the duty to preach the gospel to all nations is as imperative ; - the konor of God and the purity of the Church as much demand our effort :- men are perishing with the same rapidity now that they did then ; - the soul is as valuable, its loss as dreadful, its salvation as precious :- the gospel is as mighty, and God as willing to bless our efforts. Our prosperity has been as great as we had any reason to expect, and though we have not had all the funds we have desired, and which we believe we could wisely expend, we have received enough to encourage us to persevere in our work, in the full assurance that God will be with us. The number of those who are unwilling to cast their offering into the treasury with the oppressor, is continually increasing, and although the doubtful position assumed by some other bodies may still cause the withholding from our hands, of the funds of those, who, at heart, are one with us, we will go forward, confidently trusting that if we are faithful in our Master's service, he will give us all the aid we need in our labors. The opening fields for missionary cultivation are multiplying, and the number of worthy men, who would prefer our Association as the channel through which they shall receive a support in missionary labor, is greatly increasing. Why then should we cease from our exertions?

THE

SECOND ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

READ AT ,

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT,

SEPTEMBER 26, 1848.

PUBLISHED BY THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION :

WM. HARNED, AGENT, No. 61 JOHN STREET.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Second Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held at Hartford, Conn., Sept. 26, 1848, in the Lecture, Room of the 4th Congregational Church, (Rev. Wm. Patton pastor) at 3 o'clock P. M.

The President, Wm. Jackson, took the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. L. Merrick, late missionary in Persia.

The Treasurer read his report, which was referred to a committee, consisting of Messrs. Lyman, Whiting and Seeley. This committee subsequently reported approving of the report, and it was adopted.

The Corresponding Secretary read the Annual Report of the Executive Committee, which was accepted. The several parts of this report were afterwards brought forward for separate discussion. On motion to approve of that part of the Report relating to the African Mission, various important facts were stated, respecting the importance of the mission, and the laborsjof our missionaries in the temperance cause, while detained at Sierra Leone. Rev. J. W. C. Pennington presented facts showing the interest excited in the minds of the free people of color, in the Mendi Mission, and the bearing of African and our West Indian missions upon each other. Subsequently the following resolution was adopted:—

"Resolved, That we mourn over the lamented death of the Rev. Wm. Raymond of the Mendi Mission; and rejoice in the appointment of successors, who were so prompily sent to this interesting field; and that it be enjoined on the Executive Committee to sustain that mission, and as soon as possible send out an efficient additional missionary.

Messrs. Lyman, Deming, Pattou, White and Jocelyn were appointed a committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year.

Tuesday evening, Rev. G. W. Perkins, of Meriden, preached in Mr. Patton's church, from the text, Mark 16: 15: "Preach the gospel." A copy of the sermon was afterwards requested for publication, with which request Mr. Perkins has complied.

Wednesday morning, Sept. 27.—The hour from 8 to 9 was spent in devotional exercises, Rev. Geo. Trask presiding, at the conclusion of which the President called the Association to business.

That part of the Annual Report relating to the Indian mission was taken up for discussion. Rev. A. Barnard, missionary among the Ojibwas, at Cass Lake, addressed the Association, and gave many interesting facts in regard to this mission, and his views of the importance of a translation of the entire scriptures in the Ojibwa or Chipeway language. A free discussion followed, particularly in relation to the subject of translations, and many facts were stated by missionaries present, showing the fatal errors existing in some of the earlier translations of the Bible into the languages of different heathen countries, and the great amount of money that had in this way been ignorantly wasted. The following resolution was then adopted :-

"Resolved. That we deem the Indian Missions worthy of continued support. and that the Executive Committee be advised to employ another misssionary, and an interpreter, with a view to secure a translation of the sacred scriptures into the Ojibwa or Chipeway language, and to extend the influence of the mission in that large and influential tribe."

The subject of Home Missions was next taken up and discussed with gtrea interest, during which letters were read from Rev. David Thurston and Prof. C. D. Cleveland, Vice Presidents of the Association, and from Rev. David Root, Guilford, regretting their inability to be present, and variously urging Home and Foreign Missions. A letter was also read from J. G. Fee, of Kentucky, requesting to be appointed as a Home Missionary of the Association, Rev. Mr. Dickinson presented in writing, at length, his view of the great relative importance of Home Missions, and the following resolution, after a full expression of opinion by many members and missionaries present was adopted :-

"Resolved, That the Executive Committee be directed to sustain Home Missions so far as the funds entrusted to them for that purpose, and their own judament of individual applications and cases may allow; and that, in enquiring into their duty as to the establishment of new missions, they examine into the claims and condition of Oregon, California and other recently acquired territories as prospective fields for future missions,"

On motion by W. W. Patton; Resolved, That, as the churches have been accustomed to separate arrangements for Home and Foreign missions, it is desired that separate collections be taken up by those who support this Association, for the Home and Foreign branches of the work.

APTERNOON.

Prayer by J. W. C. Pennington. The Committee on nominations reported the following list of officers, who were then elected for the ensuing year:viz.; for President.

WILLIAM JACKSON, Mass.

Vice Presidents,

G. W. PERKINS, Conn. C. D. CLEVELAND, Penn.

Executive Committee.

Arthur Tappan, New York, J. W. C. Pennington, New York. S. S. Jocelyn Anthony Lane Charles B. Ray Thomas Ritter Sam'l E. Cornish J. O. Bennett Wm. E. Whiting Josiah Brewer, Conn. Wm. Harned M. S. Scudder. Boston.

On the subject of collecting agencies, the following resolution was discussed and adopted:-

"Resolved. That the members of the Association, and all the friends of the cause be earnestly requested to make special efforts to promote the circulation of the American Missionary, as it is more desirable to procure funds through such an agency than to be compelled to employ a living agency at a necessarily large expenditure from the money collected."

That part of the Annual Report which relates to the West India Mission being under consideration, the following resolution was discussed, and after a historical sketch of the Jamaica Mission, and impressive remarks by Rev. J. O. Beardslee, one of the early missionaries there, and now engaged in the Mico School on that Island, was adopted.

Resolved, That we deem it highly desirable that the Mission in the West Indies should be sustained, both as it respects the emancipated people in Jamaica, the interests of the slaves in this country, and the spiritual welfare of the People of Africa.

On motion, that part of the report which relates to the adoption of the Siam Mission was taken up, and remarks were made by the Corresponding Secretary, and Rev. D. B. Bradley, in explanation of the statement made in the report, and that made by the A. B. C. F. M., in relation to the dismission of Rev. Jesse Caswell and the Rev. D. B. Bradley, M. D. from their connection with the American Board's Mission at Siam. Dr. Bradley explained his theological view, the holding and teaching of which was thought by the A. B. to be "incompatible with the peace and prosperity of the mission." He also gave an interesting history of the Mission, after which the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved. That the establishment of a mission at Siam, and the acceptance by the Executive Committee of the services of our esteemed brethren, Messrs, Bradley and Caswell, meet the full approbation of this Association-that we have great confidence in their piety and learning, and that it be recommended to the Executive Committee to sustain and strengthen that interesting Mission."

Interesting letters were read by L. Tappan. Rev. Mr. Merrick, late missionary from Persia, presented many important and interesting facts in relation to Eastern Missions, and after free expression from various individuals the following resolution was adopted:-

"Resolved. That we derive great encouragement in the history of this Missionary Association, in the spirit of its missionaries, in the state of the cause in this country, in the favorable change of sentiment taking place in other Missionary Boards, and from the promises of God; and are more than ever sensible of the importance of sustaining and strengthening the various Missions connected with the Association."

On motion, it was resolved that the report of the Executive Committee as read by the Corresponding Secretary, be approved.

On motion, Resolved. That the thanks of the Association be presented to Rev. G. W. Perkins for the discourse delivered by him before this Association last evening in behalf of its principles and the cause of Missions, and that a copy be requested of him for publication.

A motion for adjournment having been made and carried, the Association, after prayer by Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, adjourned.

An interesting anniversary meeting was held in Mr. Patton's Church, Wednesday evening, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Trask, Rev. D. B. Bradley and Rev. J. C. Webster.

SECOND ANNHAL REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITEEE.

The second year of the existence of the American Missionary Association is completed, and the Executive Committee in presenting their Annual Report, would take occasion publicly to record the mercy of God in the good degree of prosperity which it has enjoyed. The funds of the Society have been sufficient to enable the Society to prosecute their work, and sustain the Missions under their care without embarrassment, and without involving our treasury in debt. By the report of the Treasurer, it will be seen that the increase in the income of the Society has been sufficient to meet the increased expenditure consequent upon the enlargement of our field of labor. Although we have been called to mourn the death of one of our most valuable missionaries, yet a good degree of health has been given to the Committee at home, and to our missionary brethren and sisters abroad; and the blessing of God has so rested upon our labors to extend the knowledge of a crucified Redeemer, that many souls have been hopefully converted to God. To His name be all the praise.

In carrying out the instructions of the Society at its last Annual Meeting, the Executive Committee have made provision for life membership in the Association by the following resolution: "Resolved, That any person who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes to the funds of this Association thirty dollars, may become a life member." Thirty persons have availed themselves of this privilege, and either by their own contributions, or through their friends, have become life members of the Association.

During the year, the Western Evangelical Missionary Society, which previously was auxiliary to the Association, has been merged in the Association, and the Indian Mission, formerly under its exclusive care, is now under the direct supervision of the Association. About the same time, the Free Synod of Cincinnati, composed of the three Presbyteries of Mahoning, Ripley, and Hillsboro, resolved to become auxiliary in their missionary operations to our Association. They have appointed Committees within the bounds of their several presbyteries, to see that collections be taken up in all their churches twice each year one to be devoted to the support of Home Missions, and the other for the Foreign field. We are encouraged to believe that this new Synod, formed by experienced and tried men who have withdrawn from the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Churches on anti-slavery grounds, will engage heartily in the cause of Missions, and be a valuable coadjutor in our work.

But one other Society has this year made itself auxiliary to our Association.

MISSIONARY OPERATIONS.

MENDI MISSION, KAW-MENDI, W. AFRICA.

Missionaries—Rev. George Thompson,
Mr. Anson J. Carter.

Native Assistant-Thomas Bunyan.

Mrs. Thompson is yet in this country.

The history of this Mission for the past year is one of trial. At the commencement of this period, our missionary, Rev. Wm. Raymond, was much embarrassed for want of funds. Events, as he supposed, beyond his control, involved the Mission in the support of a school of more than 100 scholars, beside the necessary assistants in so large an undertaking. The only alternative to the assumption of this responsibility appearing to be the turning away from the Mission those who would be thus consigned to slavery or death, Mr. Raymond received them, although by so doing his expenses were increased beyond the amount of the annual appropriation to that Mission .-Before the Executive Committee could provide for this increased expenditure considerable embarrassment ensued. Scarcely had relief from this trial been obtained, before Mr. Raymond, then our only missionary there, was attacked with yellow fever while at Sierra Leone on the business of the Mission, and after an illness of about one week, died. This was indeed a trying hour .-The little company there collected was surrounded by barbarians engaged in one of Africa's most destructive wars, and he who, under God, had been almost the sole agent in sustaining the Mission, and on whom alone the responsibility of its continued existence seemed to depend, was taken suddenly away. At the latest intelligence received from Kaw-Mendi, our new missionaries had not reached there. For seven months, the superintendence of all the important interests there gathered, had been in the hands of Mr. Bunyan, a converted Mendian. The providence of God had, however, preserved them, and although the enemy had made some petty exactions, and had frequently threatened the Mission with entire destruction, yet they had been permitted to do it no serious injury. Messrs. Thompson & Carter arrived at Sierra Leone May 9th, in the midst of the rainy season, and June 26th were still there, having been detained by contrary winds and rains. At the last mentioned dates they were expecting to proceed immediately to the Mission. Their detention has not been, we trust, without its benefits. Besides being able to obtain much valuable information, they had an opportunity to do much in the cause of Temperance. Religious men and ministers of the gospel there, occupy much the same ground as this class did in this country thirty years ago. Even those who are ready to abstain entirely from the use of intoxicating drinks themselves, feel constrained to keep it for the entertainment of friends. Intemperance prevails most alarmingly among the people, and next to the slave trade, is one of Africa's greatest curses. The means for sustaining this is supplied from our own country. Almost every ship that goes from the United States to Africa, (even those that carry out missionaries,) goes loaded either with tobacco or rum. Said one captain, "I have carried to Africa rum enough to float my vessel in." Both of our missionaries preached and lectured on temperance, presenting the doctrine of total abstinence as, under God, the only sure way of securing it. Much conviction was produced, and many signed the total abstinence pledge. Men high in authority were feeling the influence of the movement.

Under date of June 1, Mr. Bunyan reports the school as having 67 scholars in it—47 boys and 20 girls. Besides these, there were 21 persons connected more or less intimately with the Mission, making an aggregate of 38 persons on the Mission premises. Most of these persons are either children whose parents have been slain in war, or are captives redeemed from slavery or death. The Mission premises is their City of Refuge, and they cannot be sent away from it without exposure to instant death. The expense of providing a subsistence for so many persons, has been greatly increased by the war. The state of the country is such, that almost all the inhabitants are withdrawn from the cultivation of food, and in one instance a marauding band destroyed that which was being raised on the Mission land. At considerable expense Mr. Raymond had cleared land, and planted it, in hope of greatly reducing the expenses of the Mission, by raising, with the assistance of his scholars, nearly or quite all their own food. This hope cannot be fully realized until after the termination of the present war.

In order to encourage the natives in the cultivation of domestic habits, and as a means to overcome the licentiousness of heathenism and render sacred the family relation, Mr. Raymond offered to as many men as would become the lawful husband each of one wife, assistance in building a house near the Mission premises, reserving to himself the right of ejecting from the premises every one who should violate his marriage contract. A few had availed themselves of this offer, and were living on the Mission land.

The death of Mr. Raymond is the most afflictive providence that has ever befallen this Mission. He had planted it, and watered it, until it had so grown upon his hands as to demand the services of two or three Mission families. His plan was to make it speedily self-sustaining, and although the effort to accomplish this, involved increased present expense, there were already many things tending greatly to encourage him. Progress had been made in agriculture, some of his scholars were obtaining a knowledge of mechanical arts, and all were making fair advances in their books. In the midst of all this he was snatched suddenly away, before he had time to furnish his successor with the fruits of his own experience. When brother Garnick fell, brother Raymond was left, but when brother Raymond fell, there was no one left who was able to carry forward the Mission. By the providence of God, and his blessing on the labors of one of Christ's disciples, that which had been done was preserved, until now we have, as we hope, two missionaries on the ground, with the prespect of soon sending a reinforcement.

But Mr. Raymond has not fallen prematurely. He accomplished the work of an ordinary life-time. The six years that elapsed between the time of his embarkation from New York, and that of his death at Sierra Leone, were years of almost incredible labor, and most remarkable accomplishment. If he had done no more than plant that Mission, and gather together that large school, his life would not have been in vain. But he did more. He demonstrated to the world that the servants of the Lord may rely on his arm in the midst of wars and tumults, and that the gospel may be preached with boldness and success in the midst of furious and wicked adversaries by holy and courageous men, determined to do their duty. To the warrior, even in his kingly power, the slave stealer, and the slave trader, he, unarmed, and with no human reliance for preservation, preached a gospel of peace and brotherly love. He took the prey out of the jaws of the devourer, the captive prisoner out of the hands of the mighty, every where refusing to recognize the "robber right." His labors were blessed in the prevention of warr the breaking up of an extensive slave trade, and that which is of more value, the hopeful conversion of souls. He has gone to his rest. He, who gave him, hath taken him again, and to Him will we look for a like blessing on the labors of his servants who have since been appointed to the same field:

Beside the two missionaries already appointed, and as we hope now in the field, correspondence has been had with another whom the Committee hope to be able to send out this fall. Another brother now laboring as a Home Missionary, has offered the Committee his services for Africa, either for this station, or for the establishment of another, as the providence of God may direct. A preference was expressed for a mission to the interior, and the Secretary has been instructed to open a correspondence and institute inquiries, with a view to ascertain the feasibility of at once establishing a mission among the inhabitants of its more thickly settled regions.

Sarah Mar-gru, one of the Amistad captives, is still at school in this country. The testimony of her teachers is most favorable in relation to her progress in all that is needed to make her useful in Africa, and the Committee hope the time is not far distant when they shall feel warranted in sending her back as an assistant missionary to her benighted kindred and friends.

Mrs. Susan Carter, the wife of one of our newly-appointed missionaries, has died in this country, since the departure of her husband for Africa. Her health, which was feeble at the time, soon after suffered an unfavorable change, and she sank rapidly to the grave.

Charlotte (Ken-yon) one of the Amistad captives whom Mr. Raymond had adopted into his family, died at the Mission school about one month after his death.

The Executive Committee have always placed a high estimate on the importance of this Mission. In this agree also a great number of Christians of different denominations in all parts of our country, as is manifest by the readiness with which they have responded to every appeal for aid in its behalf. The events of the past year have increased rather than diminished this estimate. The position of the Mission is such as to give its laborers access to a large portion of country, and to permit them to exert a Christian influence over large bodies of men. When in the providence of God, the desolating war now raging shall have been brought to an end, we shall expect to see its influence indefinitely extended.

The trial and afflictions arising from the death of Mr. Raymond, were greatly relieved by the numerous expressions of sympathy received from friends in this country, in England, and Sierra Leone. These were numerous, indicating not only their high appreciation of the excellent character and remarkable missionary qualifications of our departed brother, but their strong desire that the Mission might be continued, and a reinforcement speed.

ity granted it. Some of the Wesleyan missionaries at Sierra Leone did not satisfy themselves with letters of condolence to us, but in connection with Mr. Will, a Christian merchant and native of Africa, made active and efficient exertions for the preservation of the Mission property, and the maintenance of its interests until new missionaries should arrive.

Mr. Will made liberal advances from his own funds for sustaining the Mission both before and after Mr. Raymond's death, and in connection with Rev. Henry Badger, addressed a letter to the principal chiefs of the country, advising them that the Mission would certainly be sustained, and requesting their continued friendship toward it. A resolution of thanks from the Executive Committee was forwarded to both these gentlemen, in which we have no doubt the Society cordially unite.

A large appropriation will be needed for the support of this Mission for the coming year. Past experience warrants the belief that the Executive Committee will be enabled to do for it all that its best interests shall demand.

Total, 16.

Since the last annual report of the Ex. Com, Doctor J. S. Hyde and wife, and Miss Catharine Stobie, and Miss Mary Dean, have arrived at the mission and commenced their labors. The Rev. A. D. Olds and wife are under appointment, and are expected to sail from this country about the middle of Nov. A report of the Mission dated July 1st, has been received. We gather from it the following detail.

BRAINERD STATION.

This is the largest station in connection with our mission at Jamaica.

The report for this year is not as definite as we could wish. From it we learn that it has been a year of exhausting labor and some severe trials. The tide of licentiousness which rages unrestrained where slavery exists, had received a check at "Emancipation" which the missionaries hoped would be effectual. For some time past the evil has been increasing, and some of the most promising young females in the Brainerd Congregation (not church members) have been ruined. The pastor instituted rigorous investigations, that he might discover the extent of its prevalence, and if possible put an effectual check upon its progress. Many things exceedingly afflictive to the Christian heart were brought to light; several church members were subjected to discipline and one was expelled. The report of the Mission expresses the hope that the steps taken will prevent the further increase of this vice.

The congregation at Brainerd has been diminished by the establishment of a native Baptist Church about half a mile from the station.

Within the year, four persons have been added to the church, three have died, and five have been expelled.

When the Report of the Mission was made, there was, and had been for some weeks, an inquiring state of mind in the congregation. From 20 to 40, some of whom were hopefully converted, attended a weekly meeting for inquiry.

The school at Brainerd is under the charge of Charles B. Venning, assisted by Miss Mary Rennie.

The number of scholars in attendance at school has been less during the past year than for many previous ones. The report gives the average attendance as 45. The whole number on the list is 63. Severe depression of the business of the Island, the springing up of several small schools, and the more lax discipline of most of them, are the reasons assigned for this reduction.

Upon application of the Mission, permission was granted them by the Executive Committee to establish a high school at Brainerd, into which a limited number of scholars from the different schools may be admitted and receive instruction in branches which cannot be introduced with advantage into the more primary schools. The increase of expenditure arising from this will not be great, while the missionaries hope that its establishment will lincrease the interest in the schools generally, and excite in the minds of the emancipated youth a desire for something higher than the mere elements of learning.

The collections at Brainerd for the support of the mission in its several departments are as follows:—

For	the st	ppor	t of the m	inister,	$136	76

Making an aggregate of $611 36

raised by this people, besides labor performed on the chapel, and keeping up the fences of the provision grounds and pastures at the station.

ELIOT STATION.

This station was established in May, 1842, and a church of 12 members organized under the care of Rev. G. Hovey. Since that time 70 more members have been added to the church, making in all 82. There are now but 62 members in good standing. One has been dismissed to unite with another church, five have died, eleven have been excommunicated, and three stand suspended from church privileges. This church is now under the care of Rev. L. Thompson, who was added to the mission in 1845, since which it has received an increase of 21 members, the annual report was made the first of July, at which time Mr. Thompson stated that some of his congregation were in an inquiring state, and some were anxious to unite with the church, whom they were not prepared to receive. One of the most difficult things the missionaries at Jamaica have to contend with, is the false notions which the people have of what constitutes true piety. Again and again are they constrained with all faithfulness, to tell the applicants for church privileges, that they greatly fear they are deceiving themselves.

The school at Eliot is under the care of Miss Stobie. The progress of the school is not rapid. The parents take but little interest in the education of their children, hence it is difficult to secure their regular attendance.

At this station there was raised the last year.

For the support of the minister,	$124 80 -

UNION STATION.

This station embraces two congregations, one at Hermitage, and the other at Devon-pen. Devon-pen is considered an out station of Hermitage, or Union.

The report of this year is imperfect. Nothing is stated concerning the schools. The church at Hermitage has received an accession of six members on profession of faith. One member has been expelled, and one suspended from church fellowship. Mr. Wolcatt is much encouraged by the animation and zeal in religion manifested by the church at Hermitage.

The congregations have raised this year,

For the support of their ministers,	839	84

OBERLIN STATION.

This station has been without the services of an ordained missionary during the whole of the past year: Rev. C. S. Renshaw the former pastor of the church at Oberlin, having been compelled by ill health to relinquish the hope of returning to Jamaica. The Rev. A. D. Olds has received an appointment to this station, and is expected to sail this fall.

The school at Oberlin has an average attendance of 20 scholars, under the charge of a lemale teacher; a goodly number of them read in the New Testament

Providence, an out staion of Oberlin, has also suffered from the want, of a missionary. Seven have been added to the church there this year. The sabbath school numbers from 60 to 70 scholars.

Although the mission churches have been nearly all of them strengthened during the year by the addition of new members, yet the year that has just closed, is regarded as one of trial rather than of rejoicing. Many of the evils engendered by oppression, yet remain, and occasionally show themselves in a form not anticipated.

This time of trial may continue. The brethren, however, labor in hope, that in the midst of all this trial the hand of God will be with them strengthening the good, even while sifting out the evil.

OJIBWA MISSION-MINESOTA TERRITORY.

This mission has two stations, one at Red Lake, and one at Cass, (or Red Cedar.) Lake.

RED LAKE STATION, Missionaries.—Dr. Wm. Lewis, phisician and teacher, and Mrs. Lewis, Mr. S. G. Wright, teacher, and Mrs. Wright. O. A. Coe, Farmer, and Mrs. Coe.

Cass Lake Station, Missionaries.—Rev. Alonzo Barmard, and Mrs. Barnard. Rev. A. B. Adams, and Mrs. Adams. Mr. D. B. Spencer, and Mrs. Spencer.

Total 12.

This mission, which has heretofore been under the superintendance of an auxiliary, the Western Evangelist Missionary Society, is now under our immediate care. No change in the conduct of the mission will take place in congequence of this transfer of its superintendance. The number of persons onnected with the mission remains as it was at our last report. The Rev. J. P. Bardwell, who has acted as an agent of the association for the support of this mission, will continue in that office. He will collect funds for the general purposes of the Association, and at the same time have under his more immediate care the supply of this mission. This arrangement relieves the Committee from much care and anxiety. Mr. Bardwell has spent some years in the Indian country in the vicinity of these stations, has visited them both, and is intimately acquainted with their wants, and the best way of supplying them. He is located at a point on the great chain of Lakes favorable to the transaction of the business of forwarding supplies to the mission.

The station at Red Lake is older than that at Cass Lake. The following are a portion of the statistics, showing the temporal condition of this band of Oilowa Indians.

The	whole	numb	er of f	amilies	is .		112

They now cultivate about 150 acres of land, from which, beside what they used during the summer, they harvested last year, 2097 bushels of corn, and 1422 bushels of potatoes, beside other vegetables, the product of their gardens. The Indian families made an average of from 400 to 500 pounds of sugar each. Our missionaries have been connected with this mission station about five years, and now the Indians cultivate more than double the quantity of land they did at the commencement of that period.

During the year, there have been but two additions from the Indians to the Church. There are now eight native members in this church. Since our last report, one member of the church, converted in extreme old age, has gone, as we trust, to Heaven. Her strong faith in the hour of dissolution produced a very deep impression on those who witnessed her death. Many of the Indians have been powerfully convicted, who yet have not had the courage to break away from the Pagan influences that surround them. Public opinion has almost unlimited power over the Indian, and unfortunately, it is arraved against the truth.

The operations of this Mission have this year been greatly hindered by the wars of the Indians among themselves. The Ojibwa, or Chipeway family of Indians, and the Sioux or Dahcotah family, have long been enemies, the one to the other. During the past winter, just as the brethren were beginning to hope for the immediate outpouring of the Spirit of God, news came that two Ojibwas of the Red Lake band, one of them the son of the chief, had been killed in the plains, by the Sioux. The Indian spirit was aroused, and all their energies turned towards the avenging the death of the slain.

As in previous years, the brethren at this station have found it necessary to devote much time to agricultural pursuits. This is not merely to obtain a supply for their temporal wants, but to set the people an example of Christian industry. The Indian is proverbially disinclined to labor, and in his heathen state, regards it as degrading. Their own prophets and religious men scrupulously refrain from any employment, lest thereby they should destroy the sacredness of their office. So great has been the prejudice of these Indians against having their spiritual leaders engage in any manual labor, that it was by some best acquainted with them supposed to be invulnerable. Our brethren, plevious to the establishment of this mission, derived much valuable information from an experienced Christian, warmly interested in the Indian's welfare, who had, in the service of Government, spent many years in the Indian Territory. So fully was he convinced of the necessity of vielding to this prejudice, that in enforcing his opinion in regard to it, he advised the missionaries not even to raise the foot to stop a barrel of flour that might be seen rolling into the lake. He would have them take with them laborers, but would not have the missionary touch his finger to anything like work. Providentially our brethren adopted a different policy, and the good results are already apparent in the increased cultivation of the soil by the Indians themselves.

The mission at Red Lake planted ground enough this year to raise all the corn and potatoes needed for their own use, and enough to sell to pay for the chopping of their wood, beside a plentiful supply of garden vegetables,

CASS LAKE STATION.

This station is but little more than two years old. The whole number of Indians under its influence is about 200. When the station was commenced in the spring of 1846, but four or five families planted their grounds. Nearly the whole of the band depended on the precarious supply of wild rice which they could gather from the swamps along the margin of the lake. Now, 25 or more families have their little fields of corn, potatoes, pumpkins, &c., and are anxious to extend their cultivation as fast as the brethren at the mission can assist them with their team in ploughing their lands. The temporal condition of this band is rapidly improving. During the present season the brethren of the mission have given aid to six of them in building houses for their families, and have already promised aid to a greater number who are anxious to build the next season. The school is well attended. Some children from every family are numbered among its members, although all are not regular in their attendance.

There have yet been no conversions at the Cass Lake station. A little church has been formed by the missionaries in their own house, but as yet it has received no accessions from the heathen. The missionaries say in regard to this: "When we came here two years since to commence operations we little expected such a length of time would elapse without our being permitted to rejoice over the subjects of converting grace. There is, however, no just cause for discouragement. Far, far otherwise. It becomes us rather to express the grateful feelings of our hearts in view of what God has already done for us. It is very observable that much has been accomplished toward preparing the minds of our people for the reception of the Gospel. We are also led more and more to remark how great is the work to be effected-to transform to a child of God, and an heir of Heaven, a heathen, ignorant, degraded, steeped in pollution, bound about with strong bands of prejudice, an abject slave to custom, and trained up from infancy in habits, both of mind and body, totally at variance with the genius of the gospel. Truly our hope alone is in the arm of the mighty God of Jacob."

Applications have been made to the members of this mission, by the band at Lake Winnipec, to establish a station among them. The brethren of the mission recommend to the Executive Committee a compliance with this request. They estimate the expense at not more than $600 per annum. This band have made frequent and earnest solicitations for teachers. They are of a peaceable disposition, and a mission there would possess some peculiar local advantages. It is supposed that its influence upon the labors of the missionaries at the other stations would be most salutary. Each band of the great tribe of Oilbwas, stands greatly in awe of every other. The instructed bands say-"We believe your doctrine is true, and we should embrace it as a band, were it not for our neighbors of other bands-they would ridicule us, and we can't stand that." The simultaneous educating of the children in a number of contiguous bands, would, it is hoped, be productive of the happiest results. An agent of the U.S. Government, although himself not a professing Christian, intercedes for this movement, and offers a contribution for its support. This gentleman has shown his interest in our missionaries by voluntarily raising a collection, and forwarding to them the sum of $50. He also forwarded to the Hon. Commisioner of Indian affairs at Washington a report of the labor performed by our brethren at these stations, with the hope of securing assistance to them from government in their efforts to benefit the temporal condition of the Indians.

The Ojibwa, or Chipeway Indians are a part of the Algonquin race, one of the two most powerful races on the continent. Their language is very extensively spoken, and by those best acquainted with it, is thought to be remarkably perfect, and euphonic. It has some striking analogies to the Hebrew, as in the incorporation of the pronoun in the inflection of the verb, and the peculiar sound of the Hebrew ayin. Our missionaries some of whom have obtained a knowledge of the language, are anxious to secure a good translation of the scriptures. The services of a skilful and christian interpreter, a half-breed, it is supposed can be secured for about $250 per annum. He feels himself to be a debtor to his people, and as much as in him is, he is ready to give them the gospel in their own language. He has independently commenced a translation, but feeling the need of a more accurate knowledge of the English language, he relinquished the attempt. If one of our missionaries could be relieved from his secular cares, and, with this interpreter, engage in the work of translation, much good would result.

SANDWICH ISLANDS MISSION.
One Station—Makawao, East Maui.
Missionaries.—Rev. J. S. Green and Mrs. Green.
J. Edes, Farmer. Total 3.

During the past year, we have received letters from Mr. Green, written after he had received official information of the existence of our Association in these letters he expresses his strong desire to be considered a missionary of our society. With this request the Committee have complied.

Mr. Edes, who sailed from Boston a short time befor the last annual meeting, has reached Makawao, and entered upon the duties of his station. The report of the Mission for the year has been received. The church at Makawao now numbers 539 members, most of whom, in the estimation of their pastors, are walking orderly, and giving cheering evidence that they are the children of God. The elders of the church are becoming increasingly cautious about bringing forward candidates for church membership. There is a large and flourishing Sabbath School in connection with the Mission. Many of the children, most of the teachers, and not a few adults of both sexes, are in the habit of reading the Bible through in course, yearly. The church observe the monthly concerts. Concerning this, the report says, "This season we have uniformly observed during the year. The church have prayed in sections, and on this, and also on the last Monday of the month, have labored as well as prayed for the benighted heathen, and slaves of the United States and other lands, who are kept heathen by the ranacity of wicked men. We have raised during the year some $40, besides cultivating the field of sugar cane which we planted last year, and which in good time, will enable us to increase our aid to the perishing. My people seem to delight in labors of love for their benighted, oppressed, dying fellow men."

"In regard to the progress of civilization," the report says, "the change for the better is constant, but quite slow. Our congregations all of them appear exceedingly decent in the article of clothing, and nearly all appear cleanly and decently attired on the Sabbath, while thus far, there is a Christian simplicity about their dress which is highly commendable. There is also an increasing desire to obtain conveniences about the house, and I see a change in this respect which is quite gratifying."

The church and congregation in Makawao have this year paid the missionary $220 in cash, beside contributing to him such things as they cultivate wheat, corn, oats, potatoes, kalo, bananas, &c.

Mr. Green has been entrusted by the Government with the sale of the lands at Makawao. About 1400 acres have been purchased by his people, nearly all of which will be paid for this year. 100 acres are reserved for the mission farm.

The attempt to make this mission a self sustaining one, is the first of the kind of which we have ever heard, and has been eminently successful. Books and stationery are almost the only things sent from this country to the mission during the last year—and the contributions of that people for the relief and education of the fugitive from American oppression have almost equalled the sum expended in this country for the benefit of this mission.

CANADA MISSIONS.

Until this year none of these missions, nor the missionaries have been under the control of any ecclesiastical body or missionary organization in this country. They are situated among the colored people scattered throughout the Province of Canada West, who are almost without an exception fugitives from the oppressions of slavery as it exists in the United States. Of this class there are supposed to be about 15,000 in the province. Having fled from a condition in which they could not be the legal possessors of property, and were by law prevented from learning to read, as may be supposed, they are for the most part ignorant, degraded, and poor. Many of them, however, are professors of religion, and in their flight have carried with them the prejudices or predilections of sect in all the strength sometimes manifested in the part of the country whence they have gone. This feeling is all the more strong, because of their inability to distinguish between the essentials and the accidents of religion. Every attempt made by their missionary teachers to overcome these prejudices has failed. At a meeting of the several missions held at Queen's Bush the 10th of July last, a statement was agreed on recommending that every mission now in Canada, or that may hereafter be established there, should be organized under some distinct evangelical denomination, or missionary association that would be pledged for its support and continuance. In this way they hope to secure the establishment of the missions on a permanent footing, with a guarantee for their continuance. This paper was signed by nearly all the missionaries and teachers in the province, several of whom have since applied to the Executive Committee of this society to be taken under our care. The Committee have not acted upon their application. Heretofore our Association has had no control over any of these missions, nor over the funds sent to them, except in those cases where money or clothing has been sent to us for "Canada Missions," without designating which, In general, none of the funds of the association have been sent to Canada, except such as have been contributed to this specific object. Most of that which has passed through our treasury has gone to Mr. and Mrs. Brooks, Rev. I. J. Rice, or Rev. Hiram Wilson, Smaller sums have been paid to others.

In consequence of the jealousy which the fugitive feels against the race of his oppressor, and which in some cases does not discriminate between friend and foe, all the missionaries have met with more or less opposition from those whom they would bless. The distribution of the clothing sent to them for the comfort of the fugitives and the benefit of their schools has been the occasion of much of this opposition, and a cause of constant anxiety, and trial to the missionaries. Exaggerated accounts of the amount of goods thus sent, have been industriously circulated by designing men, until persons long resident in Canada, who are placed beyond the necessity of such aid, have been induced to demand a share, believing or pretending to believe, that the missionaries have used thousand of dollars which of right should have been distributed among them. Committees have been formed to demand the goods of the M sionaries, and superintend their distribution. So much difficulty has arisen from this source that the belief has often been expressed that clothing thus sent has been productive of more evil than good. The Executive Committee would recommend that clothing designed for the fugitives should be sent to Rev. I. J. Rice, Amherstburg, where most of the fugitives land. With every box or barrel of clothing thus sent, money should invariably be furnished to Mr. Rice to pay the charges for freight, &c. When this is not done, he, altho' receiving no advantage from the goods, is taxed beyond his ability in his attempts to carry out the wishes of the donors.

Goods designed for the other stations should be such as the teachers can use to prepare the children for school, or as will contribute to their own comfort. In all cases, however, it is better to send them money than goods. This can be used to better advantage, and with less liability to create dissatisfaction.

Notwithstanding the opposition with which the missionaries thus meet, much good has been done, in giving comfort to the fugitive, educating the ignorant, and in the conversion of some souls. A large majority of the adults, and nearly all the children greet their teachers with a cordial welcome, and strive to make their work a pleasant one.

The Committee are sensible that the Canada Missions are in a dark field, one that does not for the present furnish many indications of promise, but, remembering that much of the evils there existing, take their rise from the wrongs heaped on the colored man by our own people, and remembering further that the greater the degradation the more the need of foreign aid, and that for such as these Christ died, the Executive Committee are constrained to plead yet more earnestly in their behalt, conscious that in doing so they are fulfilling the will of God.

CITY MISSIONARY-REV. C. B. RAY.

The Rev. C. B. Ray has continued to act as City Missionary, under the care of our society. His labors are directed towards the elevation and christian instruction of the destitute portion of our colored population in New York city. Most of his time is devoted to visiting the people in their houses and hunting the degraded and the outcast in their lurking places and in the streets. The results of such labor cannot now be told, as many of those whom he addresses once he may never see again.

In former years, while acting as city missionary, he had gathered a church, and sustained the relation of pastor to this church. His last annual report states that he had during the year preached 163 sermons, officiated at 28 funerals, gathered into the sabbath school about 30 scholars, and distributed 1600 pages of tracts. In connexion with his libors, there have been seven persons hopefully converted, some of whom have, as he trusts, already entered upon a blessed etrenity. Five members have been added to the church, two have died and one has been excommunicated. Mr. Ray has requested that a change may be given to the direction of his labors. To this request the Committee have acceded, and for the coming year he will concentrate more of his efforts upon the church, not however, neglecting to seek out the degraded and lost, as strength and opportunity may be given him.

SIAM MISSION - BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries.—Rev. J. Caswell, and wife. Rev. D. B. Bradley, M. D.

Dr. Bradley is now in this country.

This Mission has been adopted by the Ex. Com. since the last annual meeting of the society. The circumstances that led to its adoption were peculiar, and deserve a place in our annual report.

Early in January, Dr. Bradley in his own-behalf, and for Rev. Jesse Caswell, made application to the Executive Committee wishing to be taken under the patronage of the Am. Miss. Association, and continued in their missionary labors at Bangkok. Letters from the Prudential Committee of the A. B. C. F. M., commendatory of these brethren, and dismissing them from their connection with that Board, were laid before the Ex. Com. In these letters allusion was made to alleged "doctrinal error" held by these brethren, and the influence it had on the peace of "the mission" of the Board. In explanation of these passages, Dr. Bradley laid before the Committee the copy of a communication made by Mr. Caswell to the Prudential Committee of the American Board containing a statement of doctrine on the only point wherein he supposed himself to differ from the great body of the supporters of the Board—the Presbyterians and Orthodox Congregationalists of this country. All that is deemed objectionable is contained in the following articles.

"6. I believe and teach, that the provisions of grace are such as authorize the Christian to look to Christ, with the confident hope and expectation of receiving all the aid he needs to enable him to do all the will of God, or, in other words, to love God with all his heart, and his neighbor as himself.

"7. Consequently I do not, as some suppose, set aside the grace of Christ, or the doctrine of our constant dependance on that grace. Whatever available power to obey God we ever have, is a free gift of his grace.

"8. I believe that the aiswer to the 149th question in the "larger Catechism" which says "No mere man is able, either by himself, or by any grace received in this life, perfectly to keep the commands of God; but doth daily break them in thought, word, and deed," goes beyond what can be proved by the Bible.

"9. While I have not taught that any actually have attained, or will attain, in this life, to a state of entire and continued exemption from sin, I believe and teach that to affirm the converse of this proposition is going beyond what we have Scripture authority for doing."

Signed by J. CASWELL

With these views of Mr. Caswell, Dr. Bradley expressed his substantial agreement. Adding also, that since leaving Siam, a change had taken place in his used concerning the propriety of infant baptism, he being now in doubt on that point, while he had no hesitation as to the propriety of the different modes of Baptism employed by protestant christians.

It is due to Dr. Bradley to state, that he frankly informed the Executive Committee that his separation from the Am. Board was not from choice.—Although avowing for himself and Mr. Caswell a cordial agreement with us in the general principles set forth in our constitution, and the address of the convention at Albany, he yet had had no desire to be separated from the Board. Although in 1845 Mr. Caswell had avowed his opinion that the Prudential Committee might with propriety withdraw their support, yet at later dates both he and Dr. Bradley had earnestly protested against the propriety of such a course, and strongly remonstrated against its being taken. Dr. Bradley stated that he did not cease this remonstrance, and consent to ask a dissolution of his connection with the Board, except at the earnest request of the principal Secretary, and after his assurance that the dissolution of the connection must take place, either at the request of the missionaries, or by the independent action of the Committee.

After a deliberate consideration of the documents thus laid before them, the Ex. Committee believing that the kingdom of Siam presented an important field for missionary labor, and one that promised with the blessing of God, much success, and not regarding the peculiar views held by these brethren, as a disqualification for missionary service, as destroying their confidence in God, or excluding them from his favor, resolved to undertake this mission, and accept the services of Mr.Caswell, and Dr. Bradley.

Siam proper, at whose capital, Bangkok, the Mission is located, comprises about 160,000 square miles, embracing a population of between three and four millions of souls, who speak 12 different languages, and form as many different classes of people. Nearly two-thirds of these are Siamese, and a large portion of the remainder have a language varying so little from the Siamese, that it is believed that two or three weeks application will coable one speaking Siamese well, to preach to them.

The prevailing raligion of Siam is Buddhism, a system that acknowledges no Creator, teaching that all things came into existence and will be terminated, not by the intervention of any supernatural power, but by the operation of certain fixed laws, eternal in their duration, and universal in their control. It is probably the most powerful system of paganism extant. Three fourths of all the male population of Siam, from twelve years old and upward, and perhaps one-sixth of the female, are readers. In this, under God, lies the hope of the missionaries. The free circulation of Christian books and treatises on the arts and sciences is allowed. The desire to read these books is rapidly increasing, and already. under this influence, a large number of their books once deemed sacred, are now rejected. Their sacred writers having embodied instructions notoriously false, concerning Geography and Astronomy in their teachings, in such a manner that the rejection of the philosophical errors is fatal to the whole, books of science have as much, or more power, in uprooting their theological errors, as treatises on religion could. Not more than one-tenth of the writings once deemed sacred are now held as such. A powerful party is already formed among the priests who are becoming scientifically enlightened, and carrying their newly received light into the investigation of the claims of their sacred writings. The result cannot be doubtful. The question whether in the rejection of their sacred writings they will sink into infidelity, or embrace the truth, will be much affected by the light which they receive from the religious teachers sent from this

In the providence of God, the field has been opened to us, and two men long acquainted with that field, one of whom has a high reputation among them as a physician, have been given to us. Books which they have written are doing the preparatory work, and are creating a demand for more for those that wil not merely give them a glance at the outer temple, but will lead them into the holy of holies.

Mr. Caswell, shortly before the last letters we received were written, had made a large tour for the distribution of tracts, and was everywhere well received. To the tract distributor and the preacher, the field seems to be fully opened, and although few are yet constant in their inquiries after truth, yet may we not hope that in answer to prayer, God's blessing shall soon crown the labors of his servants with success, and a remnant of that people be truly converted to God.

It is greatly desirable that Dr. Bradley should return this fall or winter, taking with him at least one more mission family, and the means for supplying the demand for truth, so as to give them not the tract only, but the Bible.

To enable him to do this, from three to four thousand dollars should be appropriated this year for this mission.

HOME MISSIONS.

As the Ex. Com. have not known the wishes of the patrons of this Society, in relation to the extent in which they would have them engage in the work of Home Missions, they have not sought to increase the number of missionaries in their employment. During the whole, or a part of the year, aid has been extended to five brethern laboring in the Western States and territories viz.

Rev. O. Emerson, Iows,

- " W. W. Blanchard, Illinois,
- " J. H. Byrd, Michigan,
- " E. D. Seward, Wisconsin,
- " N. Miller.

The reports received from these missionaries this year, show that the blessing of God has rested on their labors. Through their agency some have in the jadgment of Christian charity, been truly converted, and others have been reclaimed from their wanderings who were members of churches in the N. E. and Middle States, before going West.

Under date of April 5, Mr. Blanchard reports the hopeful conversion of about fifty persons, and the reclaiming of many backsliders. Thirty had united with the churches under his care. In June, Mr. Blanchard reported that the work of God still continued. His congregations and Sabbath schools were increasing. The monthly concert is established in these churches and a collection for missions taken up.

Mr. Emerson reports several conversions in his congregations, and additions to two of the churches, but does not state definitely the number. One church has secured a house of worship, and another has commenced to build one. One church has been formed by him under circumstances that give him great hope of its future usefulness.

The reports of some of the other missionaries speak of conversions that have taken place under their labors but do not mention numbers. Mr. Byrd had labored in his own congregation with success, and had assisted other ministers in protracted meetings in their congregations, from which much good had resulted.

Applications for aid in this department of Abor have been more numerous this year than last. There is a rapidly increasing number of valuable men engaged in missionary labor who are becoming more and more dissatisfied with the action of the A. H. M. Society in relation to the sin of slavery, and a few who have been under the patronage of that Society have voluntarily relinquished its aid, and made application to us for assistance.

Among the reasons assigned by them for this step, are the following. 1. Slave holders are life members, and may become life directors of that Society. 2. By the Constitution and by-laws of the Society, the churches are its beneficiaries. and whatever may be the character or principles of the missionary he is expected to be in fellowship and in ecclesiastical connection, with the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches, in whose vicinity he is laboring. Consequently those who are laboring in the slave-holding States are expected to be in ecclesisstical connection with churches of slave-holders. The funds expended by the Society in these States are used in planting and sustaining churches, in which slave-holding, the making merchandize of men, is not a sufficient ground for exclusion from church priviliges; and those who participate in their practices, are, in fact, actually received as members in good standing in the Church of God. In thus gathering and sustaining slave-holding churches, the Society brings the whole weight of its reputation and influence to the support and perpetuation of slavery, by testifying in the most effective way possible, that slave-holding as it is practised by church members in the Southern States, is not incompatible with true christianity, with the religion of Christ.

3. The missionaries of the Society, wherever it is practicable, are expected to collect funds for the Society's treasury, and are thus made to assist in this slavery sustaining work. It is urged that whatever increase of power or reputation the Society may obtain in this way, or from the blessing of God upon the faithful labors of his servants commissioned by it, is used not intentionally by the Society, but nevertheless effectually, to give character, respectability and reputation of sanctity to slave-holding church members.

4. It is further uiged, that in this way churches of slave-holders have been built up by the fands and contributions of Northern men, many of whom are strongly opposed to slavery. In one year the Society report the planting of eleven such churches in the slave-holding States, and it is not known that one of them would exclude the slave-holder. Rev. J. G. Fee, of Kentucky, formerly a missionary of the A. H. M. Society has withdrawn from its patronage, collected a church of non-slave holders, and now applies for aid from this Association.

SLAVES' BIBLE FUND.

The Executive Committee have this year caused to be opened an account called the "Slaves' Bible Fund." They felt constrained to do this, having been informed by the American Bible Society, that that Society had no such fund. Their Board of Managers expressed themselves disposed to do all in their power to supply the slave with the Bible, yet they did not consider it expedient to receive such a fund. As money was sometimes sent to the Treasurer of our Society for this object, he was requested to open a separate account for it. The sums thus contributed are yet small, but we hope that as the effort is now commenced, the friends of the slave, the friends of Bible distribution, will contribute freely to this object, not ceasing their efforts until every slave in our land who can read the Bible, shall have one offered to him. The Ex. Com. believe that no effectual opposition will be made in Kentacky to a general distribution of the Bible among our brethren in bonds.

A donation of $150, has been pledged to our Society by one church in the city of New York to sustain a colporteur in the slave-holding states. An Elder in Mr. Fee's church is expected to enter immediately upon this labor, who will be charged with the distribution of Bibles, so far as it may be found practicable, to the slaves of Kentucky. We believe that this is the first systematic effort ever made to supply this class of our population with the Bible.

CONCLUSION.

In concluding their Second Annual Report, the Executive Committee would take occasion to express their continued and increasing conviction of the truth of the principles embraced in the Constitution of the Society and, in the Address of the Second Convention for Bible Missions held at Albany in the fall of 1846.

The experience of two years, and the observations of that time, have but strengthened their belief that in the work of missions, such instrumentalities, and such only should be used, as accord with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and with the teachings of Christ and his apostles. Every attempt hitherto made to reform corrupt churches, which has sought to obtain countenance for itself by fraternizing with their corruptions, has signally failed.

'The admission of caste, slaveholding, polygamy, and such like sins into churches gathered in Christian or heathen lands, as it is a violation of the rules of God's house, has been as might have been expected, productive only of evil.

The truth of this assertion is becoming to be generally acknowledged. The hope of overcoming sin allowed a place at the Altar and in the Sanctuary, by preaching the gospel so as to avoid a direct assault of it, is seen to be futile. The gospel thus preached, loses its power, sin becomes bold in its bearing, and exacting in its demands to be left unmeddled with, if not openly sustained, and in the end, obtains so strong a hold as only to be cast out by a violent disruption of cherished ties, and the excommunication of the wrong doer.

Some of the Mission Churches of India, after having long endeavored to eradicate the spirit of caste, while permitting its practice, have at length become convinced of the necessity of more consistent and direct efforts. As might have been expected, divisions have followed, resistance has been made and the first result has been the necessity of cutting off from the churches more than seventy of their members, thirty-eight of whom had been thought worthy to give instruction in the truths of the Gospel. The effect upon the schools has been even more marked in the numbers that have at once separated themselves from the instructions of the missionaries. The work of purification is however commenced, and will, we hope, be carried forward.

What is true in relation to the admission of caste, is also true of slaveholding. The admission of slaveholders into Mission Churches has greatly disturbed the harmony of missionary organizations, and we fear that a return to correct action in these missions, if it ever comes, will be at the expense of as much division as has followed the casting out of the sin of caste.

The Committee would congratulate the Society that the Secretaries of the A. B.

C. F. M. are now beginning to advise their missionaries that slaveholding should be considered prima facic evidence of sin,—of unfitness for church privileges—and although the Board as yet decline endorsing this instruction by direct vote, there is some prospect that that body will before long relieve itself from the responsibility of building slaveholding churches by preaching a gospel sanctioning slavery, and that their Secretaries may yet be led to act on the assumption that slaveholding in practice, or sustaining it by admission to the church is at least as grievous a heresy as the believing and teaching that the humble Christian who earnestly desires to do his Savior's will may confidently look to him for all needed aid to sustain the burdens which He Himself has laid upon him.

The experience of our own missions, has demonstrated the fact that the missionary of the cross relying solely on the protection of God, may faithfully bear testimony against the most popular sins, even when this course may run most directly across the passions and prejudices of men.

A gospel of love even to enemies, may be preached to kings engaged in war, a gospel of equal rights and brotherly love, an anti-slavery gospel, to governments sustaining oppression, or enriching themselves by slave-trading, and if done from the fulness of a heart imbued with the gospel spirit, such a course will win the highest respect even of barbarians.

The doings of our Association for the past year are on the records of eternity. The Executive Committee have rendered to you their report of the manner in which they have discharged the duties with which you have entrusted them. At another day, not only the members of the Executive Committee, but every member of this Society, every member of the human family, will be called upon to render an account for the manner in which they have discharged the trusts reposed in them.

Since our last Annual Report, thirty millions of those for whom Christ died have passed to their final account. Before another year shall close, thirty millions more will have followed them. Some of these are doubtless among those who now in Africa, in the West Indies, in Siam, in the Indian Territories, and in our own land, are looking to our Society for the Gospel. Upon our friends will it depend, whether the ability to give them that Gospel shall be furnished to the Executive Committee. Happy will every one be of whom it may be said-concerning this matter, "He hath done what he could."

COMPARISON OF HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

We wish to invite special attention to the following article on the comparative importance of Home and Foreign Missions. It was read at our late annual meeting by Rev. J. T. Dickinson late of Singapore, during the discussion of the resolutions relating to Home Missions. It is an able paper, and will afford much food for profitable thought even to those who do not fully embrace the ideas presented in it.

Most missionary societies, with whatever views they may have commenced, have, in the progress of their operations, proceeded more and more upon the idea that Money is the great means of human improvement. Their aim is to get a certain number of tens or hundreds of thousands, the rest being supposed to be comparatively easy. Hence, such fields are entered as are most "interesting" to the readers of missionary news, and are cultivated in such ways as will afford the largest amount of stimulating intelligence, draw forth the most sympathy, and increase to the utmost the amount of funds. Those missions which are most productive in the great staple-missionary intelligence suitable for monthly concerts-are most fostered, while other missions which afford little or nothing in this way, are given up. The obstacles to missionary success, when presented to the religious public, are so presented as not to discourage. Great care is taken in selecting and arranging missionary intelligence that it may produce the most happy effect. The art of presenting such intelligence in the most effective way, is held to be a very important and useful art, all turning upon the principle of interesting, stimulating, encouraging the churches. I would not say that there is not a certain modicum of wisdom in this method of proceeding, but I am sure there is still more of mistake. I say mistake, for motives are not called in question. Missionary societies, it is true, consider other things besides money as necessary to the accomplishment of their object; their error lies in over-rating the comparative importance of money. Put into their treasuries money enough and they think they could before very long make China as good as England or New-England .- Great mistake! opening the way to other miatakes!

There are greater questions for the friends of missions to consider than the question of money. When, where, how, on what principles to work, are greater questions. I know it is difficult to raise ten thousand dollars for missionary purposes, but it is still more difficult to expend your ten thousand wisely. If the funds of all our missionary societies had been expended wisely for these last forty years, we should not now be looking with consternation to the probability of seeing slavery a controlling element in that empire of states so soon to rise up on the abores of the Pacific.

It becomes us to look thoughtfully about us and study the ways of Providence that we may see where God is working and building up, that we may work and build with him. Such races as the North American Indians, the Dyaks of Borneo, the Alfoors of Celebes, seem to be dying out. Fragments of these races may be preserved and incorporated into the stronger races, but at the best we must labor for these races with faint hope. It may not be wise to abandon the missions established among them, but in establishing new missions, Oregon, California, New-Holland, New-Zealand, the West Indies, Canada, Wisconsin, and all our new states, with other similar fields where great nations are growing up, are much more promising. There is strength enough in England and America to cultivate these fields and China besides. But if there were not, then Chiua should wait, for the Chinese will be but little changed in the next fifty years, whatever influences good or bad are exerted upon them, but the destiny of Oregon and most of the other countries in similar circumstances, will be so far determined in fifty years as to be, in a great measure, beyond the reach of your moulding influence.-Let the primary duty, then, be done first, the secondary next. Oregon has higher claims than China.

In order to success in any enterprise we must work with Providence, not against it. Working against Providence may be thus illustrated. Rome is the capital of the Christian world, and exerts vast influence upon the world. Yet Rume is corrupt and needs reform. Why then do you not send missionaries there? Because you think your missionaries could not work there to advantage, or because you think it best to let Rome reform itself. South Carolina boasts of its high attainments in Christianity, in politics, in morsls, in most things good and desirable. It claims to have a better understanding of the gospel than you have. Its gospel sanctions slavery. In your view the gospel of Carolina is worse than the gospel of Rome, and the land of Calhonn is as truly a missionary field as the land of Confucius. Why then do you not immediately send missionaries to South Carolina? Because you think the door not yet open.

Now if you were to send missionaries to Rome and Carolina, and if those countries were as far removed from your observation as most foreign missions are, so that you were obliged to get most of your knowledge of them from the letters of your missionaries, and if those missionaries should send you very interesting and encouraging letters, you would come to regard Rome and Carolina as very inviting missionary fields. As the traveller who writes from Asis interests you more than the traveller who writes from Wisconsin or Canada, so the Foreign Missionary interests you more than the Home Missionary. As a traveller he ought to interest you more than the Home Missionary. It does not follow from the fact that the Foreign Missionary Herald is and must be more interesting than the Home Missionary Magazine, that therefore your primary duty is Foreign Missions, and Home Missions your secondary. Is it not time, then, to inquire whether we do right in giving so large a proportion of our prayers and money, and nearly all our esthusiasm to the Foreign Missionary, while the Home Missionary has little but his stinted support, his fever and ague, and our neglect? After ten years of careful enquiry and reflection, after having visited many missionary sations and conversed with source of Foreign Missionaries, I feel compelled to give it as my deliberate opinion that there are few missionary estations in Asia are doing good. Place a good miss anywhere and he will do good. What I mean is that many of our Foreign Missionaries might do as much good in Rome or Carolins, and more good in some of our new States and territories.

Within two centuries there will be a population in North America speaking our language greater than the whole present population of the globe. This is not prediction any more than it is prediction to say that the sam will rise and set for two centuries. It is sober truth admitted as such by all who have studied the subject. This American population is not more certain to be vast than it is to be active and energetic, for good or for evil. Here all the elements of civilization, all the forces of human development, will be at work. Here and in Europe is to be settled the destiny of the human race. If this American Empire or cluster of Empires shall come safely out of the probation to which it is to be subjected, then all is safe—Chies, Indis, the World. But should this experiment through our mistakes and unlaithfulness fail, which God forbid, will it matter much what missions in Asia we planted or failed to plant? Not that Asia is unimportant or to be neglected. Far otherwise. Its destiny is great but distant, as we count distance; America first, then Asia. Something we may do for Asia now, but it must be on a limited scale—a little seed sown here and there in carefully selected spots. Nothing is more certain than that for a century to come America rather than Asia should be the great missionary field. Taking into account the diminished term of missionary life in Asia as compared with the term of life in America, and the years spent in learning languages before much can be even America, and the years spent in learning ianguages before much can be even attempted, and than the greater expense in every way, it is no exaggeration to say that one missionary in Asia will cost as much as six or eight in America, while the American field of usefulness, whether regard be had to present or remote results, is such more promising than the Asiatic. In this age of Reform and improvement, of Rail-roads, Magnetic Telegraphs, Ocean Steamers, Leverrier Planeis, this age when Popes turn Reformers and despots abolish slavery and favor democracy, when all the world is yearning for progress and stretching forth its hands to the Foture, we look with surprise upon the Pusevites who labor to bring us back to the Middle Ages and would light us in the way to Heaven by wax tapers! But is it not almost as surprising to see intelligent, Christian men, devoting all their enthusiasm to the promotion of missions in Asia, while they turn their backs upon the most promising missionary fields the world ever saw, and not only so, but by their supineness, allow an atrocious system to extend its heathenizing influences over the half of Mextoo and ultimately perhaps over the whole—a system whose very nature it is, in the elegant words of Mr. Mann, "to necessitate ignorance, to legalize it, to enforce it, to make it eternal." Surely this is giving attention to the mote in the Asiatic eye, while we neglect the beam in our own Americans. can eve.

We have heard much of Juggernaut, and what we have heard is true. In all Asia there is not a more dreadful thing than the car of Juggernaut. But we need not take a four months' voyage round the Cape of Good Hope to see Juggernaut. In our own country, within a distance of 60 or 60 hours, you may find many Juggernauts, and of the worst kind, in the shape of slave suctions and slave-breeding estates—where human hearts are crushed; the fires of intellect extinguished; superstition, cowardice, meanness cultivated systematically as valuable products to be sold in the market, thus to furnish the means of supporting the few in idleness and luxery at the expense of tears, groans, blood to the many. And these American Juggernauts are increasing and will continue to increase unless you conduct your missions on better plans and principles. I do not ask you to forget the Juggernaut of Asia, but I do sak you to remember the thousand Juggernaut of America.—In conducting missions let us not suppose that we can Christianize others while we heathenize ourselves. Let not the traditions of the Elders, supported by popular prejudice, blind our eyes, or lead us to delegate the duty of thinking on this subject to a few committees. But giving heed to the voice of common sense and plain duty, let us inquire, not what missions will be most popular, most in accordance with received opinions, most likely to draw large contributions; but what missions are most in accordance with the spirit of the gespel and the indications of Providence, most likely to help forward the general march of mankind, most needed now, best fitted to secure auxiliaries in all the means and elements of civilization and progress.

SCRIPTURAL MISSIONS.

ASERMON

PREACHED BY THE REV. G. W. PERKINS

AT TH

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION,

SCRIPTURAL MISSIONS.

Mark, 16: 15 .- Preach the Gospel.

This command is very explicit. The duty required in it is obvious. The precise thing to be done, also, and the mode of doing it, seem plain. One might expect the most entire agreement of opinion as to the duty and work of one who is to preach the Gospel to the unevangelized. Yet there have been serious differences of judgment in the matter, both among the friends of missions, and the actual laborers in the work.

Once it was a question whether civilization ought not to precede Christianity:—or at least whether the two were not so mutually dependent, that the missionary abould bestow on each, equal time and strength. Some held up to derision the hope of converting the savage till he had learned something of the education and conventionalities of civilized life:—others merely doubted the practicability of the attempt. Again, it has been matter of earnest debate, what place schools should occupy in the missionaries' plans and work: some insisting on the conversion of the adult mind, as the great, if not exclusive result at which the preacher was to aim:—others claiming that children and schools opened a far more hopeful field of exertion, and should receive pre-emipently the missionaries' time and strength.

But the gravest question which has yet arisen—one indeed of vital importance to the whole work of missions—has but just come up prominently for discussion. It relates to the contract to be pursued by the missionaries towards national and social wrongs and sins:—or according to the recent nomenclature—Organic sins. It is contended that the practice of these sins is not incompatible with credible evidence of piety:—that therefore converts with such evidence may be admitted to the Church while living in such sins—and that the missionary is not to expose, condemn and treat such sins as he does other kinds of sin:—but is to leave them to rot down under the silent influence or "working" of the Gospel. On this basis, and according to this mode of procedure are conducted a large proportion of the Protestant and Roman Catholic missions of the present day.

It is well known that the Society at whose anniversary we have convened to-day, takes a different position:—regards these organic sins as among the most formidable evils which Christianity is commissioned to destroy:—believes that individual participation in these sins should be met by the same exposure, remonstrance and condemnation, as the practice of other vices:—that perseverance in them after remonstrance, should be a bar to admission into the church: and that such a course is essential to the introduction and development of a pure and efficient Christianity among heathen nations. The great importance of the question therefore will justify if not demand its. discussion on the present occasion. For we think that the practical question to be decided is—shall there be infused into the veins of the infant church in heathen lands, the old, tainted, corrupt blood of sin and superstition, as if heathenism itself were its father, and premature age and corruption were to be its doom?—Or shall it commence its existence in heathen lands with the life blood of heaven's truth within it, the guarantee of future vigor, growth and purity?

1st. The course which we as a society adopt, is conformed to the spirit of · the Gospel. By this I mean, that irrespective of any particular texts or facts of the Bible, one would naturally infer, from the very nature of the Gospel itself, that it would alike and impartially oppose all kinds of sin. For Christianity, as all must agree, is a holy religion-as such, it and sin must ever be antagonistic. Indeed, we, as the friends of Christianity, claim for it this pre-eminent distinction and superiority among all the religions of the earth; and found thereon the argument for the internal evidence of its divine origin, that it is opposed to all sin; whereas other systems of religion have sanctioned or allowed favorite or profitable forms of transgression. The God whom Christianity reveals is characterized as diverse from all other gods, so called, by the fact, often and most emphatically declared, that he is a HOLY God. On that ground he places his claims to our love and obedience. The people whom Christianity embodies into the Church state are expressly termed a "holy people" "holy ques" [saints]. The very object of the great central and stupendous fact of Christianity, the death of Christ, was that he might sanctify [make holy] auto himself, a peculiar people (thus marked and distinguished by the fact of being a holy people).

Christianity then comes into the world as a mighty antagonistic element to the principles and ungodiness of the world. It is as if a mountain or continent of fire were cast down into the ocean. The shock throws up the waves with great commotion and steam, ecciling from the heat—then ugain they roll back and dash up on the mount of fire to extinguish it, but again are thrown off, boiling and struggling. Thus there will be a deadly conflict for mastery, and there will be no quiet, till the mountain has driven off and evaporated the waters, and stands alone, giving light and heat, or till the waters have overpowered the fire, and sluggishly roll round and over the dead and blackened mass.

Now when the teacher of such a religion addresses a heathen audience, what course might be naturally be expected to pursue? Instead of warring against sin, is he to form a solema-league and covenant with the worst and strongest sins? Strain out a gnat and swallow a came!? Introduce into the church those sins which have made even heathenism an abborring to all flesh? Should he open the doors into a circle of holy people, not merely for imperfect men, but for those whom he knows to be in the habit of sin—outward and voluntary sin? Should the ambassador of a holy God, whose very business it is to call men to repentance for sin, allow those very sins which by their enormity and prevalence have become organic, to go untouched and unrebuked? Are we to introduce the Cansanites and Philistines among a people whom God would keep holy, and almost literally to make the temple a den of thieves? Is such a course in keeping with the holy religion of a holy God, and calculated to train up a holy people?

Decidedly not, as we think. It seems to us far more consonant with th spirit of such a religion, that its expounders should kindly but faithfully develope its antagonism to all sin, and specially to those prevalent and organic sins, to which heathen are most blind—that all sin should be exposed and condemned; and that when the sinner is admitted among those who are distinctively a holy people, he should be required to forsake his sins. We do not see how the design of the Author of such a religion can be otherwise promoted.

It is therefore with no small astonishment we hear the principle advanced, that the missionary in dealing with the more enormous and prevalent sins found in heathen countries,—the fruitful and revolting parents of a progeny like themselves,—such as slavery, polygamy, caste, governmental oppression—is not directly to assail them; that men still living in one or all of these sins may be admitted into the church of a holy God. One would think that no better plan could be devised for paralyzing the moral power of that religion, or for perpetuating sin in the world. We thereby cast up a highway for all abominations to travel into the church upon.

2nd. The course we advocate is that pursued by prophets and apostles. If we were astonished at hearing men deliberately arguing that slaveholders and polygamists, the adherents of caste and governmental wrongs, might be admitted to the church; we were still more surprised to hear it claimed that the inspired messengers of God, and the original expounders of Christianity, both taught and practised in like manner. Nay, we were told in still stronger terms, that "it is God's method of procedure" to deal differently with organic sins and individual sins; and that Christ and his apostles did likewise. The whole Bible is raked over, that out of the mass of misdeeds there put down for our warning, may be reared a bulwark for the defence of sin in the church. I am persuaded that men practice a deception on themselves when they speak so much of "God's method of procedure," and declare that uncompromising opposition to all sin, and the attempt to exclude organic sin from the church, is contrary to that method, and is a reflection on his wisdom. I will therefore examine it at some length.

What is meant by this high-sounding phrase, "God's method of procedure "? Do you mean by it the mere fact that great corruptions and organic sins have been admitted to the church? Do you ascribe all which actually takes place in the church or in the world-all which God as matter of fact does not prevent-to God's method of procedure in such a sense that we are to imitate it? Then all idolatry and all sin, in the church and out of it, can be defended. As matter of fact under the divine method of procedure, it has come to pass that the greater part of the world has been given over to idolatry, and the greater part of the nominal church to corruption. It has been the "method of God's procedure" to allow this. Are we then deliberately and of set purpose to introduce corruption and sin into the church, or even to allow them a place there when we can exclude them? Most certainly, if we follow "God's method of procedure," for God has not excluded them when he had power to do it. "But that is not what we mean. By the phrase "God's method of procedure," we do not mean what man criminally does, and God in his providence allows :- but we mean that which God actually does." Well, we accept the statement, and will proceed to inquire what has been God's method of procedure with that class of social and governmental wrongs called "organic sins." That has been almost invariably to inflict terrible national judgments. What, for instance, for we have not time to examine each case in detail, was God's method of procedure with the Egyptians for slaveholding? A method of wrath and desolation. Plague, fire and death;—judgment after judgment—scourge after scourge, in awful numbers and rapidity, were rained down in storms of indignation on their heads. For the combined organic sin of an attempted recapture of the fugitives, was reserved the final overthrow and destruction in the Red Soa.

Why should I speak of Judah, Israel and Edom, of Babylon, Damascus and Tyre—of Syria and Moab, on whom in like manner for their organic sins were poured out storms of wrath? Sometimes the bottomless pit was opened to let out clouds of locusts to plague and devour—sometimes inundations of war, soaking the land in blood, were sent upon them—some of their cities trampled and desolate, with a population abject and down-trodden to this day, remain as fearful testimonials of "God's method of procedure." Organic sins, if we may believe the stern and oft-repeated rebukes and warnings of the prophets, were the ground of this procedure.

Is that to be our method? Are we to copy God's method of procedure? And as we cannot actually wield the elements, nor command the locusts, famine and pestilence to do our work, are we to imitate these scourges as best we may, and send among the heathen, soldiers and cannon, as curses most nearly resembling the locusts and lightning wherewith God doomed and destroyed organic sinners of old? That unquestionably we are bound to do, if we really mean any thing by this vaunted adherence to "God's method of procedure" in dealing with governmental and organic sins. Instead of admitting such transgressors into the church, we are to secure and hasten their awful destruction, for God did so.

"Oh, but this is a mere caricature; we do not mean of course that we should assume God's prerogative and curse and destroy men." Pray what is meant then by the phrase "God's method of procedure," which we are bound to imitate? "Why, we mean the course which the old prophets took under the divine direction." Very well; we are willing to accept this new explanation, and will inquire of the prophets how they dealt with organic sins. I find them rebuking and threatening the nations they addressed, for "carrying away captives," for "delivering up the captivity to Edom"-for "pursuing his brother with the sword," [war,] for "oppressing the poor, and grushing the needy,"-for treading on the poor, turning uside the poor from right [governmental wrongs,] for "oppressing my people"-" for the fierceness of oppression." In express terms they require their hearers to "let the oppressed GO FREE," as the indispensable condition of forgiveness -declare that God will be a swift witness against those who oppress-peremptorily require them to "relieve the oppressed." Individuals are loaded with rebuke for participating in these organic sins-are called upon to repent of "oppression," and individual forgiveness, promised only on condition that is "he do not oppress."

If then the procedure of the prophets is "God's method of procedure," we know that they attacked all sins—sins of rulers and sins of people—national sins and individual sins; rebuked kings and all in authority to their face for official and governmental wrongs; and demanded immediate repentance for any participation in the organic sins of those days. The writings of the prophets are but one mass of evidence on this point. So that if our missionaries are to follow "God's method of procedure" in this sense, they are to assail all sins, political, organic, social, governmental, or under whatever other name they may seek a hiding-place,—with a fidelity, publicity and sternness which since their day has had no parallel. The "sapping and mining process" finds no type or resemblance in the frank and stern old prophets.

"Yes, but we live in Gospel times, and our modes of procedure in preaching that Gospel and organizing the church, are not to be regulated by the old modes of procedure under the law. We mean of course, by what we have said, only to adduce Christ's mode of procedure as the model upon which our missionaries should form themselves." This change of position is not very fair or logical, but we will accept this explanation of the phrase, and examine it.

What then was "Christ's mode of procedure?" Why, he admitted; or rather selected into the number of his disciples, a Judas—knowing him to be a Judas, and knowing all his black-heartedness and guilt. He retained him in this selected band, while aware of the thefts he was perpetrating on their scanty treasury, and of the treason he was plotting. That was Christ's method of procedure. What is still more remarkable, he did not admit into that band of disciples a solitary individual who was implicated in the social and organic sins of that day; even Levi the tax-gatherer, whose business might seem to be connected with the organic sin of governmental oppression—was not allowed to form one of the band, until he had "left all" [abandoned the business.]

Now whoever appeals to "Christ's method of procedure" as the authoritative standard—as making it obligatory on us to do what he did, and as he did, must be held strictly to that appeal. He must not arbitrarily pick out one of Christ's acts, which he thinks to favor his own notions, and as arbitrarily refuse to imitate Christ when he thinks it expedient. If the mere fact of Christ's mode of procedure is to regulate our mode of procedure, then let us apply it on all sides. Of course then the missionary is to admit into his charch, members who are guilty of individual sins; nay, is actually to select such, or some such at least, knewing them to be in the habitual practice of vice and theft, and to be plotting even worse crimes than these. Nay, he is bound to do this, for Christ did it.

The true force of the argument will appear if we suppose that Christ had thus selected organic sins: if John had been a slaveholder; or if Peter had been a polygamist when chosen; or if they had entered on these organic sins after following Christ, and had yet been retained in their position. How strongly then would it have been claimed that these sins were regarded with partiality by Christ, and that he thereby most evidently designed to perpetuate them in the church in all ages; what outcries of blasphemy, and "reflections, on Christ" would have arisen from all quarters against the man who should attempt to shut a slaveholder from the church, when Christ had selected a slaveholder as one of the twelve.

*That Christ did not do; but he did select a man whom he knew to be a bad man; retained him after he knew him to be a thief and a traitor. If Christ made any difference between sin and organic sin, it was against organic sin, treating it worse than other sin. Then you are bound to select and retain men like Judas in the church.

Do you start back from so revolting a conclusion? Well you may. But you give up the argument drawn from "Christ's method of procedure." For if you refuse to receive and retain thieves in the church, knowing them to be such, though Christ did, you take this ground, that "Christ's mode of procedure" is not to be followed in all cases; that the bare fact that Christ took a certain course, is not of course proof that we should do just as he did; that we are to look at the nature of the act, the principles involved, and the circumstances of the case, ere we can decide that Christ's mode of procedure is to be our mode of procedure. So that even if Christ had selected a slaveholder or a polygamist as one of his twelve disciples, we should have been justified in rejecting such sinners from the church now, on precisely the same grounds that we now reject thieves from the church, though Christ did select one such as one of the twelve.

"Oh! but by 'Christ's method of procedure,' we do not allude to the mode of selecting his disciples, but to his preaching. In that work he did not treat social and organic sins as he did individual sins,"

The only apparent plausibility of this statement lies in the fact, that the social and organic sins with which Christ came into contact, were different from those which are under discussion in our times. In Judea and among the Jews, polygamy was then almost unknown; slavery had no existence among the Jews in Judea at that time. The number of slaves held by the few foreigners then residing in that country was too small to constitute an organic or national sin. Christ came to the Jews, and spent his time chiefly among them. The mere fact, therefore, that he did not attack polygamy and slavery by name, no more proves that he regarded those sins differently from other sins, or designed that we should treat them differently when we come into contact with them, than the similar fact that he said nothing of gambling or cannibalism, proves that we should not attack them, when we come into contact with them. Neither cannibalism nor slavery were the organic sins of Judea, and were both treated alike in this respect, that they were not by name condemned.

But how did Christ treat the organic sins with which he did come in contact? They were the very sins which he most energetically assailed. The whole round of Pharisaic usurpations and traditions, bound up with the social habits, the affections and prejudices of the Jews, us firmly as caste or slavery in any nation of our day; the oppressive claims and exactions of the Pharisees, constituting the governmental wrongs of the Jews; the proud and bitter hatred of the Jew against the Gentile, united with a contemptuous refusal of all social intercourse, constituting the sin and pride of caste—on these, the organic sins of that day, he threw himself in deadly battle; and indeed it was what would be called "imprudence" or "fanaticism" in doing so, which caused his death. Even the affectionate Saviour rose to the vehemence of "woes" and "damnation" when preaching against organic sins, for he spoke against the governmental and official sin of binding on men's shoulders heavy burdens, as well as individual sins, when he said, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell." Christ's mode of procedure, then, would certainly authorize the missionary to go and do likewise.

"But you are to understand by 'God's method of procedure,' the course pursued by the Apostles, who were inspired of God. In their preaching, and in the organization of churches, they did not treat social and organicains, as they did sins of a private and individual nature."

Let us see then. If there is any sin which can be properly called an organic sin, it is idolatry. For what constitutes an organic sin? How does it differ from other sins? Is that an organic sin which is sustained by law? Idolatry was so sustained. Is that an organic sin which is interwoven with judicial and governmental proceedings? Idolatry formed a part of the proceedings of every court of justice, of the sessions of the senate, and of the movements of the army. Or is it the characteristic feature of an organic sin, that it is interwoven with the social intercourse between man and man? Idolatry took place at every dinner table, in every shop, and idols were placed in almost every room of every house. Does a sin rise to the dignity and privilege of organic, when non-conformity is punishable by law? Idolatry was enforced by law: thousands were executed because they would not worship idols. Or are those only organic sins from which one cannot without difficulty extricate himself? The converted heathen could only extricate himself from idolatry at the risk of losing character, friends, business, and even life. In short, if you will put your finger on any traits which distinguish organic sins from other sins, you will find each and all of them in idolatry. It is pre-eminently an organic sin.

What course did the Apostles pursue? Leave it to rot down of itself? Abandon it to that vague process called "working out the principles of the Gospel"? Receive it into the church, in order that men might be "led to renounce" idolatry? By no means. They assailed this old red dragon: they denounced it; and scorning his fiery rage, called on men peremptorily to abandon it; they barred up the doors of the church against it; they endured persecution, and hazarded life in opposing it. Yet in the face of facts fike these, grave men tell us that the apostles did not treat organic sins like other sins!

"But each act of idolatry by any individual was an individual act, and not therefore an organic sin." True, but so is each act of slaveholding an individual act; and so is each act of polygamy an individual act; therefore they are not organic sins.

"Oh, but there were certain kinds of organic sins which the apostles treated differently; such as polygamy and slavery." Well, if that is the ground you take, you abandon the argument from organic sins; for now it is not the mere fact of being an organic sin which exempts it from the usual dealing proper for all sins, but it is something else—something in its nature. The question therefore would be, not whether missionaries are to treat organic sins, generally, differently from other sins, but whether polygamy and slavery are to be treated differently from other sins. Let us then examine this one specification, that the apostles treated slavery differently from other sins.

By this position must be meant one of two things—either (a) that the apostles did not in express words assail and condemn slavery, as they idid other sins, or (b) that they did not condemn the principles and acts which constitute or support slavery. Let us examine these points.

(a) Did the apostles in express words, condemn slavery? The word in 1 Tim. 1: 10 translated manstealer, is the appropriate Greek word, corresponding to our word slaveholder—it means "one who retains men in slavery." Such was the declaration of the General Assembly; and the best lexicons give that as one of the definitions. The proof is beyond question. The apostle therefore did condemn the slaveholder, ranking him among the vilest criminals.

But for the sake of argument, allow that the apostle in express words did not assail slavery. What then? What does the argument amount to? Why it amounts to this: that sins which the apostles in express words did not assail, we are not to assail. That is the idea if there is any idea at all in the argument. But the apostles did not in express words mention or assail gambling, forgery, Sabbath-breaking, arson, rape, dancing, theatre-going, cannibalism, piracy, and a host of other sins. Therefore we are not to assail them; our missionaries are not to assail them: nay, more, we are to admit them into the church, "that men may be led to renounce them." The argument most come to that if it really means any thing.

Do you start back from such a revolting conclusion? Well you may. But if you adopt the argument you must be held to the argument, and to its consequences, and not be allowed to use it for yourself, and deny its validity when applied to other cases. If the fact that the apostles did not in express words assail one sin, is proof that we should not assail that sin; then it is proof that all the sins which the spostles did not in express words assail, are not to be assailed by us. Or on the other band, if for reasons drawn from the nature of the case, you assail gambling, furgery, piracy and other sins, though the apostles did not, then we have the same right to assail slavery, though Christ did not. If you deviate from Paul's example in relation to an individual sin, we may deviate from his example in relation to an organic sin. Thus is this whole famous argument, dressed out in the imposing phrases "God's method of procedure," and "organic sins," reduced to a mere logomachy—a mere question whether the apostles used a technical word!

(b) Or is it meant, when it is said that the apostles did not directly attack slavery, that they did not assail and condemn the principles or acts which support or constitute slavery?

Let us examine. Is not deprivation of wages an ingredient of slavery? What woes and curses are uttered against that sin, both in the Old Testa ment and in the New! James 5: 1—5, Jer. 22: 13, Mal. 3: 5. And shall we say that the apostles denounced in burning language the sin of keeping back wages; but when there was added to that sin the far greater wrong of holding the laborer as property, then the apostles cessed their rebukes, and took the offender into the church! Yet to that depth of absurdity must those go, who maintain that the apostles treated slavery differently from other sins. Did not the apostles condemn oppression? But is not slavery one form of oppression, and the worst form of oppression? Is it not a miserable quibble then to assert that the apostles did not assail slavery, because that word is not used, when they did assail the thing which constitutes slavery?

"Well, but the apostles did not require emancipation." True, the cord emancipation is not found in the New Testament. But a great many of our words, now significant of doctrines and duties, are not found in the Bible. The word piety is not found in the Bible. Is the thing meant by that word not required in the Bible? The phrase prayer-meeting is not found in the Bible. Is that proof that the thing is not useful and obligatory? The phrase effectual calling is not used by the apostles; did they not therefore teach the truth contained in those words? The command "give yourself to Christ," is not found in Scripture. Did not the apostles require the duty described by those words? In short, of all our modern religious phrases, descriptive of doctrine and duty, but few are found in the Bible. Of the Westminster Catechism, of the thirty-nine articles, one can find but here and there a word taken from the Scriptures.

Yet it is perfectly obvious that the truths and duties taught by our modern terms, are taught in the Bible. The man who on any other subject than slavery, should gravely argue against a truth or duty, because the exact word which we use now, is not found in our translation of the Scriptures, would be considered absolutely mad. Yet grave men are found who argue in that manner about slavery and emancipation; and we cannot treat with any respect such miserable sophistry and quibbling.

Now we do find in the Bible an express requirement to "let the oppressed go free." (Isa. 58: 6.) To this Bible, and of course to this requirement as the divine command, the apostles directed their converts. Did not the apostles mean to urge on their converts all which the Bible required? If the Bible then commands men in any part of it to "let the oppressed go free," then we know that the apostles did teach that same doctrine. The Old Testament commands men to keep the Sabbath;—therefore we have a right to say that the apostles, who took the Bible as their guide, taught the same duty. The apostles then did command men to "let the oppressed go free." Is not that a command to emancipate?

Moreover, the spostles commanded masters to give to their slaves justice and equality, (Col. 4: 1.) [This is the true rendering, as a simple reference to the Greek will show. The original words are abstract expressions which convey a far stronger meaning than our comparatively tame adjectives, just and equal.] But what is justice, or giving "that which is just?" Keeping him as a slave ? holding him as a piece of property? compelling him to work without wages? What is equality? Reducing a human being to the legal condition of a thing? Depriving him of all right to education, right to his wife, to his children, to himself? In no possible sense of the words, justice and equality, can the slaveholder give to the slave justice and equality, and retain him in that most degraded of all human conditions, a slave—a condition from which every human being revolts until he has lost his manhood.—

We maintain then that the command to the slaveholder to give justice and equality to his slaves, is a command to do the thing meant by emancipation.

"But the apostles admitted slaveholders to the church." We know this assertion is often made, but the proof when examined is found to be scanty indeed. The prima facie evidence is all against it. If the Gospel is holy, if the Church was designed to be holy, if slavery is such an evil as nearly all men assert, if slavery is "atterly inconsistent with the law of God," as the General Assembly declare, if it is "founded in unrighteousness," as the American Board maintain, if it is the "sum of all villainies," as Wesley said; then certainly it is prima facis probable that the apostles did not admit such as in into the church, and we have a right to demand the most clear and irrefragable proof. What is the proof?

Why, there are a few passages that give directions to servants to obey their masters, and bear ill usage, &c. And these are gravely quoted to prove that the apostles sanctioned slavery, and admitted it into the church. With just as much propriety and logic might it be argued, that directions to turn one's check to the smiter, authorized the abuse, and opened the Church ordinances to the ruffish who struck us. Christ tells us to forgive our enemies; therefore our enemies have a right to hate us, and to be admitted to the Church. The slave is told to submit; therefore the slaveholder is right, and ought to be admitted to the Church. Both pieces of logic are equally good.

But we will give a little more attention to the principal passage quoted in proof. In 1 Tim. 6: 2, we find persons spoken of as "believing masters," and from this text the interpreter takes an immense stride over to the conclusion that the apostles admitted slaveholders into the church. But before this enormous chasm can be passed, three important facts are taken for granted as axioms, each of which is denied. (a) It is assumed that "believing" means church manbers. But it is perfectly plain that a man may believe, and yet not be a member of the church: indeed it is quite common now, for believers not to be church members, and in that age the terms were by no means identical. It is therefore just begging the whole question to as sume this identity. We utterly deny that believers in all cases means church members.

(b) It is also taken for granted that "masters" means slaveholders. The identity of those two terms is not to be taken without proof. Masters is a generic term, often including the species, slaveholders. But when the very question is whether in this particular text "masters" does mean slaveholders, no one has a right to assume that it does. He must prove it. No proof is offered. Again, (c) allowing that masters does mean slaveholders, the point is not yet reached. For the phrase "believing slaveholders" is entirely parallel with such expressions as "a converted heathen," "a Christian Brahmin," a "reformed drunkard," and many similar expressions. These terms surely do not mean that one is a heathen after he is converted, or a drunkard after he is reformed. They are simply designed to indicate the past and present character; and instead of showing the compatibility of the two characteristics expressed by two words, are more frequently used expressly to bring out the contrast more strikingly. We use the term 'reformed drunkard' for the very purpose of denoting that the character is not now what it once was. When therefore the apostle speaks of believing slaveholders, all the analogy goes to show that he spoke not of slaveholders after they became believers, but of men once slaveholders, but now no longer such because they were believers.

These three mooted points must all be assumed without argument, or rather the text be wrenched and deformed, before the phrase "believing masters" can be made to prove that slaveholders continuing such, were admitted to the church by the apostles.

I have thus pursued the imposing claim of adhering to "God's method of procedure" with organic sins, through all the protean shapes and subterfuges where I could find it, and must leave it to the judgment of my hearers to decide how far it has been detected and refuted. One cannot but think that if men had been prayerfully studying the Bible, instead of beating their brains to invent some new nomenclature of sin, they would have come to wiser conclusions.

3rd. The course here advocated can alone perpetuate a pure Christianity. The "sapping and mining policy" has been tried for centuries, and has invariably terminated in the establishment and perpetuation of those sins and wrongs which it dared not frankly assail.

That huge conglomeration of error and superstition usually styled the Roman Catholic Church, grew up under such a process. From the third century and onwards, missions were prosecuted with great zeal and success. Nation after nation was added to Christendom. But the missionaries of that day found the people incorrigibly attached to certain social and organic usages and sins, in, terwoven with their lives and laws: such as festivals, pompous worship, imposing ceremonies, slavery and war. They considered it more prudent to wean the people gradually from these heathenish customs. With consummate tact, as they fondly imagined-they harnessed these pagan customs into the car of Christianity, re-baptized their pomps and feasts, and consecrated them to the true God. But what was the result when Christianity was thus clothed in the cast off garments of Judaism and bedecked by the gorgeous solemnities of paganism? Great success-immense numbers passed from the temple to the church. But were the people reformed-brought under such influences that they applied the Gospel to those heathen social sins? Not at all. As every one acquainted with human nature might have anticipated, sin was more deeply rooted, became interwoven as indissolubly with the new religion as the old, until organic sin, personified in the Pope, turned round and cursed and excommunicated holiness. Christianity, instead of purifying the people and extirpating sin, became hideously diseased and deformed by the leprosy which she had taken to her embrace, and then endeavored to purify herself by the sprinklings and tawdry adornments of a heathen ceremonial. Had Satan been allowed to select and use the surest plan for corrupting Christianity, no more sagacious invention could have been devised for building up that baptized heathenism, which for a thousand years crushed and degraded Europe, which made the Church a vast license house for the sale and commission of all crime, and cursed and corrupted every nation where she placed her foot .-Place side by side Christianity with war and slavery : what two systems could by any possibility be more fundamentally and diametrically diverse, both in spirit and action. Christianity is a system of peace, forgiveness, justice and benevolence. The fundamental elements of war are violence, revenge, deceit, blood:—the main features of slavery are selfishness, oppression, and injustice.

One might suppose therefore that wherever Christianity came into contact with such systems, collision must ensue: that each must in its own nature begin a war against the other, as surely as when a river of fire and a river of water meet, they must contend till one or the other should be extirpated. We hardly expect the ocean will kindly receive into its bosom a cataract of red hot lava freshly boiling up from the crater, or that the river of fire will quietly wind through the sea like some immense gulf stream.

But so it is. Christianity, war and slavery, have quietly nestled down together, lovingly protecting and aiding each other. War girds on his sword and goes out to fight for Christianity, and pours his iron storm of bullets on her enemies; Christianity returns the favor, and in the form of a chaplain, goes out with the regiments, blesses the stabdard, preaches to the men obedience and courage in fighting out the unjust battles of the vilest and most ambitious of men. Slavery comes and offers her gifts to Christianity, and with money dug out of the very bone and life of his thralls, helps to extend her doctrines, and with slave labor supports her Churches. Christianity in her turn comes to the plantation and preaches obedience to the oppressed—threatens with hell the refractory slave, and out of her holy book finds always some text for slavery's need. Christianity (as preached by many) has been the main support of war and slavery.

But how has come about this monstrous and revolting alliance? In the beginning it was not so, for there is ample evidence that early Christians refused to serve in armies, and were in numbers put to death for refusing to be soldiers. But as Christianity was extending her conquests, her teachers tried the impossible work of serving God and Mammon. She hoped to grow the faster by temporary concession to sin, and concessions which she honestly designed to be only temporary. But the sin she so unwisely girded about her was like the poisoned shirt of Nessus, which once on, could only come off with the skin and life. When for instance the zealous monk Augustine preached Christianity to the grim old Saxon king at Winchester, half savage and half pirate, he did not exhort him to be a warrior, nor wish him to fight, and doubtless would have been glad to have war cease. But how could he preach against war to a king who gained his throne by war, and to a people who made a trade of war? So he said nothing about war, but preached the Gospel as he understood it, and with a policy near of kin to that of Jeroboam. brought the Saxons into the church with the battle axe by their side, and the skulls of their enemies at the door, that there they might be 'led to renounce

And with what result? Why, the recople receiving Christianity with war, and hearing from their teachers no rebukes of war, incorporated war with their Christianity unquestioned like their modes of dress. Christianity as preached in England for several centuries did not tend to remove war. The Christian Englishman was just as eager for war as the pagan Saxon; in Christian England, war has always had its place as a Christian profession by the side of law and agriculture. In the year 1800, after the Gospel had "worked" for 1200 years, Christianity as preached had done little or nothing to abolish war in England. Nay, Christianity now turns round on those who would abolish war, and hurls the Bible at their heads, and thunders with a whole artillery of texts to prove that she sanctions war.

Now after organic sin has wrought all this havec, what would he still have? He prays us still for a home in the Church of God, that he may corrupt and disgrace us yet longer with his foul deeds—that he may trample yet longer on the vineyard of the Lord—that he may still keep open the door of the bottomless pit, to let loose the locusts and scorpions which have ravaged the Church.

So with Slavery. The Gospel, as it is called, has been preached in the Southern States for one hundred and fifty years, and faithfully preached as men understand that term. That is, those dogmas or theological statements which are called the Gospel-such as the death of Christ-the atonement, faith in Christ, regeneration, &c., &c., have been as faithfully preached in South Carolina, for aught I know, as in any country. But with what results on Slavery? Not the slightest: rather during that time slavery has been creeping with silent and slimy progress nearer and nearer to the altar, has wound itself around the pillars of the communion table, seated itself in the pulpit, and has worked out for itself a nest within the covers of the Bible. and there proudly rearing up its crest, threatens with mobs here, and helf hereafter, all who attack it, instead of cowering away like a doomed thing before the light and rebuke of Christianity. This has been the result of taking organic sin into the Church. She has compelled the Bible to be her defender, as if Christianity, instead of being God's minister to bless mankind, were the devil's paid agent to deceive and curse the world.

The Gospel then may be preached for centuries, and not lead men to renounce slavery. But we have spoken of the Gospel as preached. I maintain, however, that in these specified cases and similar ones, the Gospel was not preached. The command "let the oppressed go free" is as much a part of God's message, as that "he was bruised for our iniquities." Christ came to "preach deliverance to the captive" as well as remission of sins; and the Gospel commands justice and equality to be rendered to the slave no less than repentance in general. Not the Gospel, but a mutilated, emasculated set of dogmas called the Gospel, have been preached. That Gospel may be preached forever and "work" forever, and lead to no result but the increased insolence of sin.

One would think the experience of sixteen hundred years might have taught us some lessons; and yet inmodern times, men, with a strange infatuation, after seeing the Church stifled and crushed in the folds of this anaconda, have just quietly invited this same insatiate monster into their missions.

Accordingly, the history of modern missions affords another sad illustration of the results of this temporizing policy with organic sin.

About a century ago, Schwartz proceeded to Southern India as a missionary, and labored there nearly fifty years. His success was wonderful, far exceeding even the atmost dreams of our more recent missionaries in that part of the world. The converts enumerated by him and his fellow laborer were counted by tens of thousauds. But he met that organic sin, the curse of all India—caste—the fruitful mother of pride, hate and all uncharitableness. Schwartz thought the evil too great and deeply rooted to be at once assailed, and its abandonment made the indispensable condition of Church membership. We are told by his admiring biographer, that he "so treated this difficult and delicate point, that the distinctions of caste were gradually disappearing, and would probably, in time, have been entirely forgotten." So dreamed the good man as he admitted caste into the Church, "that men might be led to renounce it."

But with what result, after the Gospel has "worked" for a hundred years? Why, caste and Christianity took root together—as parts of one system: and became so interlaced that no human power could uproot the sin, without tearing in pieces the Church. When "the Bishop of Calcutta felt it to be his duty to take some decisive measures to abolish the distinctions of caste, among the native converts to christianity (at the end of a century) the evil had increased to a magnitude not contemplated by Schwartz." When they were reminded of the duty of rejecting casts, these Christians rejected the proposition with scorn, spurned the authority of the Bishop, and were determided to retain caste, whatever became of their church or their ministers. The record of the tumultuous and disgraceful scenes which took place in Southern India when churches a century old were to be "led to renounce" caste, is an instructive commentary on the right mode of dealing with organic sin. The sin, instead of being worked off, had bred in these churches a universal gangréne.

The American missionaries in India and elsewhere pursued substantially the same course. They carefully strained out the gnat of tobacco chewing, made that a ground of exclusion from the Church, but swallowed down caste and sl very, those monster sins which engender and protect a broad of other sins. In some of their churches at least, caste was telerated in the benevolent hope that these supposed converts would be led quietly and gradually to renounce this vital root or seed of heathenism. They waited many years for the Gospel to "work." But caste had no more intention of leaving the Church than of departing from the temple. This serpent egg which they had handled so tenderly and kept warm, began to hatch out its brood of hateful reptiles. The missionaries at length finding that the Gospel did not "work" till it was fully preached and applied, began to get the Gospel to do its appropriate work by applying it. The consequence was just what the experience of fifteen centuries might have led them to expect. Caste would not be cast out. And at one mission station alone seventy church members were excommunicated, as preferring caste to Christ.

In short, all experience shows that it is far more difficult to cast out organic sin after it is rooted in the Church, than to keep it out, from the first. This process of extermination by Church discipline only rends the Church into fragments, while harmony would not have been at all affected by its exclusion at first.

With similar results has the organic sin of slavery been admitted into the mission churches among the Choctaw Indians. The well meaning men who took this step did not like slavery, and would have been pleased to see it disappear. But they had heard of Schwartz and the Moravians, and the slave holder seemed penitent, and they were anxious for converts: so instead of taking the firm ground which would probably have kept out some slave holders altogether, and have delayed the admission of others for a few weeks, they unbarred the door. The wolf came in. They preached the Gospel to this wolf, i. e. they told him that Christ died for him;—that he must trust in Christ alone for salvation:—that he must not cruelly devour the sheep. All this the wolf gladly heard and cordially received. Christianity and the wolf most lovingly lay down together in the same fold: the wolf, neither rebuked nor vexed, hid his claws and teeth. But by and by Christianity hinted to the wolf that it was time not only to believe, but to practice the Gospel. But his growl and teeth show that it must now come to the question whether Christianity or the wolf shall have possession of the Church.

Or to drop the figure—the patrons of these mission Churches think it time that the Gospel should do its appropriate "work" on slavery, and have hinted to these heathen converts that they must now begin, after the lapse of thirty years to apply the Gospel. These Churches at once rebel and refuse—maintain that they are acting in accordance with apostolic practice—that the apostles never insisted on emancipation, and insolently add that the Board has changed, and were compelled to, by the fanaticism of the North. The poor heathen converts, instead of being led to renounce slavery, have only learned the characteristic strogance of slaveholders, and insult their teachers; and intend, instead of parting with slavery, to part with the Board, and force out of the nation all teachers who will not go for slavery.

Still more revolting has been the "working of the Gospel" among the Moravian Missions in the Danish West India Islands. I visited several of their stations in the winter of 1833-9. They also, with the simplicity characteristic of the early missionaries of that sect, had preached the Gospel in its technical sense-but a Gospel stripped of its authority as law, and made little else than a mere system of excited sentimentalism. There were two organic sins prevailing among their converts, slavery and concubinage, which came into the Church to be there reformed. But the leprosy had so corrupted the Church, that to my horror and surprise, I found that slavery was not only in the Church, but that the mission was actually supported by slaverythat the mission owned slaves, compelled them to work, and thus paid the salaries of the missionaries. Even worse than that-concubinage was the rule, and marriage the exception, among the Church members! When I expressed my astonishment to one of the missionaries, he very carelessly replied "Oh! they do not like to be confined by marriage." Thus had the Church become a den of unclean things, resting on the foundation of organic Such has been the result of the policy we oppose. It has not prepared the master to break the bonds of the slave, nor the proud Brahmin fraternally to embrace the man of low caste. It has rivetted the fetters of the slave, confirmed the prejudices of caste, and filled the Church with sin.

With these facts before us, we have felt constrained to expostulate often and strongly with those who control the great missionary operations of the day. Having done so in vain, we have aimed, not in the spirit of rivalry, but in obedience to a stern sense of duty, to institute missions on different principles. We know that our expostulations are met with the alleged claim that success has indicated the blessing of God on this questionable course of policy. But what is success? Mere accessions of members? Then Papists have pre-eminently the blessing of God on their missions. In Singapore, for instance, where large and well manned Protestant Missions from England and America have labored and then abandoned the field—one Romish priest has collected a large band of converts. If the establishment of mission churches, whose members tenaciously adhere to slavery, and resent all attempts to teach them a true and full Gospel constitutes success, then some missionary societies are successful: if converts preferring caste to Christianity indicate success, then the blessing of God can be easily obtained. Such success we do not seek, for it must result in ruin to souls, and disaster to us.

Organic sins, like boastful Goliaths, have stood up in the missionaries' path, and have defied the living God, denying the power of God to release their victims, and condescendingly allowing the man of God to go on in his Master's work, if he, organic sin, should be untouched—or rather petted and propitiated by the sacrifice of truth, and by reception into the Church. This Goliath comes into the camp of Israel, not to obey and worship the true God, but to corrupt and tyrannize. We mean, in David's faith to meet the monster, and to lay the axe of God's reforming truth on his mailed body, and build the Church, not by his permission, but standing on his prostrate carcase. We believe it easier to keep him out of the Church, than to cast him out after he has gained firm foothold, and with his strong arms bound himself to the very horns of the altar.

I will only add as a remark, that we may see "How the Gospel is to work." Much is said of this "working out" of the principles of the Gospel; which has little meaning, or a wrong meaning. One might suppose that the Bible was a bottle of yeast, which was to be thrown into some great dead sea of mind, and there was to operate mechanically in throwing off the scum and filth. But what is the Gospel? A set of dogmas? It is all which the Bible contains, both of theology and precept. How is it to work? By being crippled, and one half of its truth cut out? No, but by being expounded and applied by faithful men.

The Gospel can be expected to work only where the Gospel is preached. "Let the oppressed go free" is part of the Gospel. Christ, and of course his ministers, were to "preach deliverance to the captive." Let these be kept back, and the Gospel is not preached. Of course the Gospel cannot work, or can work but feebly and imperfectly: and so feebly, as our previous statements show, that it and sin will grow up in mutual friendship and support. Let it be preached, and preached in all its application, to all sin, to organic sin, and to all the developments and forms which sin assumes in various states of society, then it will work as a true antagonism to sin, and its great Author will work in it and with it.

The history of this Society is a beautiful illustration of the certainty, rapidity and power with which the Gospel works when preached and applied. For but three years ago the principles laid down in this discourse were laid before one of the principal Missionary Boards in this country: but they were rejected with scorn—it was most strenuously maintained that these principles were contrary to God's method of procedure with organic sins—that no missions had ever been conducted on such principles: that slavery, polygamy and caste should be admitted into the Church as they had ever been. Even the proposition that these sins should be considered prima facie evidence of wrong doing, was voted down unanimously.

But this Society began to apply the Gospel theoretically and practically to these matters, and behold how the Gospel "works." Some of the officers of that same Board now intimate, delicately it is true, to their missionaries, that slaveholding is to be considered prima facie evidence of wrong-doing—that polygamy is not to be admitted to the mission churches, and have already commenced the process of purging out caste from the heathen converts. The Gospel, in the technical sense, had been preached centuries without leading to these results:—the Gospel preached fully and applied, in three years, has led to these surprising and most gratifying results.

Finally, the work of missions, rightly conducted, must ever be a work of self sacrifice among all engaged in it. It is said that Peter the Great was once besieging a fortification surrounded by a deep most, which must of course be passed before the walls could be reached. He brought up column after column to the attack, and on they marched as the front ranks one after another were precipitated into the most. But on still they went till the ditch was filled with a mass of corpses and half dead men, over which the rest of the troops marched to the assault.

That spirit baptized unto Christ Jesus, is the true missionary spirit. When the Church shall thus go forth to its work, then shall the time be near when the glory of the Lord shall visit the earth. That spirit had the sainted Phelps and Torrey and Lovejoy, when they offered themselves as living sacrifices. In that spirit let our missions ever be conducted.

In addition to the amount acknowledged in the abstract of the Report, there have been received 44 packages of clothing. So, designed for different Missions. A part of these were valued by the donors, and it is calculated that the value of the whole amounts to about $1500. These packages have been acknowledged in the paper, atthough their value has not been included in the acknowledgements of Monky perc. The whole have been forwarded to the Missions for which they were designed.

MINUTES OF THE THIRD ANNUAL MEETING.

The American Missionary Association held its Third Annual Meeting in the Tremont Temple, Boston, Massachusetts, September 25, 1849, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Wm. Jackson, President of the Board, took the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. C. Webster. In the temporary absence of the Recording Secretary, M. S. Scudder was appointed Secretary pro tem.

The Corresponding Secretary read the Annual Report of the Executive Committee. The Report was referred to a Committee of five, viz: Rev. J. C. Webster, Rev. Charles Avery, L. Tappan, Rev. Wm. B. Stone, and Rev. G. Whipple.

The Treasurer read his report, which, on motion, was accepted.

Rev. George Trask, M. S. Scudder, Rev. D. S. King, Rev. A. D. Barber and I. W. Sullivan were appointed a Committee of Arrangements.

The committee on the report read by the Corresponding Secretary, reported the following resolutions, which, after discussion, were severally adopted:

Resolved, That in the lamented death of Rev. Jesse Caswell, of the Siam Mission, the American Missionary Association mourn the removal of a learned and successful missionary from an important post; that we feel called upon to strengthen and sustain this mission, as well as the Kaw-Mendi Mission, from which Mr. A. J. Carter has recently been removed by death; and that we implore for these and all the missions of the Association, the smiles of the Great Head of the Church.

MENOI MISSION.

Resolved, That in the providence of God which led to the establishment of the Mendi Mission, we recognize His call upon Christian abolitionists to engage in the work of evangelizing Africa; and that we recommend to the Executive Committee to take measures for the establishment of another mission, farther in the interior of that country, as soon as practicable.

TAMATCA MISSION

for enlarging this department of labor.

Resolved. That we approve of the efforts of our missionaries at Jamaica, to educate the emancipated people to sustain the institutions of the Gospel; to encourage the introduction of agricultural labor adapted to the new condition in which they have been placed; and that he regard their exertions for the promotion of temperance and missionary economy as worthy of extensive imitation.

OJIBWA MISSION. Resolved. That we sympathize with the missionaries among the Ojibwa Indians, in their peculiarly self-denying labors and privations; and that we rejolee in the good already effected self-denying them are provided in the spiritual and temporal prospecity of this tribe of Indians.

HOME MISSIONS.

Resolved, That the appropriations to Home Missions, including ald to the Canada Mission, be approved; that we regard with peculiar favor the efforts of these laborious and self-denying missionaries to establish a pure religion in destitute portions of our country; and that we carnestly appeal to the friends of the cause to supply the funds

SIAM MISSION. Resolved, That we are grateful for the promptness with which the friends of the Siam Mission have responded to the call for aid, and to the personal solicitations of Dr. Brad-ley on its behalf; that we rejoice in the missionary spirit awakened among the people where he has labored, and in the prospect of his speedy return to the mission with a suitable reinforcement.

Resolved. That the large number of colored persons in our principal cities makes it desirable that special missionary labor should be performed among them; and that we regard the field as one of great usefulness, demanding the unremitted exertion of wise and well directed efforts in it.

GENERAL AGENTS. Resolved, That this Association, formed to disseminate a pure Gospel at home and in foreign lands, without conniving at, palliating, or tolerating the sins of slave-holding, bastle, war, bolygamy, or intemperance, having, by the blessing of God, been eminently successful in its labors, owes it to the Redeemer, and to a world perishing in iniquity, to persevere in and enlarge its operations; and that we invite all the friends of a pure Gospel to co-operate with us in our efforts to proclaim in every suitable way, by the press, in the church, and through the American Missionary, the principles of the Association, and to secure for its name a place on the list of benevolent societies to be presented to the church for contributions.

Resolved. That the thanks of this meeting be given to the numerous donors who have freely responded to the calls of the Executive Committee, and furnished the means for carrying on the operations of the Society the past year, and that their continued and more liberal sid is earnestly requested, that the operations of the Society may be specified.

enlarged. Resolved, That in the good that has been accomplished through the agency of this Association, we recognize the smiles of the Great Hoad of the Church, who has declared "I will be exalted among the heathen," and who calls upon his people of every name and denomination to take part in diffusing a pure Gospel throughout the world.

Resolved, That as the feasibility of establishing churchs in the slave-holding states, which shall preclude the admission before, and of distributing the fible to slaves, has been demoustrated, the Eccountry Committee be requested to avail themselves of every opportunity to apply the Gospel to the destruction of slaver; in those states.

Other resolutions were presented by different individuals, and passed,

Resolved. That as Christ and his apostles have left the church a perfect example in all her labors to evangelize the world, in their uncompromising spirit towards all sin, and their entire freedom from all temporing policy, those who imitate this example are alone worth missionaries of the Gross.

are alone worthy missionaries of the Cross.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to Rev. David Thurston, for his able and instructive discourse preached last evening, and that a copy be reomested for mullication.

Resolved. That the thanks of the Association be presented to the families in Roston and vicinity, whose hospitalities and Christian kindness have been enjoyed by the members of the Association, and to the Committee of arrangement at Boston, who have made so ample provision for the annual meeting.

CHOICE OF OFFICERS.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year, viz :

President-WILLIAM JACKSON, Mass,

Perkins and Rev. J. P. Bardwell, formerly of the Ojibwa mission, now an agent of the Association.

ADJOURNMENT.

The Association adjourned, to hold its next annual meeting at such time in September, 1850, and at such place as the Executive Committee shall designate.

ANNUAL REPORT.

Three years ago this month, "a Convention of the friends of Bible Missions" assembled at Albany in the State of New-York, and after mature deliberation and much prayer, formed the American Missionary Association. Through Divine goodness the Executive Committee are permitted now to meet the members and friends of the Society, and present to them the Third Annual Report of its operations, and the present condition of its Missions. As in the two preceeding years, this statement must contain that which is depressing as well as that which is cheering. Since the date of our last Report, we have heard of the death of two of our missionaries in foreign lands, both of whom had deceased before our last Annual Meeting. Mr. Carter died at the Mission-house, Kaw-Mendi, West Africa, July 25th, 1848, just eight days after his arrival there, and Mr. Caswell died at Bangkok, Siam, September 25th, the day before our last meeting at Hartford.

The blessing of God has been given to the labors of our missionaries both at home and in the foreign field; the number of contributors to our funds has been enlarged; the Annual Receipts have grown from $17.095 74 to $21.982 96, showing an increase of 28 per cent., and 76 life members have been added to the Society by the payment of $30 each, either by themselves or their friends. The following summary presents a view of our present condition and the results of the last year's labors:

MISSIONARY OPERATIONS.

Mendi Mission-Kaw-Mendi-West Africa.

Missionary—Rev. George Thompson. Native Assistant—Thomas Bunyan. Under Appointment—Mr. J. S. Brooks, Mrs. Fidelia Coburn Brooks, Mrs. Thompson and Sarah Kinson (Mar-gru) a Mendi African. Total 6.

In reviewing the history of this interesting Mission, we are led to exclaim "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord." The providences of God in relation to it have been very peculiar. Ten years ago, forty Africans, recently stolen from their native land, were captured in the Spanish schooner Amistad, near the shores of Connecticut. After a long and severe struggle on the part of their friends against the courts and government of the United States, and influential citizens thereof, they were by the Supreme Court declared to be freemen, and guiltless of any breach of the laws of our country, or of nations. After their freedom had been secured, a portion of the funds so freely contributed by Anti-Slavery men for their defence remained in the hands of the Committee, who had the general management of it. These funds they determined to expend in sending the Africans back to their country, and to send with them a suitable number of Christian missionaries. As this money had been contributed by Anti-Slavery men, on Anti-Slavery principles, there would have been a manifest impropriety in placing it in the treasury of any Missionary Society into whose counsels slaveholders were admitted, or whose missionaries, or mission churches were involved in the sin of Slavery. A new organization was, therefore, commenced, to establish and provide for this particular Mission. Thus originated one branch of our operations, which still demands the continued and vigorous prosecution of our work.

Two ordained missionaries were sent with this company of liberated Africans. One of them was compelled by sickness to leave the Mission almost immediately after his arrival, since which time, although it has been the constant desire of the Society to keep at least two well qualified missionaries in that field, with two very brief exceptions, there has been but one; and for the space of nine months after the death of Mr. Raymond, the only laborer which the Society had in that field, was a converted Mendian. Under these adverse circumstances the Mission has made almost continual advances in prosperity, until at one time its school numbered nearly one hundred scholars. During much of this time the country has been almost eaten up by famine, the Mission has been surgounded by war, and to all human appearance threatened with immediate destruction. Amid all this, however, it has stood, and still stands, apparently a monument of God's preserving care of all those who are willing to trust their defence wholly with Him.

In our last Annual Report the arrival of Mr. Thompson and Mr. Carter, at Sierra Leone, was announced. Their passage from that port to the mission premises was very tedious, and greatly trying to the health of both the missionaries. Owing to the season of the year in which they arrived at Sierra Leone, they were four weeks in going one hundred and thirty miles, as long as they had been in going from New-York to that port. Mr. Carter, separating from his companion, went forward in an open canoe, and after much exposure reached the Mission-house on the afternoon of Tuesday, July 17th. That evening he gathered together the children of the school and the other attendants at the Mission for prayer. This was the first and last misssionary labor which he was enabled to perform. Before the next morning he was in a high fever, and died on the 25th, just three days after Mr. Thompson's arrival. The feelings of Mr. Thompson, at this eventful commencement of his missionary life, can better be conceived than described. His first work was attendance at the dving bed of his beloved associate, his next assisting in making his coffin, -his first sermon the funeral sermon of him to whom he had looked for counsel and aid.

The sickness and death of Mr. Carter can be accounted for without having recourse to the unhealthiness of the climate. Arriving on the coast during the rainy season, he was frequently, and for a long time exposed to wet. After leaving the Mission-boat he was not able to get sufficient to eat, and consequently became much reduced, and took cold. In the room in which he slept, he was exposed to breathe the fumes of burning charcoal, which produced delirium and high fever. After his arrival at the mission, and before Mr. Thompson reached there with the supplies, he could not procure the comforts necessary for one in his situation; and lastly, at the Mission he failed to obtain that skilful nursing which his circumstances required.

During the long interval that occurred between the death of Mr. Raymond and the arrival of the new missionaries, some of the children were taken from the Mission by their parents, who despaired of the coming of the new missionaries, so that the greater part of the sixty-eight children that remained at the Mission at the arrival of Mr. Thompson, were those that had been redeemed by Mr. Raymond from slavery or death, and regarded him, or the missionary in charge, as their only earthly protector. Accordingly Mr. Thompson's arrival was hailed by them with the most clamorous joy. They rushed to meet him in a mass, thrusting forth many hands at once to be grasped by him in friendly greeting. The emotions produced in Mr. Thompson's mind were overwhelming, and he could only turn aside and weep. Soon after his arrival was known, the children that had been taken away were brought back by their parents. The long continued war, and the depredations made upon the mission-farm by hordes of half-starved and savage warriors, had caused such a scarcity of food throughout the entire country, and even at the Mission, that Mr. Thompson was compelled to refuse to receive them, except upon the condition that the parents would provide food for them. The promise to do so was in some instances given; and the Committee are encouraged to hope that even from this adverse providence good may be found to result.

Nearly seventy children are under the absolute control of the mission, and cannot separate or be separated from it without imminent hazard of slavery or death—a fate from which the Mission cannot save them except by retaining them under its immediate protection. The natural capacities of these children, their gratitude for the redemption of their lives and liberties, and their desire to retain the good will of the missionaries, promise rapid improvement not only in the duties of the school, but in the several departments of agricultural and mechanical employment in which they are instructed. This cannot fail to have an effect upon those who witness it, to increase the desire that their children should possess similar advantages. In this way they will be led to contribute to the support of their children while being educated, and the Mission will sconer be enabled to become self-supporting.

The numerous chiefs about the Mission are very friendly to it. According to the custom of the country, they have expected presents from the missionaries whenever they have had interviews with them. Mr. Thompson has wisely attempted to relieve the Mission from the expense attending this custom, and when remonstrated with by some of the inferior chiefs in relation to it, he suggested that the Mission could be removed farther inland, where they could be released from this exaction. The instant reply of the chiefs was, "No, no! you must not go—we like you—you must stay here—the country is yours."

The Mission, situated in the midst not only of Slavery but of the slave trade, has eyer refused to give the least countenance to the idea that man can possess property in man. Except in one or two instances, which occurred during the interval between Mr. Raymond's decease and the arrival of his successors, not even the chiefs of the country have ever been permitted to place the badge of servitude upon any man while on the Mission premises, or to carry any man bound across them. The good effect of the opposition thus shown to Slavery, together with the direct appeals of the missionaries to the principal men of the different tribes is beginning to manifest itself. Slavery and the reduction of men to Slavery are, however, so intimately connected with their savage life, that rapid progress cannot be expected-except in connection with revivals of pure and undefiled religion, and the conversion of men to God. Captives taken in war hold their lives at the mercy of the captor, and except by special intervention, the only alternative is slavery or death. A large number of those at the Mission have been saved by it from one or the other of these fates. Slavery is a punishment for crime. A law providing that a man found stealing may be shot down, or if caught must be sold as a slave, has been passed by the chiefs since Mr. Thompson's arrival at the Mission. The immediate occasion of this was the great increase of stealing since the war has been carried on in that region. This has been caused doubtless, in part, by the lawlessness generated by the war spirit, and in part by the scarcity of food consequent on its ravages. Mr. Thompson remonstrated extrestly with them against the passage of this law, spoke of the wickedness of selling men, the brotherhood of the human family and our duty to love each other. They assented to the correctness of Mr. Thompson's remarks, but in extenuation made the much abused plea of necessity, as they have none of the appliances of civilized life to restrain the liberty of men convicted of crime.

The sugar cane and cotton grow very well in that country, and if American Christians could send out business men, who could teach them the manufacture of sugar, and the best method of raising cotton, it would contribute much to the overthrow of Slavery, and facilitate the progress of the Gospel. The Mission makes earnest appeals for such assistance.

The present condition of the Mission is promising. Soon after Mr. Thompson's arrival he reported the hopeful conversion of Maria, one of the captives of the Amistad, who at the latest dates appeared remarkably well. A line from Mr. Bunyan, recently received, states that the Lord had begun his good work there, and that some of the school children and of the men attached to the Mission were 'crying out for the salvation of their souls, and being added to the Church.'

The Committee are happy to report the appointment of Mr. and Mrs. Brooks to the Mission, who with Sarah Kinson (Mar-gru) expect to sail from Philadelphia for Sierra Leone early in October.* The experience which Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have had from their connection with the Canada Mission, will form an excellent preparation for their work in Africa, and encourage the Committee to hope that they may become greatly useful in the native land of those for whose elevation and conversion to God they have so long, and with so much self-denial, labored and prayed.

After a residence of three years in this country, during which she has made commendable progress in study, Mar-gru is about to return to Africa, prepared to sid in the intellectual and domestic education of her fellow countrywomen, and we trust with a desire to become useful to them. Two of the three captive girls of the Amistad will then be at the Mission. The death of the third was announced in our last annual report. These two are both hopefully pious. Some of the men who composed the company of captives of the Amistad yet remain connected with the Mission, but the exact number of these the Committee have no means of knowing.

The Committee cannot close this part of their report without presenting the earnest inquiry whether our Association is not loudly called upon to do more, much more, for Africa. In addition to those already under appointment, the Executive Committee have resolved to send another family to the Mendi Mission, just so soon as a suitable one can be found, and we are not without hope that we shall be able to send them with Mr. and Mrs. Brooks in October. But what are these feeble missionaries, few in number compared with the hundreds and thousands of laborers demanded for that bleeding people. Mr. Raymond always regarded the mission at Kaw-Mendi as the first of a chain of posts, stretching far away into the interior, each to be manned by Christian warriors, male and female. whose only weapon should be the sword of the spirit, whose code of warfare the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and whose strife might be even at the sacrifice of their lives, to honor God, and impart the blessings of the life that now is, and the hope of eternal life to those whose country they should invade. This object he ever kept before him, as have also the other members of the mission; and they have so prepared the way that the chiefs of different tribes, residing seven day's journey in the interior, claim our missionaries as theirs, and ask for the establishment of a mission among them. So far as Africa is concerned, the providence of

^{*} Since the reading of this report this company have sailed for Africa, from New-York.

God has already opened the country to us, and is now inviting us to enter. It remains with the members and patrons of our Society to say how vigorously the work shull be prosecuted.

Africa presents some peculiar claims upon American Christians for help. They can only be touched upon in this Report.

1. That country is nearer to us than any other foreign missionary field.

2. The country is apparently open to us, and its governments will offer no serious opposition to our entering any part of it.

3. The people see and appreciate the superiority of men in civilized life, and desire the cultivation which will raise them to the same grade.

4. There is there no hoary and venerated system of superstition, inwrought into the forms of society, and presenting at every point opposition to change.

5. A reason more powerful perhaps than any other to induce us to engage in this work is the deep degradation of Africa, superinduced by the Slave Trade, in which Americans have taken so prominent a part.

Always excepting the remarkable outpouring of God's Spirit in the Sandwich Islands, no people perhaps have ever more readily yielded to the cultivation bestowed upon them, than the people of Africa. The opposition to slavery and caste incorporated in the principles of our organization, the exclusion of the slave-holder from participation in our counsels, the denial of Christian fellowship in any of our Churches to all who are voluntary in sustaining the relation of master to slaves; in a word, the entire freedom from all connection with this sin which a consistent membership in our Society demands, seems to indicate that we may enter this field of labor, and strive for the overthrow of the peculiar sins of this people, without fear of the taunt "Physician, heal thyself." Will not the patrons of our Society come up to the aid of the Executive Committee. and as they have hitherto given a generous support to the Mendi Mission, henceforth enable the Society continually to enlarge their work there, sending forth religious teachers as fast as new fields shall open, and with them religious mechanics and agriculturists, to teach them the arts of civilized and Christian life.

Some Sabbath Schools and Juvenile Missionary Societies have undertaken each to sustain one or more children at Kaw-Mendi. The estimated expense of each scholar, for hourd and clothing, is twenty dollars per annum; a small sum to be expended in rescuing a child from the corruptions of heathenism, and educating him under the influences of a pure Christianity. A very little exertion on the part of Pastors of Churches and Superintendents of Sabbath Schools, may induce many other children to engage in this work.

Brainerd.—Mr. Evarts and wife, having obtained the consent of the Executive Committee returned to this country in June last, after an absence of nine years. He was much worn down by continued toil, and the responsibility that there rested upon him. In addition to teaching and preaching, he had had the general oversight of the Mission, had planned buildings for chapels, school-houses and dwelling houses, laid out the work, and aided in executing it, with his own hands, until he himself, the Mission, and the Executive Committee, were unanimous in the conclusion that he must seek rest, or soon be laid aside entirely from his labors.

The annual letter from this station says that the last year, although one of much labor and care, both on the part of the Church and the missionaries, has been in many respects an interesting and prosperous one. The improvement made by the congregation in various ways has been very encouraging. There has been a marked advance of piety and moral strength in the Church, an increase of serious attention to religion in the congregation, and a fuller attendance upon the means of grace during the year than previously. There has been a growing interest in spiritual things, a manifest improvement in the discipline of the Church, and an increased desire for education. The number of scholars was increasing, even while the means of the people were diminishing. An unusual desire for physical improvement has been manifested, and the general prospects of the people were very encouraging.

The pecuniary pressure and embarrassment on the Island has been fast increasing. This has made it more difficult for the people to contribute to the support of the means of grace; yet the missionaries have been much encouraged by the amount still contributed by the Church and congregation for religious and educational purposes. A great amount has been contributed in the shape of day-labor, of which no accurate estimate can be made. This work has consisted of making fences, planting hedges, putting the station premises in better order, cultivating a provision ground, and getting materials upon the ground for building and repairs. In this way there have been not less than from 2000 to 2500 days' work performed. There has been an increased cheerfulness in doing this work, and a manifest joy at seeing the improved state of the premises.

Fourteen have been received to the Church, on profession of faith.

The receipts for 10 months of the year, up to the 1st of May, at which

The receipts for 10 months of the year, up to the 1st of May, at which time Mr. Evarts left the Island, were as follows:

For the Minister's support	94	80
Subscriptions and contributions for chapel 4	41	50
School fees1	20	00
Collections for the poor	15	00
Cash presented to Mr. and Mrs. Evarts	23	48
	04	70

Besides this sum the congregation have raised about sixty dollars to meet the expense of securing a public road through the station and new settlements in the vicinity, and twenty-eight dollars for the poor in Ireland. The schools at Brainerd are under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Venning. On the list there are registered ninety-six scholars; the average attendance is 75. At all the stations of this Mission the practice obtains of having every family whose children attend school contribute something for the support of the teacher. This is done in the belief that thus they will be led to prize education more highly.

There is a high school at Brainerd, at which the more advanced scholars from the different stations may receive instruction in branches not taught in the other schools.

During this year the school at Cool Shade, an out-station of Brainerd, has been given up, the Mission having become convinced that it was useless to attempt to carry on schools, where the missionaries could not superintend the religious instruction of the people.

Eliot.—Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, from this station, are also in this country, having been induced to come mainly on account of the impaired health of Mrs. Thompson, and the necessity of obtaining medical advice and assistance for her.

The annual letter from this station states that a few have been added to the Church during the year, and five members have been excommunicated. The trials through which the people of Jamaica are passing, are thought to be working for their good. It is a time to discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. Although some have been found wanting, the piety of others is becoming more clearly evinced.

The school at this station is not large; there are 23 scholars enrolled, and 25 in daily attendance. One of the most promising features of the school is the increasing interest that the Church is feeling in it.

The people at Eliot have contributed $312.88 towards the support of the Mission, viz:

For	the support of the Pastor $	114	86
	building purposes, the poor, &c	149	22
	expenses of the Church	12	04
44	support of the school	87	26
Mak	ting a total of	312	88

Union.—At the time of commencing this station, the greater portion of the Church and congregation resided at Hermitage. The people have since been able to purchase portions of land at Chesterfield, a neighboring property, while they could not procure land for themselves at Hermitage. The school is therefore at Chesterfield, while the chapel is at Hermitage.

Mr. Wolcott reports 18 additions to his Church during the year. Two of these persons are Africans, captives of the Ulysses, taken from the Isle of Pines some ten years ago. There have been some cases of discipline, although none of excommunication. One excommunicated person has been restored.

The school is taught by Thomas Austin, a young colored man educated at the Mico, a school under the care of Rev. J. O. Beardslee, formerly connected with this Mission.

The amount received from the people at this station, for all purposes, is $107.65, viz:

For	support of minister$31	10
	chapel and station purposes 54	56
	Church purposes 7	95
	school fees	04
	$107	65

The school at Devon-pen has been suspended during a part of the year. It has lately been re-commenced, under the care of Mr. Anderson Rennie. Although yet small, numbering only 20 scholars, it is increasing, and gives some promise of better things.

Oberlin .- The Church and congregation at this station, and at Providence, have been greatly tried. They were ardently attached to their former Pastor, the Rev. C. S. Renshaw, who was a long time in this country before he relinquished the purpose of returning again to his station. After he was constrained, by the advice of physicians, to abandon the hope of being able to labor more in Jamaica, this station was long left without a missionary. Strong effort was made by some sectarists to wean the people from their attachment to the Mission, but without much success. Before the arrival of Mr. Olds they had become greatly disheartened, and were almost ready to give up in despair. Dr. Hyde, who was stationed at Providence, was too feeble in health to allow of his teaching, and the only constant laborer there was Miss Dean, who had charge of the school at Oberlin. Since the arrival of Mr. Olds, who reached Jamaica in December last, things there present a more promising aspect. The people are deeply interested in their new Pastor; the school at Oberlin, under Miss Dean, is flourishing, and Mrs. Olds has commenced a school at Providence; the congregations are filling up, and there is an increased seriousness among the people.

The Sabbath schools at both stations are of an interesting character, and the meetings for prayer and conference are well attended. Concerning these meetings, Mr. Olds writes: "I have often thought that the attendance here would put to the blush many of the Churches of the States, where religious privileges are so abundant."

The statistics of the report are as follows: Added to the Church since Mr. Olds arrived, 4; number of scholars in Sabbath school at Oberlin, from 80 to 100; at Providence, from 60 to 80. The people have contributed in 6 months.

The difficulties in the way of the missionary in Jamaica are not yet overcome. In some respects they seem to be increasing. Some of the dreadful habits superinduced by slavery still remain to curse the people and prevent the progress of the gospel. The ignorance, the licentiousness, the deceit, the indolence, the lack of self-control, and the habit of regarding their interest as antagonistic to their employers, which belonged to that system, are still strongly marked among them. While this is true, it is also true that they are making very commendable advances in enterprize and general improvement. The road from the depths of the degradation of slavery to the civilization of a pure Christianity, is a long one, and, under the most favorable circumstances, a tedious one, The circumstances by which the people of Jamaica are surrounded are not by any means all favorable. The system of agriculture adapted to a slavery cursed country, is not suited to a land of freemen. Of this the planters of Jamaica did not seem to be aware, and after emancipation. many of them, instead of encouraging the people to become owners of small portions of the soil, and to introduce a system of culture and productions suited to these small farms, they sought by free labor to cultivate the same crops, and in the same way, as when they owned the laborers as well as the soil, and could drive with the cartwhip men, women and children, in their fields and their mills. This method was madly pursued, until by it, in co-operation with other, perhaps equally efficient causes, the planters became utterly ruined, were unable to pay the wages of their laborers, and threw up their properties in despair. One of the greatest difficulties in the way of the temporal prosperity of the emancipated is to introduce the cultivation of crops, and find markets for them. that can profitably be cultivated on small parcels of land. Our missionaries are encouraging the cultivation of Arrow Root, Cassada, and similar crops, very fine specimens of which have been sent by their people to this country, and may be seen and purchased at the Missionary Rooms, N. Y.

Some of the stations of this Mission will need considerable expenditures for repairs. Dr. Hyde, whose health has not yet sufficiently recovered to allow of his confinement in the school room, will undertake the supervision of these repairs, and it is thought that this employment will be conducive to his health.

It is hoped that Mr. Evarts and Mr. Thompson, with their wives, will be prepared to return to Jamaica this fall, and take with them additional laborers for the schools at Eliot, Providence, and Chesterfield.

OJIBWA OR CHIPPEWAY MISSION, MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

One Mission, three stations.

Red Lake—Missionaries, Rev. S. G. Wright, Dr. William Lewis, physician and teacher. O. A. Coe, farmer. Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Coe. Cass Lake—Missionaries, Rev. A. Barnard, Jos. D. Fisher, Mrs. Barnard, Mrs. Fisher.

Lake Winnipec-Missionaries, Rev. A. B. Adams, David B. Spencer, (licentiate), James Tanner, native assistant and interpreter, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Spencer.

Undetermined, Francis Spease, farmer. Total, 16.

The Rev. J. P. Bardwell, agent for our Association, who on account of his former residence with this tribe of Indians and his familiarity with the wants of the missionaries, has been employed to collect funds, and procure the supplies for this Mission, has this year visited both the Red Lake and Cass Lake stations. No detailed statement of the condition of this Mission has been received. Mr. Bardwell's letters since his return, and those received from the missionaries, furnish us with all the important facts in relation to it.

At the commencement of the period included in this Report, many of the Ojibwas were engaged in a war with their ancient enemies the Sioux. From this cause the operations of the Mission have been much embarrassed, and strong temptations have been thrown in the way of the native converts; yet through the favor of God, they have been enabled, though tried, to overcome, and the missionaries speak of continual advancement. Improvements have been going on in agriculture. The Indians manifest more and more willingness to leave their wandering life and settle down to the cultivation of the soil, to receive the instruction of the missionaries, and listen to the word of life, and the Spirit of the Lord has not been withheld from them.

The station at Red Lake has heretofore been occupied jointly by the Rev. Mr. Ayer and wife, of the American Board, and the missionaries of our Society. The health of Mr. Ayer has been gradually failing, so that some time since he tendered his resignation to the Prudential Committee of the American Board, which has been accepted. He has accordingly left the station, and the Mission has now passed wholly under our care.

The Church at Red Lake contains ten native converts, one of whom, an aged woman of eighty winters, has recently united with it, Rev. Mr. Bardwell having baptized her, and received her to the communion of the Church at his late visit. One suspended native member, who gave good evidence of repentance, was also restored to Church fellowship. American Indians are generally polygamists, and the Ojibwas form no exception to this remark. The Mission at Red Lake has had trial of the difficulties of this question, although in a form somewhat different from that usually presented. A woman sometime since hopefully converted, applied for admission to the Mission Church while yet living with a husband having two wives. Her application was on this account rejected. She has since yielded to the instruction of the missionaries, separated herself from the man whom she formerly called her husband, and been received into the Church. This step has brought persecution upon her, but at the latest accounts she remained firm, with no disposition to retaliate. In her own language she "remembered God and was calm."

The power of the gospel has been manifest in the consistent life and triumphant death of a young sister in this Church. A young Indian woman named Hannah, recently died in Ohio, while on a visit there with Mr. and Mrs. Barnard. She died as she lived, praying for the Mission and the interests of Christ's kingdom. Her last words were, "Oh, Lord, let thy kingdom now fill this earth."

Mr. Wright has recently been ordained to the gospel ministry, and since Mr. Ayer's resignation sustains the responsibilities of pastor of the Church.

CASS LAKE STATION.

Rev. Mr. Barnard and wife, after having spent nearly a year in a visit to the States, recruiting their health, and preparing and publishing books in the Ojibwa tongue to aid them in their future labor, have returned to this station. Mr. Barnard's labors in this country were only less arduous than while at the Mission. Owing to the impossibility of finding printers who knew anything of the Ojibwa tongue, he, although previously entirely unacquainted with the business, was constrained by his desire to facilitate the work, to set the type himself.

Mr. J. D. Fisher and wife, and Mr. Francis Spease accompanied Mr. Barnard on his return to the Indian country. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher will remain at this station as teachers and assistants, and Mr. Spease will act in the capacity of farmer, either at this station, or at one just commenced at Lake Winnipec. What additions, if any, have been made to the little Church have not been reported. Mr. Wright, who had charge of the Church during Mr. Barnard's absence, wrote to the Secretary sometime since: "There has never been a time since the commencement of the Mission, when there was more evidence of the presence of the Spirit of God than the present." And again, "The religious state of this people seems to be more interesting at this time than ever before." The children in the school have made rapid improvement, and although it is now but about three years since the station was established, many of them can read well in any book printed in their language. A Sabbath school of about twenty scholars has been commenced there.

A general improvement in this band is quite manifest; several families have built houses, and seem quite disposed to settle down; increased attention is given to the cultivation of their grounds, and in the language of Mr. Bardwell, they have done as well as could be expected of such a people. This station has derived much advantage from the aid of a young Indian girl, who has proved herself to be a good interpreter, not only giving the exact sense of the missionary teacher, but often illustrating the idea advanced, in a manner that has won the highest admiration of the Mission.

The new station at Lake Winnipec, the desire for which was mentioned in our last report, has been commenced, and the services of James Tanner, a half-breed interpreter, have been secured. Mr. Adams and Mr. Spencer will remove from the Cass Lake station to Lake Winnipec. This location is thought to be a more favorable one than Cass Lake. This band were very urgent to have the Mission established, and the chief has assigned for it a very good section of land about two miles square.

The gradual improvement of our Western States and Territories furnish some facilities to our missionaries in reaching their stations, and some mitigation of the hardships which they formerly endured. It cannot however, be said that they serve God with that which costs them nothing. In going from the highest point of navigation to their station, they still have to pass through a wholly uninhabited country a distance of 600 or 800 miles. Their only means of travel is an open canoe, which is their abode by night and day, except when they pass the portages, as they must occasionally do on foot, or encamp by night in the open air on the earth. In the report of their latest winter journey from one station to another in the furtherance of their work, or to the settlements for Mission supplies. the brethren speak of nights spent in the open air, wrapped only in the blankets they carried with them, and the thermometer ranging from zero, until the frozen mercury, in more than one instance, had ceased to indicate the degree of cold. Frozen feet and hands are the consequences of such exposure. In this connection we cannot forpear making a short extract from Mr. Bardwell's account of his late journey with Mr. and Mrs. Barnard and family, in their return to their field of labor, that the supporters of this Mission may understand something of the hardships their missionaries are called to endure. "We proceeded by a range of small lakes, rivers and portages to Leech Lake, spending the Sabbath on the bank of a small lake at the head waters of Pine River. In crossing portages and passing up small rivers, we suffered much from mosquitoes and flies. We crossed one portage of about six miles, the warmest day I think we had, during the summer. Mrs. Barnard walked those six miles in about two hours and a half, except here and there a few rods, where the mud and water were so deep that she could not wade through without getting in over her boots, when she had to be carried. I carried little Emma in my arms all the way, and an umbrella in my hand to keep off the scorching rays of the sun. My hands were so confined that it was difficult to keep off the mosquitoes and flies. She suffered much. The flies would crawl up under her bonnet, and bite her neck and head, so that her hair all around her neck and back part of her head, was completely matted down with blood from the bite of the flies. Brother Barnard and Mr. Spease carried Ellen by turns, and some of the way she ran on foot. She, with the rest, had her share of suffering. One of her ears was filled with clotted blood from the bite of the flies, but they stood the journey remarkably well, and bore their suffering with a good degree of fortitude and patience. Sister Barnard endured the walk well, but I often wished that some of those " women who are at ease in Zion," " who are so tender and delicate that they dare not adventure to set their feet upon the ground," were obliged to walk by her side for a few miles. Alas! how little the mass of Christ's professed followers, male or female, know of real, practical self-denial for his sake! Ye that live in luxury and ease, contemplate that dear sister with her little ones, tender and delicate and but recently to all human appearance upon the very borders of the grave; behold them covered with their own blood, traveling under the scorching rays of the sun by day, and camping out upon the ground by night, as they wend their way through the lonely wilderness, to their solitary home among the red men of the forest, that they may break to them the bread of life; and say, shall they be sustained? Shall they have your sympathies, your prayers, and a portion of your substance, or are they worthy to receive only some of your cast-off garments?"

The commencement of a new station at Eake Winnipec, will require an addition of some $600 to the appropriations for this Mission, but the friends of Christ will not regard this demand a large one, when they consider that two families, and one single man, a farmer, have been added to the Mission to enable them to carry out their plans.

Our missionaries, as heretofore for economy of expenditure, and for an example to win the Indian from that indolence, which is alleged to be one of the besetting sins of all red men, have continued to engage in much manual labor. They have cultivated their own lands, "packed" their goods on their own backs, paddled their own cances, or borne them across the portages, sawed their own lumber, either alone or aided by the Indians, whom in turn they have assisted in plowing their lands, and building their houses, that thus they might induce them to cultivate the soil, quit their roving lives, and apply themselves to the cultivation of those arts of civilization, which facilitate the progress of the gospel among them.

CANADA MISSIONS.
erstburgh. Missionary, Rev. I. J. Rice. [Mt. Hope, Mr

Amherstburgh. Missionary, Rev. I. J. Rice. [Mt. Hope, Mr. J. S. Brooks, Mrs. F. C. Brooks, now removed from the Mission.]

In our last Annual Report it was announced that none of the missions or missionaries in Canada, with which our Society have anything to do, were under the control of any missionary body in this country. The funds sent to them were those contributed directly for "Canada Missions," or some individual connected with them. In October last the Rev. I. J. Rice and Mr. and Mrs. Brooks, who had previously made application to the Executive Committee, were taken under the care of the Society, with the understanding that it should assume no pecuniary responsibility beyond the amount received by the Treasurer for their benefit, and the proceeds of any property conveyed by either of them to the Society. Under these regulations, nearly all the funds contributed for the Canada Missions, have been paid over to one of these.

As in previous years the Rev. Hiram Wilson shared largely in the funds passing through the hands of our Treasurer for the Canada Missions, and during the last year has received very little, if any, besides that contributed directly for him, it is proper that the reason should be stated in our Annual Report. Early in 1848, a Sub-Committee from the Executive Committee had an interview with Mr. Wilson, in reference to a proposition made by him to place himself under the care of the Association, to labor as its missionary during a part of each year, the remainder of his time to be employed in promoting the interests of Dawn Institute. The Committee would have been glad to secure Mr. Wilson's undivided energies in executing their plans in behalf of the colored people of Canada. He did not feel at liberty to place his whole time under the control of the Committee; and they, without undertaking to decide upon the expediency of his laboring in an agency for the Institute, were unwilling to assume a divided or joint responsibility with them, or any other body. They accordingly reported to the Executive Committee that Mr. Wilson was not prepared to make any engagement with the Committee which would not permit him to devote one half of his time to the interests of Dawn Institute, and they therefore recommended that his proposal should not be acceded to. From that time the Committee have devoted the greater part of the funds entrusted to them for the Canada Missions, to the support of those who had placed themselves under their care. We understand that Mr. Wilson has now no connection with the Institute at Dawn, but is laboring wholly as a self sustaining missionary among the colored people of Canada, preaching to and teaching them as the opportunity is afforded. He will need aid from the friends of the fugitive. Our Treasurer will forward money to him at the wish of the donors.

Sometime in November last, Mr. and Mrs. Brooks were joined at Mt. Hope Mission by Miss Mary Teall, of Albany, N. Y. She was fitted out by the friends of the cause in Albany, and the Female Missionary Society connected with the State-street Baptist Church of that city. Miss Teall still remains at the Mission.

In March last, Mr. and Mrs. Brooks reported to the Committee that application had been made to them to have their school established as a government school, and that the more intelligent colored men whom they had consulted approved of its being done. The advantages proposed to be gained by it were, the better protection of property, the disarming of the opposition that existed to "Yankee schools," and the free admission of colored children to the government school, even if the time should come, as was probable, when the whites should have the majority. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks also intimated to the Committee that the time was near at hand when they should no longer need aid from the Seciety.

Early in June they informed the Executive Committee that a large number of the families of their settlement, having opportunity to dispose of their property, and to purchase more advantageously elsewhere, had deermined to remove to another district. This would effect such a change in their school, that it could be left without detriment to the sole care of Miss Teall. They accordingly offered themselves to the Committee for missionaries at Kaw-Mendi.

In August they were both appointed to the Mendi Mission, and as has been stated in the report of that Mission, they expect to sail from this country early in October.

The station where Mr. Rice is was, at the last reports, in a prosperous condition. The presence of the Lord was so manifestly with them, and Mr. Rice's spirit so burdened with care for the spiritual interests of the people, that religious meetings have been multiplied, and for two months he had been in meetings every evening but one. As he was daily occupied in the duties of his school, which numbered about 60 scholars, his labors were very arduous. The fruits of this special effort are not reported.

SANDWICH ISLANDS MISSION.

Makawao, E. Maui. Missionaries, Rev. J. S. Green and Mrs. Green. The Annual Letter received from this Mission bears date, Feb'y. 27, 1849, and has already been published in the American Missionary. A few topics embraced in it require to be noticed in this Report.

The church to which Mr. Green ministers has been blessed with the presence of the Holy Spirit, and, on the first Sabbath in January, some forty-five individuals were added to their number. Several of these were teachers, and others were members of the Sabbath School, and had there been instructed for several years, and for them much prayer had been made that they might be gathered into the fold of the great and good Shepherd. The day was one of great spiritual enjoyment to the missionary and his people.

The great mortality which during the last autumn and winter decimated the population of the Sandwich Islands, carried off eighty from the field occupied by Mr. Green. Until this sickness commenced, the schools were in a prosperous condition. During the year they had been increasing in numbers and efficiency. A number of children, who in previous years had been drawn away from the schools by papal influence, had returned, and at the fall examination 800 pupils were reported. The Sabbath Schools were very interesting—the Bible was read year after year in course, and many portions of it committed to memory. Great encouragement was received from this, and the hope was entertained that the children would continue to go forward until they became prepared for posts of usefulness. The breaking out of the measles prostrated the schools, and for a long time neither teachers nor pupils were able to do anything. At the date of Mr. Green's letter the schools were being resuscitated at Makawao, and elsewhere on the Islands.

The English school taught by Mr. Green was continued throughout the year. This school meets but once a week, yet those who have been constant in their attendance are reported to have made respectable improvement in their knowledge of the English language. An exercise in Theology, Hawaiian grammar and Church History form a part of the course of instruction in this school. It is closed with a lesson from the Bible, exhortation and prayer.

Concerning the state of the church, Mr. Green writes :- " As a church, I am fully of the opinion that there is as much consistent piety as in most churches of my acquaintance in the United States. Not that they will, in every respect, compare with Elders and leading devoted men among you, who have always enjoyed religious instruction, and have many of them been teachers and superintendents in your Sabbath Schools. This it would be unreasonable to expect so soon after they had been put in . possession of the word of God. That Christians of the Sandwich Islands. who, some twenty-five years since, were enveloped in a darkness that might be felt, who were gross and stupid idolaters, addicted to all the vices that disgrace human nature, and trodden to the earth by the iron foot of oppression, should, in such a short space of time, become wakeful, intelligent freemen, and in every respect pure and enlightened and consistent Christians, would be an anomaly in the history of the Church of Christ. That they should be all of this, is the earnest desire of my heart. and the desire, I trust, of every, pastor on the Islands. That many of them are aiming to become thus, I believe; and I rejoice also to add, that some at least, ' forgetting those things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The experiment made at Makawao, under Mr. Green's supervision, in the sale of the public lands, so as to allow the people to become proprietors of the soil, has been successful, and its influence is quite salutary. Lands are new being sold to all who wish, and all may soon have little homes of their own. This is regarded as an important movement in favor of the people. Before it was secured Mr. Green said, "if the people do obtain the right of soil in fee simple, there is some hope that the nation will be saved. If they do not obtain lands, I have no hope that the nation, as such, will long exist."

The oppression formerly practiced by the chiefs, such as is common in all barbarous nations, is here giving way before the light and influence of Christianity. The monopoly of the land is being yielded. A constitution and written code of laws have been given to the people, to which additions are made year by year as needed, and their rights are being respected more and more by their rulers.

Many years since Mr. Green commenced the effort of making the Mission at Makawao a self-supporting one. He relinquished the aid of the Society that had previously sustained him, took the oath of allegiance to the Hawaiian government, and threw himself on the support of his church and congregation, with the full expectation of providing with his own hands what might be lacking in the contributions of his people. The experiment has been successful. He sustains to our Society relations more like those of a Home Missionary than a Foreign one. The aid we have contributed to him the last year has been very little, notwithstanding, owing to the sickness at the Islands, he has received less money from the people in the shape of a salary than before. We have now an application for a little aid, which will be sent to him by the first opportunity.

Hereafter we hope his people will enjoy what they have not before enjoyed, the stimulus afforded by the example of the neighboring churches, In past years they have stood alone among the churches of the Islands in their effort to sustain the institutions of religion without foreign aid. while their neighboring churches were sustained almost wholly by it. It is quite commendatory that they gave so freely, to the extent of their ability, in contributing to their pastor's support. We are gratified in being able to state that the missionaries of the American Board, with the full approbation of the Prudential Committee of that body, are about to imitate the example of Mr. Green. They will, like him, take the oath of allegiance to the government of the Islands, and thus identify themselves with the people. We hope the example of all these churches will be mutually edifying, and that they will provoke each other to love and good works.

HOME MISSIONS.

In this department of labor the Executive Committee have continually kept in mind the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Association. which directed them to maintain Home Missions so far as the funds entrusted to them for that purpose, and their own judgment of individual applications and cases would allow. In many cases of individual application they have granted only a part of the sum which the necessities of the case seemed actually to demand, and yet they have exceeded the contributions made to this specific department. Besides the city missionary, and the colporteur who is charged with giving Bibles to the slaves in Kentucky, who are provided for by special contributions, 17 missionaries have been aided in the Home department, and the aggregate of appropriations voted them is nineteen hundred dollars. Six of these are laboring in Ohio, four in Wisconsin, one in each of the states of Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, New York and Kentucky, and one in Canada West. Of the six who have been aided in Ohio, one has preached during a part of the year toeight different congregations composed mostly of Germans. Four others have been connected with the Presbyteries composing the Free Synod of Ohio, and a fifth has recently been united to that body. The churches that compose these Presbyteries have withdrawn their connection from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, because of the connection of that body with churches of slaveholders. Some of these churches had been receiving aid from the A. H. M. Society and still needed it; but they saw, or thought they saw, a manifest inconsistency in their receiving aid from a society, of which bodies of slaveholders are not only auxiliaries but constituent parts, and whose missionaries were planting and building up churches into which slaveholders were freely admitted. Accordingly they withdrew from the patronage of that society and made application to us. As this Synod had become auxiliary to the Association in missionary matters, an arrangement was entered into with their churches, by which they were to make two collections each year for our funds, one for Home Missions and one for Foreign Missions; and the Executive Committee agreed to expend within the bounds of each Presbytery, a sum equal to twice the amount of its collections for Home Missions, if, in the judgment of the Presbytery, that sum was necessary to sustain the institutions of the gospel among them. Under this arrangement appropriations have been voted in aid of four of the ministers of this Synod, to the aggregate amount of $475. The Executive Committee will not be charged with ministering to the extravagances of their missionaries, when it is stated, that including the amount received from our Society, many of them have less than $250 per annum each, on which to support themselves and families.

One missionary in Ohio, who ministers to 4 churches composed mostly of Germans, has met with the difficulty so common in German churches. arising from the manner in which their members are received. Many of the communicants having become connected with their respective churches by the rite of confirmation, after having been instructed in the Catechism and the doctrines of the church, are considered members in full, and entitled to partake of the Lord's Supper. They claim that their children shall be admitted in the same way, even though neither the children themselves, nor their parents for them, have any belief that they have been converted. The practical difficulty, in this particular case, is only with those whom he finds already in the churches to which he ministers, for his uniform practice is to refuse admission to any but those who give . credible evidence of a change of heart. This uncompromising course is having a salutary influence, and most of those, 16 in number, whom he has received into the church, are young people, and give cheering evidence that they are born again.

Mr. Clarke, who has labored in Canada West, has preached a part of the time to a congregation of colored people.

A schedule showing the results of the labor of the Home missionaries of our Society makes a part of this report. It will be seen, however, that the returns are very imperfect. Steps will be taken to secure full and uniform reports from all the missionaries another year.

The largest number of hopeful conversions reported by any one missionary, is 40; the largest number reported as received into the church on profession of faith, is 16, and by letter 43.

The Executive Committee have, as instructed, examined into the claims and condition of Oregon, California, and other recently acquired territories as prospective fields for future Missions. Early in the year this subject was referred to a committee, who have had it under consideration. The field is regarded as a very important one, demanding missionaries of the highest order, men who shall hold no compromise with the sins of slaveholding and caste, and who will teach that the proper discharge of our duties as citizens and neighbors is a necessary part of religion. Intelligence is expected from some of our friends there, which may determine the Committee to enter that field. They are not yet prepared for it. Costly as a Mission there would be, the Committee, judging from the correspondence of the Society, are sanguine in the hope that when the proper time shall come, the funds to sustain it will be easily obtained.

SIAM MISSION.

Bangkok—Siam.—Missionaries under appointment. Rev. D. B. Bradley, M. D., Rev. L. B. Lane, M. D., Prof. J. Silsby, Mrs. Bradley, Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Silsby. Total, 6.

At the last Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association, a resolution was passed approving the action of the Executive Committee, in the establishment of a Mission at Siam, and the acceptance of the services of our esteemed brethren, Messrs. Bradley and Caswell, and expressing the confidence of the Association in the wisdom and piety of these missionaries. Just twenty-four hours before that meeting assembled at Hartford, Mr. Caswell, at Bangkok, ceased from all earthly labors and entered into rest. Such are the uncertainties of life, and the disappointments with which we meet, even in our most studied efforts to promote the work of the Lord. In this event, the Mission at Bangkok has met with a severe, an almost irreparable loss. Another man of equal piety and equal learning may doubtless be found to supply his place; but many years must pass before such an one can obtain the knowledge of the language and customs of the Siamese which he possessed. He entered into the service of our Society, July 1, 1848, and died September 25th. In the sentiment of the following extract from the minutes of the Executive Committee, we have no doubt that the Society will cordially unite: "In the midst of our affliction, on account of this sudden bereavement, we desire to record our gratitude to God that we were permitted to sustain our departed brother even for so short a period, and would express our undiminished confidence that the great Head of the Church will sanctify this afflictive event to the good of his friends, of the Committee, and of the Mission cause."

The American Board having resolved to relinquish their Mission at Bangkok, with which Messrs. Caswell and Bradley were formerly connected, negotiations were commenced with their Prudential Committee, which resulted in the purchase by the Executive Committee of all the Mission property connected with the Board's Mission at Bangkok, except the library and school apparatus. This property consisted of two Teak wood dwelling-houses and a chapel, with all their appurtenances; two printing presses; a small hand printing press; two standing presses; a floating house dispensary; a small hospital building, with all the medicines still there; one book-bindery and one type foundry, connected with the presses, with all the tools and furniture of these establishments. The whole cost of this purchase was sixteen hundred dollars; and although there was connected with it more of some kinds of property, than the Executive Committee thought necessary for the prosperity of the Mission, vet in view of the fact that the essential articles could not be procured from any other quarter, except at a very much greater expense, and that a part of this could not be obtained without the whole, they feel confident that, in making this purchase, they consulted the prosperity of the Mission, and the best interests of the cause. The property thus purchased originally cost the American Board five thousand or six thousand dollars. As the time of Dr. Bradley's return to the Mission was then uncertain, with the consent of the Prudential Committee, their only remaining missionary there, Mr. Hemenway, was requested to take charge of the Mission property and remain at the Mission, at our expense, until the arrival there of Dr. B. and his fellow laborers. This he consented to do, and the Mission has since been under his charge.

Two missionaries with their wives are under appointment for this field, and the Committee hope that they, and Dr. Bradley and wife, may be able to sail for Singapore and Bangkok during the month of October.

The agency of Dr. Bradley in collecting funds, although generally successful, has not yielded as much as the Committee hoped. They supposed that the churches of New England and elsewhere would be opened for

Dr. Bradley, and that he would be permitted to urge the claims of the heathen in general, and of the Siamese in particular, upon the sympathies and charities of the Church, and that individual christians would thus be permitted to hear for themselves, and send their benefactions to the heathen through such channels as they should then prefer. In this they have been disappointed. Many pastors of churches, fearing that Dr. Bradley's efforts would act injuriously upon the interests of other missionary societies, have either denied him the privilege of presenting the missionary cause in their churches, or granting this, have refused to sanction his soliciting funds for this Mission, either publicly, or from house to house. Wherever he has been heard he has been enabled to give a favorable impulse to efforts in behalf of Missions, which has resulted not only in enlarged contributions, but in the application of a much greater number of men for appointments to this field, than the Executive Committee think it wise to send.

Another result of Dr. Bradley's labors in this country has been to create a deep interest in favor of Christian colonies, and to impress apon mechanics, artisans and business men in general, a sense of their obligation to the heathen—and to lead them to inquire why they should not go forth bearing the gospel to destitute portions of the earth, and carry with them the arts of civilised and Christian society. In this the Executive Committee greatly rejoice, and although they are not certain that the American churches are prepared for such movements on a large scale, they are fully convinced that they must be entered upon and prosecuted with the same devotedness that we demand in a missionary of the cross, and with the same vigor that business men manifest in the affairs of this life. When this is done it will be easy for missionaries to educate their children without sending them away from their parents, and they will become, as they ought, identified with the interests of the people whom they would bless.

The decease of Mr. Caswell, and the consequent return of Mrs. Caswell to this country, have required a large expenditure of funds. These events have been brought about by the providence of God, and were entirely beyond the control of the Committee. He who has styled Himself the widow's God, and the Father of the fatherless, will doubtless secure the re-imbursement of the whole to his cause.

City Missionary-Rev. Charles B. Ray.

The labors of Mr. Ray are confined almost exclusively to the colored population of the city of New York. By an understanding with the Executive Committee, he has been permitted to devote the greater portion of his labors for the past year to the church which he had previously gathered. They have not been blessed with any special outpouring of the Spirit of God, yet a good degree of prosperity, external and internal, has been granted to them. The number of permanent and regular members of the congregation has been increased. The church, at the date of Mr. Ray's report, consisted of thirty-five members. During the summer months the Sabbath School has contained more than forty scholars; in the winter the number was less. General missionary labor, in the street, and from house to liouse, although receiving less attention than in former years, has not been neglected, and the Colored Home has been regularly visited as heretofore. This year his duties will be more those of a missionary in general.

In concluding his Report, Mr. Ray calls the attention of the Committee, and the patrons of the Society to a prominent obstacle in the way of the progress of religion among the colored population of a large city. Excluded by a cruel prejudice from the edifices erected for religious worship by their white brethren, or driven into a disgraceful corner, they have been compelled in self respect to seek places of worship, where, separated from the prejudices which have hitherto oppressed them and prevented the progress of the gospel, they might worship God and cultivate their religious affections without opposition, and free from the contumelies under which they have suffered. In a few instances only have they been able to accomplish this. They cannot like their brethren among the whites, even when possessed of equal wealth, secure an eligible location for their assembling together. The prejudice that meets them in what ought to be to them a sanctuary, follows them as they seek to purchase or rent a place in which to worship God. In the church it manifests itself by shutting them up in a corner; in the street by enhancing the price of property already almost beyond their reach, until they are entirely unable to procure it, or by raising objections to having locations they might select occupied by colored congregations. It is respectfully submitted whether an impartial Christianity does not require that we should do more for this prescribed class, and that all missionary bodies should so direct their labors, as to break down the prejudice which strengthens the bonds of the enslaved, and crushes the upward tendencies of the free, Colporteur and Slaves' Bible Fund.

Mr. Gillaspie has been employed a large portion of the year as a colporteur in Kentucky, and especially instructed to supply the slaves within his reach with the Bible. His support is contributed by the Youth's Missionary Society belonging to the Sullivan street Congregational Church of New York, auxiliary to our Society.

Mr. Giltaspie is a member of Mr. Fee's church, the only Presbyterian or Congregational church in Keutucky, known to us, whose covenant excludes the slaveholder. Mr. Fee has a general oversight of Mr. Gillaspie's labors.

In answer to inquiries and instructions from the Corresponding Secretary of this Society, in relation to giving a Bible or Testament to every slave that can read, and to pass by no family without inquiry and supply, Mr. Fee says, "I can assure you that he never passes by a slave or a family." In that part of Ken ucky the slave population is comparatively sparse, hence the number supplied with the Bible is not great. One of the most important objects gained by Mr. Gillaspie's labors is, in Mr. Fee's estimation, the free conversation which he has in almost every family, on the sinfulness of slavery, and the duty of separating entirely from it in all Christian organizations.

During a part of the year, Mr. Henry Bibb, formerly himself a slave, has been successfully employed in collecting funds for this object.

Mr. Fee has been requested to secure the services of other colporteurs, that the work may be extended.

CONCLUSION.

In concluding their third Annual Report, the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association wish to express their continued confidence in the correctness of the distinctive principles sustained in the Address of the Convention that formed our Society, and embolied in our Constitution; and in the importance of their practical application in the work of Missions. Regarding slavery as a sin, and abhorrent to every Christian feeling, the observations of the years that have passed since our organization have but matured our opposition to it, and given permanence to the conviction that all who have any voluntary connection with it, walk disorderly, and should be precluded from admission to Christian fellowship in the church of God.

By this it is not meant that the existence of a legal relation constitutes him to whom it pertains a sinner, but believing slavery to be a sin, a sin of an aggravated character, we hold that wherever it exists there must be guilt: While the great majority of those who sustain the relation of master to slaves do it voluntarily, and for their own convenience, we are compelled to look upon every person sustaining it as giving prima facie evidence of guilt, and to require of him when he presents himself at the door of the church, as an applicant for admission to Christian fellowship, that he should give the most satisfactory evidence that in the relation he is involuntary, and is ready and resolved to surrender it, and abnegate the privileges which it confers upon him. If he sustains the relation voluntarily, even though it be with the slave's full and enlightened consent, and by his request, we would urge him first to go and remove the stumbling block which his sustaining this relation lays in the way of others, and then come and offer his vows in God's house.

Having this conviction, the Committee, as the Executive of the Association, cannot, will not, sustain or give countenance to a missionary who will receive slaveholders as members of the Christian Church, without requiring of them public and satisfactory proof, the slave himself being permitted to judge, that they are involuntary in sustaining the legal relation.

As with the slaveholder in pagan lands, just awakened from his ignorance and sin, so, and much more, with the enlightened, but persisting slaveholder at home, we cannot, in an official or individual character. do anything that even by implication can be considered as sanctioning his claim to fellowship in God's house. Hence we cannot receive him as a member of our Association, nor solicit his donations for our treasury, when by so doing we should encourage him to hope that we can treat him as a Christian brother. What is here said of slaveholding, is true, with the proper change of terms, of caste, and of all similar sins. These principles and this course of action, the Executive Committee believe to be contained in and indicated by the constitution of our Society. They were believed to be correct when the organization was entered upon, and thus stated, must, it seems to us, command the approval of every enlightened Christian. The doctrine that man can hold property in the body, soul and spirit of his fellow men, to use them for his own convenience, is too repulsive to find a place in any free and enlightened mind. It is believed that the abstract truths here presented are acknowledged as such by the officers of most of our benevolent societies, and yet it is greatly to be lamented that the exceptions admitted by some of them sweep away the general rule.

Some of the doctrines of our Association, as stated in the Address of the Albany Convention, are, that "Christianity wages an uncompromising warfare against all forms of sin, public as well as private;—social, political and organic, as well as individual; sins sustained, authorized, legalized, and even required and enjoined by civil rulers, as well as sins forbidden and punished by them; and ministers of the gospel, Christians, and Christian churches, should themselves abstain from, and reprove in others, the one class of these sins as fully as the other." That "No teacher of Christ's religion may lower down its high standard, nor compromise its unbending claims, nor shun to unfold all its doctrines, to declare all its prohibitions and precepts, or to insist upon all its duties, through a compliance with the requisitions of civil rulers, or the wishes of the people. They are never to be partial in the law, nor shun to declare the whole counsel of God."

"That conversion, new birth, or regeneration, which entitles to Christian fellowship and membership, we conceive to be a 'great moral transformation, in which singers of every description break off their sins by righteousness in heart and life, and no longer indulge in them. Whenever they become the subjects of such a transformation, under those faithful Christian instructions which should both precede and accompany their admission to church privileges, it may be expected that ' the slave master' will ' be prepared to break the bonds of the slave, the oppressive ruler led to dispense justice to the subject, the proud Brahmin to embrace fraternally the man of low caste, and the polygamist to obey the seventh commandment, and live with only one lawfully espoused wife. We therefore account it a perversion of Christian institutions, to receive into the churches, without 'fruits meet for repentance,' the proud Brahmin, remaining proud, and refusing to embrace fraternally the man of low caste-the oppressive ruler, still remaining oppressive, and not dispensing justice to the subject, the polygamist refusing to conform his life to the law of Christian chastity, and the slave master refusing to desist from his 'violation of the natural rights of man,' by ' breaking the bonds of the slave.' And the practice of receiving such flagrant, habitual, and determined transgressors into the churches, under the idea that they are converted, while refusing to abandon their cherished and darling sins, and with the vain hope that the privileges of church membership and the special ordinances of the Gospel,-the baptisms and the sacraments-will work out the great moral transformation afterwards, we hold to be a glaring departure from the principles and the usages of evangelical Christians, tending to foster the grossest delusions, and involving some of the worst elements of the superstitions and corruptions of Romanism itself."

The friends of Missions assembled at Albany, believing that these principles did not find a full and adequate exemplification in any of the existing missionary organizations, united to form the American Missionary Association, and three smaller organizations that heartily embraced these truths, immediately united with it. The men who formed the new Society withdrew from the missionary bodies with which they had been connected, under the influence of a painful conviction, that in relation to slavery and caste, they had failed to make application of these truths.

After the lapse of three years, it is a proper subject of inquiry, how far in the progress of truth the application of these principles has obtained in other Societies. That there has been progress we are gratified in being permitted to acknowledge. In Mission churches, and Mission schools of far distant and heathen lands, after a vain attempt to destroy the spirit and practice of caste by the preaching of the gospel, while permitting its existence in the relations of both church and school, it has been found that the purity and prosperity of religion demanded that all who would enjoy the privileges of education, or the fellowship of the church, should immediately disregard and trample on its cruel prejudices.

The correctness of the principles enunciated in this Report, so far as they relate to the character of the system of slavery, and to the duty of missionaries to require of every member who is involved in it, proof that he is free from its guilt, before they allow his title to a place among the followers of Christ, is acknowledged in other large and influential bodies. We do not find, however, among the missionary organizations of the United States, except in the Baptist denomination, and the "Reformed Presbyterian Church," any society engaged in the work of Foreign Missions, that can be prevailed upon to adopt the rule that they will not sustain Mission or Mission churches who will not make a practical application of these principles in the admission of their church members. This statement is made with no disposition to assail other bodies, or to cripple their power to do good. It is but a relation of the circumstances which led to the formation of our Society, and which now demand its continued and permanent existence.

The providences of God, co-operating with what we sacredly believe to be the influences of his Holy Spirit, in leading Christian abolitionists to desire to see the work of Missions carried forward in such a way as to build up a pure Christianity, wherever its professed ambassadors should be sent, and at the same time, in its reflex influence, to purify the church at home and work deliverance for the bondman, have led our Society almost in a way that we knew not, until we are compelled to believe that God has called us to enlist for life in this work. His call we dare not disobey.

For the blessing bestowed on our labors during the last year we have rejoiced, and will rejoice: while we unite in thanksgiving to God, and ascribe to the bestowment of His favor whatever has been accomplished through us in the promotion of the interests of His cause. Much however, yet remains to be done. A beginning has scarcely been made .--The slave is yet in his chains, the name of God is blasphemed because of the connection of His professed people with the system; yet very few are willing to deny Christian fellowship to those who dishonor God by persisting in the practice of this sin. Much therefore remains to be done in our own land. We cannot, however, forget that in other lands not merely millions, but hundreds of millions are perishing for lack of knowledge. As fast almost as the beating of the pulse, they are sinking in the grave, with the corruption of heathenism upon them, having none to point out to them the way of life. The love of Christ then should constrain us to go forward. The honor of God, the interests of his Church, the purity of religion, the welfare of the world, the hope of being made agents in the salvation of some, all call upon us for a renewed and more unreserved consecration of all that we have and are to this blessed work.

CONSTITUTION

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

ART. I. This Society shall be called "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION."

ART. II. The object of this Society shall be to send the Gospel to those portions of our own and other countries which are destitute of it, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Any person of Evangelical sentiments, who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the Society.*

ART. IV. This Society shall meet annually, in the month of September, for the election of officers and the transaction of other business, at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee.

ART. V. The annual meeting shall be constituted of the regular officers and members of the Society at the time of such meeting, and of delegates from Churches, local missionary societies, and other co-operating bodies—each body being entitled to one representative.

ART. VI. The officers of the Society shall be a President, Vice-Presidents, a Recording Secretary, a Corresponding Secretary, Treasurer, two Auditors, and an Executive Committee of twelve, of which the Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer shall be ex-officio members.

ART. VII. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds; the appointing, counseling, sustaining, and dismissing (for just and sufficient reasons) missionaries and agents; the selecting of missionary fields; and in general, the transaction of all such business as usually appertains to the Executive Committees of Missionary and other benevolent societies; the Committee to exercise no ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the missionaries, and its doings to be subject always to the revision of the annual meeting, which by a reference mutually chosen, and whose decision shall be final, shall always entertain the complaints of any aggrieved agent or missionary.

The Executive Committee shall have authority to fill all vacancies occurring among the officers between the regular annual meetings; to apply, if they see fit, to any State Legislature for an act of incorporation; to fix the compensation, where any is given, of all officers, agents, missionaries, or others in the employment of the Society; to make provision, if any, for disabled missionaries, and for the widows and children of such as are deceased; and to call in all parts of the country, in their discretion, special and general conventions of the friends of missions, with a view to the diffusion of the missionary spirit, and the general and vigorous promotion of the missionary work.

Five members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VIII. This Society, in collecting funds, in appointing officers, agents, and missionaries, and in selecting fields of labor, and conducting the missionary work, will endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery, by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequitted labor, or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow beings as slaves.

ART. IX. Churches and other local missionary bodies, agreeing to the principles of this Society, and wishing to appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, shall be entitled to do so through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. X. No amendment shall be made in this Constitution without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present at a regular annual meeting; nor unless the proposed amendment has been submitted to the previous meeting, or to the Executive Committee in season to be published by them (as it shall be their duty to do, if so submitted) in the regular official notification of the meeting.

LIFE MEMBERSHIP.

At the Annual Meeting of the Society, Sept. 1847, the subject of Life Membership was referred to the Executive Committee in the following resolution:

Resolved, That any person may become a life member of the Society, on conditions that may be prescribed by the Executive Committee, agreeably to the Constitution.

The Committee subsequently made the following provision:

Resolved, That "any person of evangelical sentiments, who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities and who contributes to the funds" of the Association the sum of thirty dollars, may thus become a life member of the Association.

By evangelical sentiments we understand, among others, a belief in the guilty and lost condition of all men without a Saviour; the Supreme Deity, incarnation and atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit; repentance, faith, and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul; and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and salvation of the righteour

MATTHEW III. 10.

Now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees; therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.

John, the harbinger of Christ, made this announcement. Sent to prepare the way of the Lord, he called on the people to repent, and to do works meet for repentance. He sought a thorough change. He taught that Messiah, who was soon to appear, would spare no evil; that he would make a more marked distinction between the precious and the vile, than had before been made. With his "fan he would thoroughly purge his floor; and gather his wheat into his garner; but would burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." He would not merely cut off some branches, more unseemly than others, from the trees which bore not good fruit; not merely "regulate existing evils," but exterminate them. The text, though figurative, expresses a very definite sentiment. The axe is the proper instrument for felling trees. When laid at their root, they are to be effectually removed. Whether trees represent men. principles, systems, or practices, the design of the text evidently is to show, that the trees which do not bear good fruit, wherever found, are to be destroyed; that whatever toleration had heretofore been given them was now to cease. Thus Paul said to the men of Athens, "The times of this ignorance, God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." The aw required the same moral character as the gospel. There was then the same way of forgiveness and acceptance with God, as at present. The gospel is a more explicit and full exhibition of the will and purpose of God, in regard to saving sinful men. It presents the impelling motives to holiness of heart and life in a more lucid and impressive manner.

Divinely appointed means are always adapted to the end sought; the remedy is suited to the disease.

Let us, then, understand the trees to represent existing moral evils—the axe, the truths contained in the Bible. Then first, there are many evils to be removed. Secondly, the truths contained in the Bible are the proper means for removing them. Thirdly, to effect their removal, these truths must be applied to the evils.

1. There are many evils to be removed. Among the first, the inordinate love of the world, the idolatry of wealth, takes rank. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God: whosoever, therefore, will be the friend of the world is the enemy of God." But what is this forbidden love of the world? The world is good, fitted to answer valuable purposes. To desire and seek it supremely is sinful and dangerous. To take a deeper interest in gaining it; to use more skill, enterprize, labor and zeal, for this purpose, than to become eminently holy; or than to advance the kingdom of Christ, to have men thoroughly converted and saved, is forbidden. When men are more extract of find and more ready to embrace an opportunity for a lucrative bargain, or a post of honor, or any worldly distinction, or pleasure, than to find an opportunity to contribute to promote the cause of truth and righteousness:

to enlighten the ignorant, to reform the wicked, to relieve the suffering, to comfort the afflicted, they have the forbidden love of the world. If they are not more willing to bestow skill, time, money, effort, according to their ability, to advance the cause of Christ, than for the purpose of getting property, they serve not God, but mammon. The love of God dwells not in them. No matter what they may sometimes think or feel, say or do; no matter how earnestly they may talk on religion, how fervently they may pray, or what princely offerings they may, at times, make for valuable objects; if they are not more strongly inclined, habitually, to do what they can for the salvation of men. than for the attainment of any secular good, they are not of Christ, but of the world. Yet where shall we not meet this inordinate worldliness? It is seen on 'change, at the counter, in the shop, the hall of legislation, the court of justice, in the groves of Academus, at the Castalian founts, and must it not be added, in the church? The author of the book called "Mammon" has proved, that "covetousness is the sin of the church." How true it is now. that men " seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's." How many more say, "Who will show us any good," than "Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us?"

Instead of bringing forth good fruit, this inordinate love of the world has produced that covetousness which is idolatry, heresy, deception, fraud, injustice, theft, robbery, murder, suicide. What iniquity may not claim affinity with this prolific source of wrong doing? "They that will be rich fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." But why should the riches, honor, or pleasures of the world so engross the minds of men. They have no intrinsic worth. What does a man need of a hundred thousand dollars, or of fifty, or twenty thousand? Neither he nor his family can use it for any of the needful purposes of life.

It is difficult to have riches and not trust in them. "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God?" The cares and perplexities attendant on wealth, prove a great hindrance to being saved. Riches induce men to neglect their spiritual welfure, tend to harden the heart, foster pride, ambition, luxury, self-indulgence, effeminacy, lasciviousness, and the spirit of caste, if not in those who accumulate, in those who inherit them. These, and their kindred vices counteract the genuine tendency of the gospel to save men. They make the humility and self-denial requisite to be followers of Christ and to inherit the kingdom of heaven, difficult in the extreme. If this love of the world were not a prevalent and tremendous evil, why such impressive representations of it, as we find in the account of the rich fool—the rich man and Lazarus—the young man, who came with such a serious inquiry to Christ, and yet like many, many others, parted with Christ rather than riches!

How much property beyond the amount included in the prayer of Agur, Prov. xxx. 7-9, one may acquire and retain till death, and then go to heaven, is a momentous inquiry. How much one may hold during life, and when children and relatives are well provided for, bequeath none to charitable objects, or to extend the kingdom of Christ, and yet be saved, is a very solemn question, which it may be of infinite importance to have rightly settled.

2. Superficial, incorrect views of truth and duty are prevailing evils. They are highly prejudicial to the spiritual and eternal interests of men. Whatever men persuade themselves to believe, is truth to them; and whatever they think is duty, is right for them. Instead of consulting the unerring, immutable, eternal standard of right and wrong, they consult their inclinations to learn what is true, and their convenience to learn what is right. Thus vague notions of right and wrong, atheism, infidelity, pantheism, transcendentalism, and their allied errors are received and propagated to an extent truly alarming.

Sound doctrinal views have a much more intimate and indissoluble connection with right affections and practice, than many suppose. A belief of the doctrines of the Bible lies at the foundation of all true religion. The Bible has a complete system of doctrines to be believed, of precepts to be obeyed, and of motives by which to be actuated in obeying. The doctrines are simply statements of facts; out of which all the commands proceed. God is a being of infinite perfection. Men are rational, moral agents. These are doctrines, but are only statements of facts. From them arise the obligation and the precept, to love God. Another doctrine is, men are sinners, which is only stating another fact. From this arises the command to repent-Christ is the only Mediator between God and men. Hence the duty of believing on him. So all the other duties, which we owe, either to God or man, have their origin in the doctrines. Obligation to obey any particular precent can neither be perceived, or felt, any further than the doctrines out of which the obligation arises are understood. How can one be convinced, that he ought to reverence, love, obey and submit to God, if he has no correct views of himself as a moral agent and of the character, law and government of Jehovah? What force will there be in the command to repent, given to one who does not know that he has sinned? Why should he feel bound to believe on Christ, as the only Mediator, if he knows not who he is, what he has done, what relations he sustains to sinners; or has essentially erroneous views of him! One great reason why so many pay no more regard to their immortal interests, is that they are either ignorant of the doctrines of the Bible, or have erroneous views of them. They see not their duty to obey, nor their guilt for not obeying, This ignorance, or error, or both, occasion much of the prevailing religion to be superficial, partial, fitful. It lacks depth, completeness, constancy. It is the religion of emotion, or form, rather than of principle. At times, it rises high: then sinks low, and so remains. The fallow ground of the heart was never thoroughly broken up. Convictions of sin were not sufficiently deep. They saw not how "exceeding broad was the commandment." They tasted not enough of "the wormwood and the gall" of having transgressed, to produce that hatred of sin, which shuns the very appearance of evil-nor had they such a view of "the breadth and length, and depth and height of the love of Christ," as to be " rooted and grounded in love." There are many stony and thorny ground hearers; and not a few, who, like the Pharisees, "pay tithe of mint, anise and cummin, but omit the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith." "The grace of God that bringeth salvation" teaches us, "that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." This is the only grace, by which men can be saved, and leads the subjects of it to perform their duties to God and men, to their bodies and souls, in a manner equally careful and strict.

But indistinct, unscriptural views of the greatness, excellence and glory of God, and the claims he has on them, lead to irreverence of his name, neglect of his worship, and disregard of his authority in general. Hence the lax notions and practices of many. For they have not learned that their obligation to love God with all the heart, mind and strength, is founded in the perfections of the divine character and the faculties of their mind. While God remains the same, and they have those faculties, their obligation cannot cease. Be their moral character or condition what it may, as long as they have the capacity to love God, and he continues worthy to be thus loved, they will be bound thus to love him.

Low thoughts of God lead to low thoughts of sin. Some have such mean thoughts of their Maker, that they deem the sufferings endured in this life an adequate punishment for sinning against him. They see not, that for transgressing his law, they deserve the damnation of hell. They degrade the Saviour. Unbelief appears no great evil. Their guilt for not embracing Christ seems small. Why, they are ready to ask, should that be a damning sin? Had they scriptural ideas of the exalted character of the adorable Redeemer, their unbelief would have a very different aspect. Unbelief rejects him, "whom God has set forth to be a proplitation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins, that he might be just and be the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." Unbelief practically slights and sets at naught "all the glory of his person, and all the love of the Father in sending him into the world, and all his unparalleled love in the whole work," which he came to accomplish.

Another evil of these superficial views, is men's trusting in their own righteousness. This leads them to put their sin-defiled performances in the place they should give the atonement of Christ. Instead of making "Christ all in all," they make nothing of him.

3. The prevalent doctrine of expediency produces much evil. It is always expedient to do right, but never to do wrong. "All things," said Paul, "are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient." In some circumstances, it may not be expedient to do certain things in themselves right. It was lawful for the Apostle to eat meat, but he might find himself so situated that it would not be expedient. The prevailing, false doctrine of expediency justifies men in being more concerned for their own wealth and safety, than for truth and duty. "It inquires what is politic rather than what is right; what is convenient rather than what is required." In effect, it denies the distinction between virtue and vice, and makes right and wrong to depend on circumstances. This is not always true. Some things are in themselves, intrinsically, in all conceivable circumstances, right. "To do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God," will eternally be right. No authority, no interest, no possible situation, in which a rational creature can be, will ever make either of them wrong. Some other things are, in themselves, intrinsically, in all pessible eircumstances, wrong. To be unjust, to be malignant, to walk proudly before God, will, in all supposable cases, be forever wrong. In the nature of things, it is not possible to make them right.

Yet are not the business transactions of men, nearly all conducted according to this corrupt principle? Who thinks, in making a bargain, that he is bound by the rule, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others?" or that, "let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth?" "All things whatsoever, ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." These directions are just as binding upon men, as the command, "Thou shalt not steal." They require, that in all matters of trade, each party should have the same regard to his neighbor's interest that he has to his own. Men are under the same obligation, in every exchange of property, to proceed according to these rules, that they are to obey the eighth commandment. Every farthing men gain by violating these directions, no more belongs to them, in the sight of God, than though they had stolen it.

In political concerns, scarcely any other principle, than this false expediency, is recognized, as admissible. Instead of asking what God requires, the question is, "what does the success of the party require?"

But the most deplorable evils result from the adoption of this principle in the concerns of religion. Truths, which the unrenewed, selfish, proud heart of man dislikes, which exalt Jehovah and show man his true character and position, are either kept out of sight, or so faintly presented, or are so enveloped in the flowers of rhetoric, that their force is lost. Men are not "pricked in the heart," because the naked point of the sword of the Spirit is not pressed upon it. In many creeds, sermons, prayers, and conversations, these truths have not the prominence, which they have in the Bible, or which the Puritan churches once gave them. Why is there such a disjoining of what God has united-dependence and free agency-necessity and liberty-divine sovereignty in selecting the heirs of salvation and human accountableness-the indispensable necessity of personal holiness and salvation by free grace? Why those efforts to divest the Bible of mystery, to explain away what is offensive, and bring out a system, not because honorable to God and sanctifying to the heart? Plainly, because it will be more popular? Tests of christian character are diminished, the standard of christian duty is lowered, till the distinction between the church and the world is nearly lost. Did not the world see some persons at the table of the Lord, how would they know that they belonged to the church? The early disciples of Christ imbibed his Spirit. Others "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." How far is this true of the mass of his professed followers now?

This doctrine has relaxed the discipline of the church. Instead of carrying out the true principles of the Bible, too often there is more concern to know how a contemplated measure will be received, whether men of property and influence will not be disaffected, than to know what God requires. There is more fear of some evil consequences than of sin, of certain men, than of God. Sin is suffered, lest, to rebuke it should make disturbance, and favor be lost. Purity is sacrificed to peace. Some doctrines of scripture are too offensive to be preached; some duties too self-denying to be urged, some sins too indelicate to be reproved. Thus immortal souls are rained, because some of those truths, which try mens' hearts, without loving which they cannot be truly reconciled to God, nor come into union with Christ, are not clearly stated, non earnestly and solemnly enforced. This doctrine is corrupting the church. It poisons her views and palsies her hands.

4. The manufacture, traffic, and use of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, produces evils of appalling magnitude. Long have their destructive effects been felt and mourned. The wasted property, impaired health, the disgrace and crime; the darkened intellect, seared conscience, withered sympathies, blasted hopes, the domestic wretchedness, the tender hearts broken, the valuable lives cut short, the benign influence of the gospel counteracted, which the various use of alchoholic drinks has caused, are evils beyond human comprehension. Who can tell the number of their miserable victims, who have shut themselves out of heaven, and plunged into the "fire that shall never be quenched." "Be not deceived; neither covetous, nor drunkards shall inherit the kingdom of God." No one uses intoxicating drinks without exposing himself to become a

5. Descrations of the Sabbath are ensnaring, but very pernicious evils. "The Sabbath was made for man." The due observance of it is conducive to every part of his well being. The law, enjoining its religious remembrance, God wrote upon the tables of stone, in the centre of the decalogue, to teach its perpetual obligation. The man, who pursues his ordinary occupation on the Sabbath, distrusts his Maker. He is unwilling to obey, lest he should suffer loss, or inconvenince. He thus brings the curse of God upon him. "For, if men will not keep the Sabbath, God will not keep them." The violation of this command leads to the violation of all others. Facts prove this to be true. Many a felon, at the place of execution, has confessed, that the first step in his career of vice, was profaming the Sabbath.

6. The evils of lewdness are without number. "The seventh commandment requires the preservation of our own and our neighbor's chastity in heart, speech and behaviour—and forbids all unchaste thoughts, words and actions." The physical and moral evils connected with this sin are incalculable. It destroys the body, pollutes the mind, prevents reformation, and pre-eminently fits, the soul for the agonies of endless despair. Of the strange woman, strange that any woman should be such, it is said, "Her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead. None that go unto her return again, neither take they hold of the paths of life. She hath cast down many wounded, yea, many strong men have been slain by her. Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death. He knowsth not that the dead are there, and that her guests are in the depths of hell."

7. Oppression, in its various forms, is productive of innumerable evils. The root of this tree is human depravity, and its branches extend in every direction. The rich oppress the poor, the strong the weak, the creditor the debtor, the buyer the seller, the seller the buyer, the employer the employed, and the reverse. There are honorable exceptions in all these cases. Purchasing at the lowest and selling at the highest rate; obtaining services for the least compensation, many times giving scarcely sufficient to sustain life, are instances. What do many day-laborers and scamstresses receive? Concealing property from being taxed, smuggling, and defrauding the revenue, greatly increases the taxes of the less wealthy.

Of all the countless ways, in which men oppress each other, the most netarious is that of slaveholding. Its main evils are not subjecting human beings to scanty fare and clothing, incommodious dwellings, severe tasks and oruel scourging, great as these evils are. Its worst effects are upon the deathless soul. It tends to dwarf the mind, pollute the spirit, crush the upward aspirations of the man, by withholding the best means of enlightening, elevating, purifying and saving men. For it allows but a very limited part of the noblest themes for expanding the human intellect, of giving a right direction to the emotions and affections of the heart, to come before the minds of the enslaved. By having constantly presented to them the most powerful inducements to be idle, deceitful, unfaithful, dishonest, no wonder many of them become so. Being shut out from nearly all other than sensual gratifications, and by the construction of their huts and the practice of the whites, they are trained to unbounded lewdness.

Nothing awakens stronger opposition to the humbling truths and duties of the gospel, than oppression, than being wronged. What results we often witness! Let a single member of the church be over-reaching. hard in his dealings, "grinding the face of the poor," and how do those wronged ones feel? What do they say? Can you prevail on them to embrace the religion of their oppressors." Make the trial. In general, the slaves, ignorant as they are, know that they are wronged. What ideas must they have of religion, when they see its professors take from them all their precious rights, withhold from them their earnings, make them marketable commodities, in a word, enslave them? They must abhor such a religion. We have much reason to fear, that the mass of those in the churches, are poor deluded, or deceitful beings. "Rev. Dr. Dalcho of Charleston, S. C., says, 'There is very little confidence to be placed in the religious profession of negroes." Rev. David Nelson, a native of Tennessee, and for a time, President of Marion College, Missouri, says, "The concentrated recollection of thirty years, furnishes me with three instances only, where I have reason, from the known walk of that slave, to believe him or her a sincere christian." The soul destroying influences of that vile system will not be fully known, till the revelations of the last day disclose them.

8. But what shall we say of the evils of war? Their name is legion. Could we have any accurate view of them, in the waste of property, the loss of time, the sacrifice of life, which are by far the fewest and smallest of the evils, it would amaze us. The sufferings of the camp and battle-field, the anguish of widows, orphans and parents, have not, and will not all be written in any other than the book of God's remembrance. But the demoralizing effects, like Aaron's rod, swallow up all the rest. The profaneness, Sabbathbreaking, debauchery, drunkenness, gambling, theft, robbery, murder and other evils, which war engenders, who can tell? The custom of war excites all the worst passions of the human heart. Who could have believed, that our nation, the most enlightened, christian nation on the earth, would, or could be so infatuated, as, in the midst of the nineteenth century of the Prince of Peace, to resort to war? Yet our nation expended the last year, in the war and navy departments, the enormous sum of $27,161,025!!! a moiety of which, judiciously expended, might have converted the whole world to peace. The lives sacrificed to this horrid Moloch have not been counted. The deterioration of our already declining morals will be felt for years, if not for generations to come.

But we will turn from this sombre view, to one more hopeful and cheering

II. The truths contained in the Bible are the appropriate means for removing these evils.

This appears, 1. From the nature of the case. The human mind is so constituted as to be affected, moved, swayed by perceived truth; especially by such truth as the Bible contains. "The entrance of thy words giveth light, it giveth understanding to the simple." The word of God is quick and powerful; sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even unto the dividing asunder of soul and spirit—and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

Throughout all the works of God we behold a great fitness in means to ends. What means are best adapted to reform men? We show them the evil of their doings. We do not expect one to change his course, till convinced that it is either wrong, or unsafe, or unwise. The obligation, the inducments to reform are presented. Is not this precisely the method we find in the Bible? There are the most vivid representations of the evil of sin. Its danger is set forth in terms the most awakening. The duty of repenting is pressed upon the heart and conscience, by the whole weight of God's authority; the greatness of his love in giving his Son to be the propitiation for sin; the unparalleled condescension and love of the Saviour; the fear of damnation; the offer of free forgiveness and eternal life through the atonement. The sinner, fully convinced that he justly deserves to suffer the penalty of the holy law he has transgressed, may be ready to sink in despair. Assured that it is " a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, even the chief,-that his blood cleanseth from all sin," inspires hope that his iniquities may be pardoned. "Promises exceeding great and precious" are suited to support and comfort the humble believer in every situation in life, and in the hour of death,

There is not only a general fitness in the truths of the Bible to remove moral evil; but there are particular truths suited to remove particular vices, and to develope the contrary virtues. For instance, to counteract the inordinate love of the world, the perfectly unsubstantial, unsatisfying nature of its objects is declared. God placed Solomon in circumstances to make a fair experiment of what the world could do for men. With an enlarged mind, great power, wealth in abundance, and every other facility, he set himself to find what real happiness the world could give. The result of his trial is, "Vanity of vanities, vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Then there are presented objects in perfect contrast with those of the world; objects pure, beauteous, sublime, exalted, glorious; illimitable in extent, permanent in duration, just suited to fill the most capacious mind. "The things above-the things of the kingdom of God," have a perfect adaptation to give enlargement to the intellect. elevation and expansion to the affections of the heart, and right direction to the conduct. The plan of redeeming love, in its conception, its developement, and its execution, embraces theme's the most solemn, momentous and impressive of any in the whole range of human thought. If the consideration of these themes does not strike deep into the sensibilities, stir the soul from its centre, and rouse up all its energies in their pursuit, and make men ashamed of their plodding earthliness, what can do it?

Then comes the rightful authority of God demanding a renunciation of the supreme love of the world. "Love not the world, nor the things that are in the world. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth.

Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." The danger of not obeying such directions is shown to be imminent. "The cares of the world, the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word," and prevent its saving effect. As an auxiliary means to prevent and cure the inordinate love of the world, liberality is enjoined. "Sell that ye have and give alms—give to the poor. Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." "For it is more blessed to give than to receive." A blessedness this, which it would be happy for the world, were it more generally and earnestly coveted.

To remedy the loose views so prevalent, in relation to some of the most important truths and duties, the Bible teaches that "the commandment is exceeding broad." Our Saviour's explanation of the seventh commandment is an example. "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." "The thought of foolishness is sin." "For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account in the day of judgment." "Whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point is guilty of all." However strictly one may obey nine precepts, if he willingly disobeys the tenth, it proves there is a defect in his principles, and that he has not truly obeyed one.

The whole of what the Bible contains against selfishness, is arrayed against a time-serving expediency. To prevent practising on that principle, and enforce the duty of obeying God rather than men, striking facts are related. By acting on that principle, men have brought upon themselves the very evils, which by that means, they had attempted to avoid. Haman was hanged upon the gallows he had prepared for Mordecai. Caiaphas told the Jews it was expedient to put Christ to death to save the nation from the Romans. They did it. This filled up the measure of their iniquity and sealed their doom. Not long after, the Romans did "take away both their place and nation." To reclaim and deter from the sin of lewdness, the appalling agonies of the second death are fearfully portrayed. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Against oppressors awful woes are denounced. Some of the richest promises are made to those, who sympathize with, and seek to relieve the poor and wronged. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him and keep him." It is mentioned as one distinctive mark of a friend of God, "The righteous considereth the cause of the poor, but the wicked regardeth not to know it." Christ names this alone as what will distinguish his friends from his foes, on the day when the righteous and the wicked shall be finally separated.

What oppression equals that, in the injuriousness of its effects, in the enormity of its guilt, which robs a man of himself; and reduces a rational, moral agent to the mean level of a piece of property? How long must it take one, who has any measure of the Spirit of Christ, with the Bible in his hands, to learn that this is grievously wrong and heinously sinful? Who cannot see, that to compel a man to labor during life without compensation, is a violation of the law of love? The man, who does not allow his servants an equal opportunity with himself, according to their circumstances, to gain property, to acquire knowledge, or to rise in every respect, is an oppressor. So the Bible teaches, "Render to all their dues." The spirit of oppression is perfectly antagonistic to the spirit of heaven. No oppressor, whether of a debtor, a seamstress, a day-laborer, a hired servant, an apprentice, or a slave, can be admitted there.

"Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God," Is any extortion to be compared with that, which compels another to labor for him during life without any legal compensation? Surely, he who does it should not be allowed a standing in the church.

Jehovah is "the God of Peace." Christ Jesus is "the Prince of Peace." War is the contending of two or more tribes, or nations, by their armies with weapons of death. Such a conflict God never commanded, nor authorized. He never directed two nations to make war, nor two armies to fight. He passed sentence of death upon the Canaanites, for their abominations, and commissioned the Israelites to execute the sentence. But he never commanded the Canaanstes to arm themselves, or to resist. He would not permit even David to build the temple, because he had been engaged in so many wars. We must forgive even our enemies, or we cannot be forgiven of God. Having a commission from their fellow men, taking a harlequin's dress, collecting in what is called an army, with deadly weapons, frees men, in no degree, from their obligation to love their neighbors, or to forgive their enemies. They lose no part of their individual responsibility. That goes with them, rests on them, "organized" or not, wherever they are, whatever they do. The blood shed in war, with all its attendant evils, must be accounted for by those who instigated and shed it, not in the capacity of an army, as officers and soldiers, but as men, individual men. There will be no array of armies before the judgment seat of Christ, though every one who has been in an army must appear there. " So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

The truths of the Bible bear most effectively against every evil and sinful inclination of the heart, and in the most winning and efficacious manner, inculcate "whatsoever things are honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report." Let any one fully yield to the truths of the Bible, and he will have a perfect character, complete in all its parts, nothing wanting, nothing redundant.

2. We might argue, that Scriptural truth is adapted to remove moral evils from the expressed purpose of God to remove them. God governs the world by means. No means have, in themselves, any efficiency at all. This is wholly in God. That he has purposed to overthrow existing moral evils is inferred from the prayer Christ taught his disciples; "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This kingdom consists in "righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Did Christ direct them to pray for what was never to be granted? It cannot be. Those oft repeated petitions will, at length, be heard. "The whole earth is to be full of the glory of the Lord," "Righteousness shall dwell in it, and abundance of peace-all shall know the Lord, from the least of them unto the greatest of them"-Christ "shall judge the people; he shall save the children of the needy; and shall break in pieces the oppressor. They shall learn war no more." It is by the benign influence of the truths of the Bible, accompanied by the energy of the Holy Spirit, that men are to be so changed. Then "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf, the fatling and the young lion together."

3. Facts show the tendency of these truths to remove moral evil. We seldom duly appreciate our indebtedness to these truths for the superior domestic, social, civil and religious privileges and blessings with which a gracious God has furnished us; and all those benevolent institutions, which are the glory of the times. The Goths and Vandals, with a very limited knowledge of the gospel, when they overran Europe, carrying war and all its desolating horrors with them, we are told, exhibited more instances of genuine mercy, continence, and generosity, than can be furnished by the whole history of pagan Rome. What changes have been effected, by a very imperfect acquaintance with these truths, in India and other parts of the heathen world. In regions where the destruction of children, to the number of 120,000 a year, of widows and the aged, had been practised, these massacres have ceased, or become rare. By these truths, 3000 on the day of Pentecost, "were pricked in their heart." The same truth arrested Saul, the bloody persecutor-the Earl of Rochester-John Bunyan-Thomas Scott-Africaner and Berend, two African chieftains, who had sought to kill each other. By the influence of these truths, they were afterwards seen kneeling side by side in prayer to God. By the transforming influence of the same truths, myriads have, from enemies to God, become his friends; from despising the Lord Christ, have become his humble and devout followers. The degraded Hottentot has been raised up from his pollution to adoption into the family of Ghrist. The superstitious Hindoo has renounced his worship, defiled with obsceneness and blood, for the pure worship of Jehovah. The rude Islander of the South Sea has cast away his idols and his weapons of war, to follow the Prince of Peace. The American savage has taken his tomahawk, reddened with the blood of defenceless women and children, and buried it at the foot of the cross. The profane scoffer has been taught to pray; the philosophic unbeliever has looked on him, whom he had pierced, and wept in bitterness for his sins. The wretch, on the verge of despair, has "beheld the Lamb of God," and been inspired with undying hope. How many hardened hearts have been melted by the artless story of the cross! "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." Indeed, the whole multitude, who have gone from earth to heaven, and all below now on the way there, "have been chosen to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."

III. These truths must be applied to moral evils to ensure their removal, "Now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees; every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." The axe may be perfect in its temper, the keenness of its edge, and, in all respects, fitted to fell trees; it may lie near them, and they may flourish over the very instrument, which should be employed to cut them down. It must be applied, or the trees, fruitless or pernicious as they may be, will stand and grow.

So necessary, precisely, is the application of truth for the removal of moral evils; not philosophical, mathematical, geological, historical, or any other kind, than what is contained in the book of God. For truth can have no effect any further than it is understood, and its application is seen. This is so obvious, that little need, or can be said, to make it more so.

1. This is the most reasonable way of proceeding. Why should men, who naturally love the world supremely, cease—why should those who dislike the strict rules of the Bible, who "love darkness rather than light?"—who find the doctrine of expedience so congenial to their inclinations, cease to entertain these superficial views and to practise in this loose manner? Or why should men quit the use of intoxicating drinks and tobacco—and no more profane the Sabbath, commit lewdness, or practise oppression, and war, or any other soul destroying vice; unless shown how unreasonable, wicked and dangerous it is to proceed in this way; and how imperious is the duty of embracing more correct and stricter views, and a higher and holier standard of practice. Plain common sense dictates, that if you would remove these or any other moral evils, you should directly apply the truths of God's word to them.

2. This is the method, which God has prescribed. Isaiah was directed "To lift up his voice like a trumpet, to cry aloud and spare not, to show his people their transgressions and the house of Jacob their sins." Ezekiel "was to cause Jerusalem to know her abominations." He was to proclaim the truth, "whether they would hear or forbear." Mich said, "I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord to declare unto Jacob his transgression and to Israel his sin." "If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity, he shall surely live." The instruction to Timothy was, "Preach the word." To whom? Certainly, to whom the word was applicable; purity to the licentious, temperance to the inebriates, peace to the warring, "breaking every yoke of the oppressor, and to let the oppressed go free."

3. This course was taken by inspired men. Nathan, by an ingenious parable, set before David the baseness of his crimes; and then said, "Thou art the man." Elijah charged Ahab with his sins. The Apostles, on the day of Pentecost, said to their hearers, referring to Christ, "whom ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." Stephen, fall of faith and of the Holy Ghost, said, "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ve do always resist the Holy Ghost." The instruction to Timothy was, "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear:" to Titus, "Rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith." The plain, direct. pointed manner, in which Christ applied truth may be seen in all his discourses, particularly in the 23d chapter of Matthew. He reproved the disciples for their slowness to believe. Peter for his importinent forwardness, and administered to the Pharisees and others the most cutting, withering rebukes for their hypocrisy and other sins. He named particular classes and particular sins. He charged them with " shutting up the kingdom of heaven against me."-with "devouring widows' house;"-inculcating false views of taking oaths-and various particular sins. Nothing could be more definite. Thus He laid the axe unto the root of the trees! The truths He preached, applied and carried out, would exterminate every moral evil from the face of the earth,

These truths must be applied. Men are not converted while practising iniquity. A man is not renewed by the Holy Spirit while committing overt acts of wickedness. "Let him that stole, steal no more." The heart is not changed, while men are committing theft, robbery or lewdness. They must "cease to do evil," in order to "learn to do well." They must forgive, before they can be forgiven.

The truth must be applied with discretion, with good will, "speaking the truth in love," with earnestness, with perseverance, accompanied with much prayer—humble, believing, fervent prayer. Paul said, "I have planted and Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then, neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase."

Have the truths of the Bible such a fitness to reform and save men? then we see a powerful reason why they should be universally applied. Every human being on earth needs to feel their influence. Whether to be roused from the stupor of spiritual death, to be convinced of the evil of sin, their just desert of everlasting misery; or to be shown the love of God in Christ Jesus; the way of pardon and acceptance; or to be restrained or reclaimed from guilty wanderings; guided in the path of righteousness and peace; quickened to the performance of duty; encouraged in their conflict with the similal propensities of their own hearts, the allurements of the world, and the temptations of Satan; or to be sustained and comforted under the adversities of life; to have the sweet, rich consolations of the gospel in the pains of dissolution; here is just the instrumentality needed. Blessed book!

Yet tens of thousands in our own, and hundreds of millions in other lands. feel little, if any, of the benign influence of revealed truth. Sunk in deplorable ignorance, in the grossest sensuality and profligacy, of which it is a shame even to speak, they have no remedy. Unconscious of their real condition, they are silent. But their wants, their wickedness, their woes, cry aloud for help. "Among the heathen," one says, "I have never seen a man, not under the influence of christianity, whose word I would trust." Their obsceneness and cruelty, eye witnesses tell us, cannot be described. "A chaste woman, faithful to her husband, is scarcely to be found among the millions of the Hindoos. Vast numbers of married men keep concubines. Fornication is very common." The worship of their idols is attended with most vile and abominable practices. "Pooree," says a Hindoo, " is the heaven of the Hindoos. Yet there the practices of mankind are adultery, theft, lies, murder of the innocent, whoremongery, disobedience and abuse of parents, defiling of mothers, defiling of sisters, defiling of daughters. Such is the religion of Juggernaut." What then must their vices be? What to expect from children trained under such a religion, can better be conceived than described.

Yet we have a volume, containing the law of the Lord, which is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord, which is sure, making wise the simple; the statutes of the Lord, which are right, rejoicing the heart. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold. It is the word of life—the gospel of salvation. Here are precisely the truths they need to know, exactly suited to exert upon them the influence they need to feel, to mise them from their guilty, miserable state, to give elevation to their views, purity to their spirits, a most salutary control to their whole lives; to bring them into fellowship with God, and heirship with Christ.

Yet here this volume lies, while generation after generation of our brethren, according to the flesh, go down to death, entering upon the momentous retributions of an eternal state, "without God, without Christ, without hope." Why is it? O why? Did they know their own state, with impassioned importunity would they ask, why? "Is there no balm in Gilead, is there no physician there?" that we may be removed from the deadly malady of sin? Yes, poor, ignorant, polluted, lost sons of men, there is an efficacious remedy, entirely adapted to your case. The voice from their guilt and ruin cries, "send us, O send us speedily, the book that tells us of this remedy, and men who know how to teach us the way to receive and apply it, that we may escape an eternal hell, and be blessed forever."

God has wonderfully opened the way, to send these glad tidings to every tribe and kindred of men. Why then are they not sent, with men to explain and apply them to every human mind? Shall the reasons be told? First, it will cost us something. Second, a sufficient number of the sons of Zion are not willing to go on this errand of love and mercy. Most of them prefer not to encounter quite so much self-denial, toil, temptation and seclusion from refined society, as that would require. We have not sufficient sympathy with Christ in his love to perishing men, to be willing to bear the expense. But were we willing, could we do it? Perhaps not; unless we consent to live less luxuriously, clothe ourselves less expensively, furnish our dwellings less richly; cease to build houses of worship so splendid and costly as nearly to exclude the poor, or assign them some dishonored part of the house. We could not build such towering monuments, as that yonder,* nor have such delicious banquets, nor expend so much for wines, intoxicating drinks, tobacco, and other narcotics. We are told, "a pious minister," (I trust there are none such in New England,) " after much solicitation, subscribed two guineas for the missionary cause. Soon after a wine merchant presented him a bill of £26, for wines and other liquors supplied to his family during the year." "The cost of segars smoked daily in the city of New York, is estimated at $10,000. The value of Tobacco consumed in this country annually, is $120,000,000." Are there not members of the church, if not ministers, who spend more for this filthy, nauseous, poisonous weed, than they do to send the gospel to the destitute? Will Christ approve of this?

All the ignorant might be supplied with the means of salvation, have a Bible in every family, a minister for every thousand people, a christian library in every church, for what is expended in alcoholic drinks, or in tobacco, or in war. The church in this country might prevent war, for the balance of power is with them. In the light of the day of judgment how will these unnecessary and sinful expenditures appear, in connection with the urgent calls, which came from the sin-ruined, lost souls, who might have been saved, had these sums been judiciously-employed for that end?

When called to give an account of our stewardship, should Christ ask us, whether we could not have been as healthy, as comfortable, as useful, with something less, so as to have given more to send the messages of God's grace to those in darkness and the shadow of death? Could we not have done without some things which we procured, better than the heathen could without the gospel ?- Why did you not defer making these expenditures, till, as I directed, the gospel was preached to every creature !-What shall we say ?-What can we say, professed followers of Him, who though "rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich?"

Cannot reasonable men, especially the avowed friends of godliness. be persuaded, that Christ would have them do more for his cause? Is there no luxury, no superfluity that can be given up, till all have the means of salvation? Would not a little increase of industry, self-denial, enterprise and liberality fill the treasuries of our benevolent institutions, so as to enable them to carry their good designs into effect? Nothing is wanting, except a hearty, united consecration to this work, so that the rich shall cast in of their abundance, and the widow her two mites; and what might we not then expect? We should see the angel, flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach, give a wider expansion to his wings and greater speed to his flight. We should hear from every hill-top the joyful acclamation, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace -that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth."

Robert Rantoul, Jr., in a recent temperance address, asserts that the single State of Massachusetts might save an amount of money, in the space of thirty years, of greater value than the whole wealth of England, by simply abstaining from the use of intoxicavalue than the whole weath of England, by simply assisting from one use of involventing liquors. From the time of the revolutionary war, the money expended in this country, for alcoholic drinks, exceeded in value that of the whole present property of the nation, personal and real."—N. E. Rel. Herald, Oct. 6, 1849.

Why will not the whole evangelical church awake to this work? Why should not the members be as much in earnest, as resolute, make as large investments, in proportion to their means, put forth as laborious, self-denying efforts, for the removal of all moral evils, for the thorough conversion of this world to Christ, as men of the world do in the construction of steam ships and rail roads? Let none ask if the objects of the church are as worthy as what men of the world seek. They are not to be compared. The mote that plays in the sunbeam, bears some proportion to the whole of creation. But the objects of earthly pursuit bear no proportion to the interests of an undving soul.

O for a copious effusion of the Holy Spirit upon our churches, our congregations, our colleges and schools. Then might we hope to behold, instead of a rushing to California for gold, a breaking forth on every hand, to go to the destitute to "preach the unsearchable riches of Christ."

The wants in our own, as well as in other countries, are very urgent. Dr. Lyman Beecher said he had been asked by ministers at the East, " if there was any place for them at the West? Why, said he, it is all place. If I had a thousand ministers, I could scatter them over the West in a year." Millions of godly preachers are, at this moment, needed in the old world. Much of the harvest is perishing for lack of more laborers, fitted to go and lay the axe unto the root of the trees. We must have more united, humble, believing, earnest prayer to God. "What can withstand sincere, importunate prayer?" Armies disappear before it-prison doors fly open-chains burst asunder. What a noble spectacle to the angels in heaven, to see a million of Christians in America before their Redeemer, all with one accord pleading for this one definite object, that "the Lord of the harvest will send forth laborers into the harvest." Then we might expect to hear the charge once brought against the Apostles repeated, that they had "turned the world upside down." "God made the world right side up. Sin and Satan have turned it wrong side up. It is the appropriate work of the church and ministry to turn it upside down, in order to bring it right side up. This is to be done by laying the axe unto the root of the trees, and hewing down every tree that bears not good fruit. Were nominal christians willing to give half as much for the cause of Christ as heathen do to support their religion, it might soon be done. "The Hindoo feast of the goddess Doorga costs at Calcutta alone, not less than the annual sum of £500,000 sterling." This is all done voluntarily. Let christians do a moiety as much, and, by missionaries, Bibles, tracts and other means, the truth may be brought to bear pointedly upon all existing moral evils, and God will "overtuen, overturn, overturn it, "until he come, whose right it is" to reign, and then the world will be brought right side up.

Brethren of the American Missionary Association, you have begun well. You are laying the axe at the root of the trees, sparing none that bears not good fruit. That is right. Apply the truths of revelation to the various evils which stand in the way of the salvation of men. By his declarations, commands, promises, threatenings and providences. God has set himself against all these evils. By making his truth bear directly against error and sin, you become "workers together with him." Let the thought encourage you. He is always on the side of what is true, and what is right. Still he may see it best to try us, perhaps, severely, variously and long. By the fewness of our numbers, the scantiness of our means, by cutting off our missionaries amidst the promise of great usefulness, or soon after entering the field, as he has done, he may bring our faith and perseverance to a test. But humbly casting ourselves on him for direction and success, in pursuing a straightforward course, he will ultimately grant his blessing. For his word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that which he. pleases, and shall prosper in the thing whereto he sent it. Let our souls then wait only upon God, and our expectation be from him, and we shall see the goodness of the Lord. Let us therefore wait on him-" be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thy heart."

OF THE Fourth Annual Meeting.

THE Association met, September 24th, at half-past two o'clock in the afternoon, in the State street Congregational church, Rochester, New-York.

In the absence of the President, Rev. Mr. Snyder was invited to take the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. Wm. Goodell.

The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting, held at Boston, September 26th, 1849, were read and accepted.

The Treasurer read a statement of the receipts and expenditures during the last year, and the report of the Auditors, which, on motion, were accented.

Lewis Tappan, on behalf of the Executive Committee, informed the Association of the severe sickness of the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. Geo. Whipple, which had rendered him unable to prepare or present the Report; which duty the Executive Committee had devolved upon him. He then read portions of the Report,

During the reading, which occupied two hours, the audience was invited to sing the Missionary Hymn, "From Greenland's icy mountains," and prayer was offered by Rev. J. P. Bardwell.

At the conclusion, the Report was referred to a committee of five, viz., Mesers. Fowler, Goodell, Brewster, Tappan and Peck.

Messrs. Porfer, Peck and Tappan were appointed a Committee of Arrangements. In the evening the annual discourse was preached in the First Baptist church, by Rev. C. B. Boynton of Cincinnati. Missionary hymns were sung, and the services concluded with prayer by the pastor of the church, and the benediction.

On Wednesday morning, September 25th, an hour was spent in devotional services, in the State street Congregational church, before the business meeting commenced.

The Association met, according to adjournment, at nine o'clock A.M., in the same place. Hon. WM JACKSON, the President of the Association, took the chair.

After prayer, the Committee on the Annual Report presented a set of resolutions, which, after interesting discussion during the forenoon and afternoon, on the part of Messrs. Goodell, Boynton, Jocelyn, Fowler, Miner, Wilcox, Peck, Tappan and others, were adopted, as follows:—

RESOLUTIONS.

 Resolved, That in view of the increase of the resources, members and missionaries of the Association, the conversion of sinners, and the successful promulgation of the principles of Peace, Temperance, Prectom, and Holiness, we are called upon by the God of missions to be grateful. for his continued smiles, to acknowledge our dependence upon His grace, and to consecrate ourselves, our property, and influence more entirely to His service.

- 2. Resolved, That we are more than ever impressed with the importance of this Association, humble though it be in the sight of men in its origin and history, and with the necessity of its continuance and enlargement, believing that in principles similar to those it has put forth and endeavored to practise, is the life and prosperity of all missionary efforts, and all attempts to convert the world to Christ; and that we consider ourselves embarked in a permanent enterprise for the promotion of the missionary cause, which we believe to be agreeable to the mind of Christ, and adapted to the necessities of the world.
- 3. Resolved, That this Association, in the prosecution of its work, aims to promulgate the principles of Him who "came to preach deliverance to the captives," to "open the prison doors to them that are bound," to relieve the oppressed, to enlighten the ignorant, to abolish caste, and to elevate men to the enjoyment of equal rights; and that it feels bound to adopt and inculcate every righteous principle which may, in the providence of God, be brought before the consideration of His people.
- 4. Resolved, That we regard it as a lamentable fact that the Missionary cause is by no means advancing relatively with the increase of wealth, learning and intelligence; with improvements in the arts and sciences; with the facilities of commercial and worldly enterprise: and that the Church is called upon by the principles of Christianity, and the moral wants of the age, to exhibit a more self-denying devotedness, in things pertaining to the kingdom of the Redeemer, than is exhibited by the world in its pursuit after wealth and honor.
- 5. Resolved, That while the conversion of the world is an enterprise which demands a far greater outlay of property and a much stronger reinforcement of laborers than has ever yet been witnessed, yet no amount of pecuniary resources, and no array of numbers, learning, talents or influence, can be of the least value, without a spirit of humble reliance on God, fixed and unwavering adherence to Christian principles, and an intelligent application of these principles to all the duties, relations and responsibilities of human life.
- 6. Resolved, That the only true method of effecting a reformation of the Church, is to be found in a greater spirit of self-denial, non-conformity to the world, prayer, and consecration to God, with a supreme gegard to His law; and that these necessarily receive the Divine approbation, manifested in the effusion of the Holy Spirit, the conversion of men, and the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.
- 7. Resolved, That in the practice and propagation of Christianity, and in all the responsibilities, labors and duties of human life, the law of God is to be held paramount to all human compacts, constitutions and statutes, the law shove all laws, the source and essence of all binding law; hence no wicked and unjust enactment is to be held binding upon the conscience, and no man is at liberty to assist in its execution, or to relax efforts in the discharge of any of the duties God has enjoined, in consequence of any legislative prohibition of them.
- 8. Resolved, That no duties of Christianity are more sacred and binding than those of remembering them that are in bonds as bound with them, of hiding the outcasts, of not bewraying him that wandereth, of being a covert to him from the face of the spoiler, and of exercising hospitality and extending aid to the fugitive from unrighteous oppression.
- 9. Resolved, That our warm sympathies, prayers and assistance are due to those magnanimous men, who, in the exercise of their inalienable rights and the religion which it is our privilege to profess, practise and propagate, have hazarded their liberties, and are now incarcerated, for no erime but that of obeying God, and showing mercy to the poor.
- 10. Resolved, That we believe the Christianity of the nation is about to be tested in view of the late act of Congress for the recovery of Fugitive Slaves, which appears equally at variance with the principles of this Association, the Constitution of the country, and the law of God; and that as Christians, we do rolemnly covenant with each other and our colored brethren that we cannot obey it, nor any law that evidently contravores the higher law of our Maker, whatever persocution or penalty we may be called to suffer.

The following resolutions were passed:-

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to Rev. C. B. Boynton, for the able and evangelical discourse delivered by him last evening, and that a copy be requested for the

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to the First Baptist Church, for the use of their commodious house; to the choir for their acceptable services; to the familles in Rochester who extended their hospitality to the members of the Association; and to the Com-

Messrs. Whiting, Peck and Goodell were appointed a committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year. Their report was unanimously accepted, as follows:-

After engaging in prayer the Association adjourned, to meet at such time and place as the Executive Committee shall designate. In the evening a public meeting was held in the First Baptist church. After singing and prayer, the Treasurer made a brief statement of the transactions of the Society during the past year, and the present condition of the missions. After which the meeting was addressed by Mesers, Bardwell, Tefft, Boynton, Goodell and Miner. A missionary hymn was sung, the benediction pronounced, and the members separated, deeply impressed with the fervor and solemnity that had pervaded the meetings, the unanimity with which the business had been transacted, and the encouraging prospects of the Association.

In presenting the Fourth Annual Report, the Executive Committee lament, that owing to the sudden illness of the Corresponding Secretary, they have been deprived of his services in preparing it, and that he is not able to attend the Annual Meeting of the Association. From the records and correspondence in the office, and the notes of the Secretary, the Committee have, at short notice, prepared a Report which they have now the pleasure to present.

The great Head of the Church has blessed the Association during the past year, in the general health of its officers, the missionaries and teachers at home and in foreign fields, and the persons under the influence of the missions. He has increased our missionary band, enabled us to extend our operations, added to the number of our patrons, granted us an increase of funds, poured out the Holy Spirit, converted souls, and permitted us to see, more than ever, the importance of this Missionary Association, and the duty and pleasure connected with sustaining, strengthening and enlarging its operations. Judgments, however, have been mingled with mercies; doubtless for the trial of faith and the increase of holiness.

By the Auditors' Report on the Treasurer's Annual Account, it will be seen that the total amount of receipts for the fiscal year ending August 31st, 1850, was twenty-five thousand one hundred and fifty-nine dollars and fifty-six cents; which shows an increase over the receipts of the previous year, of three thousand one hundred and seventy-six dollars and sixty cents, or over 14 per cent. One hundred and forty Life Members have been added to the Association, either by their own subscriptions or by those of their friends, making the total number of Life Members at the present time two hundred and seventy-two.

The Committee proceed to offer a summary view of the results of the labors of the past year, and of the present condition of the missions under the care of the Association.

MENDI MISSION, AT KAW-MENDI, WEST AFRICA.

Missionary, REV. GEO. THOMPSON; Assistant, JOHN S. BROOKS; Native Assistants, THOMAS Bunyan, Lawis Johnson, (Kimba,) and Sarah Kindon, (MacCri, Judge Jassicaline, Horax Bunyan, Lawis Johnson, (Kimba,) and Sarah Kindon, (MacCru). Under speciment—Rev. F. L. Arnole and Mrs. Arnole, Rev. J. C. Tepfy and Mrs. Teppy, Mrs. Thompson, Miss Johns Alden and Mrs. Arnole Gray. Total, 12.

It is now about ten years since the first company of missionaries sailed from this country, taking with them thirty-six of the captives taken in the Spanish schooner

Amistad, in an effort to establish a mission among the people from whom these Africans were taken. The mission was planted at Kaw-Mendi, in the Sherbro country; as, owing to the intestine feuds of the petty chiefs and their people, it was found inexpedient to attempt to penetrate farther into the interior. This mission establishment is still there, and under the more immediate control of Rev. Geo. Thompson and Mr. John S. Brooks. Valuable assistance is rendered in the operations of the mission by Thomas Bunyan and Lewis Johnson, (Kin-na.) both of whom are native Mendians, and the latter, one of the captives of the Amistad. Sarah Kinson, (Mar-oru.) also one of the Amistad captives, has since the last Annual Meeting rejoined the mission, after having been three years in this country acquiring a good education, and is now rendering valuable service as the Principal of the school connected with the mission. Mrs. Brooks, who was present at the last Annual Meeting, and accompanied her husband and Miss Kinson to Africa last autumn, was not permitted to reach the mission. It is supposed that her constitution suffered in consequence of the severity of her labors in behalf of the fugitive colored people in Canada. The severe sickness with which she was attacked the very day her voyage commenced, greatly reduced her strength, and doubtless predisposed her to future disease; and although she rallied for a time after landing in Africa, she was taken with the fever soon after her re-embarkation at Freetown for the mission, ded, and was buried at York, Sierra Leone. Before her departure from this country, she had greatly won upon the friends of humanity by her self-denying and arduous labors, in which she had freely expended a large part of the property she had inherited. Before she left her native land, she made over to the Association, as a free gift, the whole of what remained, valued at over $1,000; reserving to herself only a sufficient sum to procure a decent outfit for Africa. She possessed a sound mind in a naturally vigorous body, weakened, however, more than she supposed, by her hardships in Canada; and had in a remarkable degree consecrated herself to the cause of Christ, as a missionary among the people of color, which was her chosen field. Her experience, sound judgment, and devotedness inspired the Committee with a very strong parsuasion that her services would be invaluable at this mission. But God has otherwise ordered. In His inscrutable providence, although she was permitted to see the hills of Africa, to step upon that vast continent, and to converse with some of the native inhabitants, she was not granted the indulgence of her long cherished desire, a participation in the active labors of the mission. She was soon cut down. With her dving breath she rejoiced that she had been allowed to see Africa, there breaths out her prayers for the conversion of its inhabitants, and bear her dving testimony to the excellence of the missionary cause. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT.

There are now under appointment for the Mendi Mission, Rev. J. C. Tefft, Mrs. E. Tefft, Rev. F. L. Arnold and Mrs. M. Arnold, who have been approved as missionaries by the Executive Committee; also, Miss Joanna Alden, of Lowell, Mass., and Mr. Samuel Gray, a colored brother from Ohio, who have been appointed as assistants to the mission. This company is expected to sail for Africa some time in November or December.

The school continues to be prosperous, and now numbers eighty scholars. The effort to train the pupils of the school to habits of industry has been continued through the year, with very flattering success. The farm at the mission now yields largely to supply the necessary food, and it is hoped that in a short time the mission may become entirely independent of the Association, so far as provisions are concerned. Besides this, some of the scholars engage in various kinds of mechanical labor, and their progress gives promise of their being able in this way to contribute materially to the welfare of the mission.

During the past year, as the providence of God has opened the way, increased efforts have been made to diffuse the knowledge of the gospel among the people at a distance from the mission. Mr. Thompson has spent a large part of the last half of the year in visiting the different portions of the country with an interpreter, and preaching the gospel wherever he could gather a company to hear. No obstruction whatever was laid in his way, but the missionary was welcomed as the true friend of Africa. At the latest dates, Mr. Thomas Bunyan was absent from the Mission, having gone into the Mendi country to establish a school, as the foundation of a mission, at the very importunate request of the king of that country. Lewis Johnson, also, has been teaching and preaching with much acceptance, and, as it is believed, with good effect.

As a part of the gospel proclaimed to the chiefs and rulers of the country, Mr-Thompson points out their duty to abandon the sin of enslaving men and women. No opposition is made to this, as the heathen can easily be made to see that slavery is a violation of the gospel rule of love. God has blessed these labors, and the chiefs are fully convinced that this, the darling sin of Africa, fostered mainly by its trade with other nations, must be abandoned for ever, if they would find favor with the God of the Bible.

This is the oldest mission of the Association. It is peculiarly dear to all the members. Its trials, vicissitudes and entire history are remarkable and affecting. The providence of God was clearly manifested in its establishment, and has been conspicuous throughout the whole period of its existence. Probably there is not a more interesting mission on earth, nor one, considering the visible means employed for its support, where more has been accomplished for the temporal and spiritual good of the heathen. The mission has been growing in importance from its commencement; the hopes of its friends still cling about it with unabated interest; it has a hold upon the affections of various Christian denominations; and the prayers of many, we doubt not, continually ascend for its growth, extension and prosperity. Death has made sad inroads upon the missionary family; but if the blood of martyrs be the seed of the Church, it may be said with equal propriety, that the death of faithful missionaries is the seed which, under Divine culture, is to spring up, bear fruit, and evangelize the world.

The fact that this mission commenced under such extraordinary circumstances: that the principles upon which it was founded were in several respects peculiar to this Association; that the missionaries were instructed to preach to rulers and subjects, that the gospel is totally opposed to slavery, the slave-trade, caste, polygamy, war, and the use of intoxicating drinks; that the mission was planted in the interior of West Africa; and that so many of those enjoying its benefits were persons redeemed from slavery or death, invested it with a peculiar interest not usually thrown around missionary operations. The history of this mission shows that the principles originally adopted have been steadily pursued. They have been proclaimed by the missionaries in the hearing of persons of different nations on the coast of Africa; before the authorities, missionaries and people of the British colony; before African chiefs who were prosecuting the internal slave-trade, and waging cruel and sanguinary wars; before chiefs and people who considered polygamy a practice not to be relinquished; until the reputation of the missionaries was firmly established as peace, temperance, and anti-slavery men, and the mission territory was deemed sacred by slave traders in pursuit of their victims, and by war-men in pursuit of enemies. The missionaries have been selected as umpires between hostile chiefs:

they have been instrumental in suppressing the slave-trade, and putting an end to wars; and have received the thanks of the British civil and naval authorities, evidences of friendship from the people of Sierrs Leone, and grateful manifestations of confidence and respect on the part of tribes and chiefs, who, for years, had cherished implacable hatred, and waged merciless wars.

The fidelity and courage of the missionaries, and their remarkable success, demonstrate that the gospel can be preached in all its fullness with safety to its promulgators, and with the most signal advantage to its hearers of all ranks. And in view of such facts, it is a subject of just consideration, whether preaching and missionary efforts that aim lower than this are worthy of being sustained by any Christian people, or introduced into any heathen country. A diluted gospel is another gospel; and the toleration of slavery, oppression in any form, war, caste, polygamy, or any wrong practice or "organic ain," by the silence, indecision, timidity, or policy of any Missionary Board or mission, is at variance with the letter and spirit of the gospel, and a great hindrance to its success at home and abroad.

The readers of the monthly paper published by the Committee, have learned from its pages that Mr. Thompson has labored at this mission two years and a half separated from his family, with unabated zeal. Though often prostrated by sickness, he has superintended the multifarious affairs of the mission with unyielding patience, industry and perseverance. He has acted as physician to the sick and dving, as the head of a numerous school, as superintendent of the mission farm, as the principal business agent, as negotiator between hostile bands, and as the correspondent of the mission, in addition to his duties as pastor of the church. He has felt the incongruity of filling so many trusts, and the crushing nature of so much labor and so many responsibilities, and has made the most carnest appeals to the churches in America for sympathy, prayers and help, believing that if he had more helpers he could send preachers to other places, and greatly enlarge the missionary operations. Mr. Bunyan, his assistant, and a native of Mendi, could go to that country to proclaim the glad tidings of redeeming love, were his place supplied at the mission. When help has been sent and suddenly and unexpectedly cut down, Mr. Thompson's courage has not faltered, but he has reiterated his importunate request for new assistants in the vast and most promising field before him. He has felt that the churches in his native land have but an imperfect knowledg of the wants of Africa; that they do not pay adequate attention to the facts communicated, and do not respond, either in offers of missionary assistance or pecuniary aid, answerably to their obligations to the Redeemer or the souls of the heathen.

During the early part of the year, intelligence was received that there were at the mission forty praying persons, thirty of whom have been hopefully converted since Mr. Thompson arrived, at the mission; that the church consisted of twenty-six members; that seven family altars had been erected; twenty-two persons baptized and nine couple married;—and subsequent advices give the gratifying information that some of the children in the school are lovely examples of the transforming power of the gospel, and that some of the converts are among the country people, Among those hopefully converted is the wife of Lewis Johnson, (Kin-na.) After his conversion she opposed him, talked badly, would not stay in the house when he prayed, charged him with leaving the ways of his fathers, &c.; but he prayed for her, and soon she humbled herself and confessed her sins. The mission has enjoyed the special influences of the Spirit for many months. God has been before the missionaries, Mr. Thompson writes, and the Spirit of the Lord has been poured out upon the adults attached to the mission, as well as upon the scholars.

Mr. T. writes:—"Yesterday I saw two of the converts seated on a mat, in the piazza, and one of them who had enjoyed advantages of instruction was engaged for a long time in teaching the other about the great salvation. Such instances are not unfrequent. Other members of the church make it their highest pleasure to 'feed the lambs,' lead back the wandering, and seek to save the souls of all around them.

"One of the Mendians is in the habit of talking to the impenitent from house to house, praying with them, and exhorting them to submit to God. He also talks to visitors from the country, and extends these visits of mercy to the villages around. Many of the children pray with one another as well as with people from the country, and write to their parents about their souls, and beg them to liberate, their slaves."

On an exploring visit, Mr. T. called on the brother of King Harry Tucker, where he saw three of his former scholars. He says, "As we had prayers before sunrise in the house where I staid, the little boys, hearing us, ran in, and one of them prayed of his own accord in English."

Those who saw the Amistad Africans in this country, ten years since, will hardly fail to recollect Kin-na, then a youth of about eighteen. His manly deportment his proficiency in reading, arithmetic, speaking and singing, greatly interested the friends of his race, and made them anxious that he should be converted and become a minister to his benighted countrymen. On his return to Africa he plunged into vicious excesses, his fine natural powers seemed lost, and the pleasing anticipation that he might be useful to the missionary cause was nearly abandoned. But he came to himself, joined the mission, was the subject of renewing grace, and is now a valuable assistant missionary and a successful preacher.

On hearing a report at the mission, that the people of a certain town had all turned to God, Kin-na, with others, went there, and explained to them the way of life. He found that a man who had been at the mission one Sabbath was hopefully converted, went home and talked to the people and prayed with them. They all, with one accord, gave heed to the things which he spake, forsook their country ways, prayed and kept the Sabbath. Mr. Johnson, (Kin-na), talked to them from the command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Great interest was manifested, and they begged hard for a teacher to come and live with them, to instruct them all the time. The next morning they collected their gods, gree-grees, charms, &c..—a bag full—and gave them to Kin-na, who tied a weight to them and sank them to the bottom of the river.

Mr. Thompson has made some experiments to ascertain the feelings of the people in the country around Kaw-Mendi, with regard to the reception of the gospel. He went to "Big Boom," and saw during his journey the ruins of twenty towns that had been destroyed by the wars. But few people remained. These few he gathered together; among them he found some of his scholars who had been dispersed by the wars; he had prayers in the Mendi language, and preached to them the gospel of peace and reconciliation. The people heard the word gladly, and openings appeared to exist on every side for the introduction of the gospel. At Gallinas, where the slave factories, those strongholds of Satan, have been broken down, the gospel can now be preached, and schools would be eagerly welcomed. In view of these openings Mr. Thompson says: "To lie still at such a time as this is to give the field over into the hands of Satan. Oh for teachers!" Concerning another place, Pa-Paw, he writes: "They have promised to build a house for religious purposes, so that persons from the mission can preach there." A Mohammedan chief expressed a willingness to have the gospel preached. His people are begging for Arabic Testaments. By this means the gospel could be sent far into the interior. A Life Member has generously contributed $60 for this object.

Mr. T. writes that the son of a strong war chief, from a distance, came to the mission to beg for some one to come to his place, and start a school. He had no one to spare, but wrote a letter to the chief. A few months afterwards the son came again, bringing a letter from his father, urging Mr. T. very strongly to send a teacher. He used the following language: "I am strong in the faith of a blessed Redeemer, and through him I shall be made strong in body and soul. Thanks be to God for his goodness to my soul. He has not cut me down according to my evil doings; he has only warned me." Previous to this time his only means of being . acquainted with the gospel were messages sent from the mission, and a single visit from the assistant missionary, Thomas Bunyan. He is building a large town, and has reserved an open place for the "white man;" and is very urgent, refusing to take any denial, that Mr. T. should go himself or send Mr. Bunyan, to mark off a spot and make a plan of a house, that he may have it all ready for the missionary.

Numerous invitations have been received by the mission from chiefs in different parts of the country, for the establishment of missions or the commencement of schools among their people. But few of these requests could be complied with. In consequence of this, and the reiterated and pressing importunity of Mr. Thompson, the Committee resolved to send a reinforcement, and, as has been already stated, arrangements are making to send, during the present season, such additional missionaries as will enable the mission to supply, to some extent, the loud calls made by the chiefs for the preaching of the gospel at different places. Mr. T. is exceedingly anxious that a pious and competent physician should speedily join the mission. as a missionary physician is greatly needed. He says also, that an assistant missionary who could oversee the farm, direct the workmen, and provide provisions, would ease him of a large part of his cares and labors.

Wars have been carried on between the chiefs for a large part of the time during the existence of this mission, which has been greatly disturbed and injured and put to considerable expense thereby, "The judgment day only will reveal," says Mr. Thompson, "how much the mission has suffered from these wara." The mission premises have been the only peace territory, and it necessarily became an asylum for many terrified natives, and for the children of combatants. The rule at the mission that, on its limited territory, peace and freedom should prevail, commanded the respect of the opposing warriors and secured their confidence. Circumstances, under the guidance of the Prince of Peace, gave a suspension to hostilities, and opened a way for pacification. Mr. Thompson was requested to call together a number of chiefs to listen to overtures for putting an end to the wars, and deemed it a special providence that the mission was looked to for its influence in stopping the effusion of blood, and settling the terms of a general peace. At length these desirable objects were attained, and essentially through the agency of Mr. Thompson. He had the high gratification of being present at a meeting of the chiefs "from both sides of the late war," and he thus describes the scene:-

"They all again joined together in love, to shake hands, eat and drink as true friends. One party had brought back the chief Kar-mo-koo, who had been made prisoner; and the others made their presents to thank them for bringing him back.

Their speeches were animated, eloquent and stirring. When the orator took his stand to speak, another man stood beside him, who repeated the speech, sentence by sentence, at the top of his voice. I was told that this was done, that any who might be far outside of the 'palaver house' might hear.

"The parties seemed very friendly. It was good to see so many thus assembled who, a few months before, were seeking each other's blood. The peace is all attributed to the mission. They say, if it had not been for it the war could not have been stopped. Give God the glory. The work is His, and His alone shall be the praise.

FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"Toward night the chiefs and people were collected at the 'palaver house,' and I preached to them. It was an interesting and important audience. Many chiefs were present, and good attention was given. Bunyan had preached the night before. The king and people generally were willing, and seemed to be desirous of hearing the gospel. There seems to be an 'open door' and a ripe field for a good pious teacher and a preacher at Mongray."

In view of the return of peace, and the consequent resumption of the cultivation of the earth, &c., the attention of the mission was naturally and strongly turned to the openings thus made by Divine Providence for the spread of the gospel in Africa. In the language of the missionary :-

"I believe God intends a general peace for this country; if so, the field for laborers will be vast, and on this assurance of an 'open door' you may send missionaries as soon as possible-ministers and their wives teachers mechanics. farmers and physicians. We should remember the adage, 'Strike while the iron is hot,' and when God opens a wide field and ripe before us, let the churches cooperate and work with God in this thing."

Will the people of God in this country duly regard this providential opening for the introduction of the gospel of peace, freedom and salvation into the interior of this wonderful continent, and adequately contribute the necessary means? On those who know the facts and possess the means, rests the responsibility.

Mr. Thompson has done all he could to awaken the churches to a sense of their responsibility, in the numerous letters he has addressed privately, and through the columns of the monthly paper of the Association. He has been particularly desirous that Sabbath-school children should be interested on behalf of the children of Africa, many being now in the mission school, and multitudes more would gladly come under instruction if teachers were provided suitable buildings erected, and the pecuniary means furnished to sustain such enlarged operations. Mr. T. says that if he had the means and the teachers, not only hundreds more might be converted, but as a consequence many of their relatives and friends would be attracted to the mission, and come under good influences. His Letters to Children, published in the American Missionary, contain valuable and interesting facts, and if widely circulated, could not fail to stir up their minds to deep feeling. The systematic contributions of children, who might be interested for the instruction of African children and youth, would be the means of immense good. The friends of the mission are earnestly requested to attend to this subject, and to recollect that $25 a year will support a scholar at the mission.

Brainerd.—A report for the past year has not been received from Mr. Evarts.

but Mr. Venning, the teacher, communicates the following facts in relation to the school:

"Some dissatisfaction had been expressed by some of the parents on account of what they deemed the slow progress made by their children in studies, and because the people had not sufficient control of the school. At a public meeting the subject was fully discussed, and it was finally arranged that the responsibility of carrying on the school should be sustained by the people. Accordingly they met, and chose trustees, whose business it will be to provide a teacher, devise the means of his support, and see to the repairs of the school-room; but they meet with greater difficulties than they expected. We shall try to induce them to continue the experiment. The providence of God seems to indicate that the time is past for the people to be carried, and that it is necessary, if they are ever to be men, that they should now walk alone. The trustees applied to me to be their teacher; but as we were expecting soon to commence the high school, I could not entertain their proposals. The school is therefore closed until a teacher can be procured."

Eliot.-From Mr. Thompson a brief report has been received of the state of things at this station to July 24th. He writes in substance as follows:--

"The past year has been characterized by some strange and unaccountable providences. Events that materially affect the spiritual interests of the people—some favorable and others unfavorable—have transpired. God reigns; and all things shall work together for good to them that love God. Here I rest. Thorough church discipline still continues at this station. One of the subjects of it, on his death-bed. confessed the sin for the commission of which he had been cut off, and also other sins of which he had not been suspected, but he died without hope, The first Sabbath in July, seven persons were received to church fellowship, and one restored who had been suspended. Four of the seven had been excommunicated, the others that I brought from the United States are a source of much instruction and gratification to the scholars, as explained by me in connection with the lessons. Mrs. T. teaches the adults who cannot read, in another room, on the same lessons.

"The day school has not been opened during the whole of the year. Since I took charge of it, two months since, the average daily attendance has been from thirty to thirty-five; and the scholars pay for instruction in all at the rate of £13 sterling per annum. The people consider the school theirs, and take the responsibility of sustaining it. The trustees hire and pay the teacher; and the people take great delight in supporting the school according to their ability, but they may need some help. During the past year there have been decided advances in vital godliness among us. In this we greatly rejoice. The Spirit of God is still working in many

Mr. T. has received from the people for his support since January only £5 sterling, and says it is the smallest amount, for the same length of time, he has ever received from them. The people say their hearts are willing, but they have but little money. About the same sum has been paid for church purposes. The purchase of the land has not been completed. The people are devising plans for raising the money. "We have," Mr. T. says, "made some additions and repairs to the building, with the lumber sent out by the Committee."

Union.-Mr. Wolcott writes, July 23d, that at this station they have done but little more the past year than hold their own; that circumstances have been more unfavorable for the frequent meetings of the church and people than formerly: that the week-day meetings are now held at Chesterfield and other places abroad; that at the Hermitage, in pleasant weather, the Sabbath finds about the same number of people; and that the school at Chesterfield has remained small, only twenty on the list, and the average attendance fifteen.

At Devon-Pen the congregation is usually good, though not very large. Three have been added to the church lately. Mr. Rennie has continued the school nearly up to the present time, but has closed it for the present on account of ill health. There are about thirty names on the list, and the regular attendance is from twenty to twenty-five. "Our receipts for the past year have been as follows: - Contributed for minister, $38 91; for church and station purposes, $37 08; for Chesterfield school, $28 68; for Devon-Pen school, $23 91. Total, $128.58. I recommend the discontinuance of the salary to Mr. Austin, teacher at Chesterfield; and have proposed to the mission and to our people, that the responsibility of securing and paying the teachers rest with them. This has been successfully tried at Eliot and Brainerd. If it be necessary to give assistance, it had better be given to the people, and not in the form of salary to a teacher.

"We have commenced our house at Chesterfield, and as yet the responsibility of meeting the expense rests entirely on the people. We shall be compelled proba-bly, to call on the Committee for aid to finish the building. It will all be done in the cheapest and most substantial form. A good quantity of the boards and small timbers are already sawed. I am now laboring to effect, if possible, a union of all sects of the people at Chesterfield, for a common interest in the house we are building and its objects."

Oberlin.-Mr. Olds, of this station, writes under date of July 27th, in substance

"While it is not our privilege to relate any wonderful displays of grace, we are nevertheless constrained to say, 'Hitherto the Lord hath helped us.' We are confident that, on the part of numbers, there has been not only an increasing desire to know the truth, but to live in accordance with it. We have the witness, we think, that some are growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. None of the members of this church have been removed by death during the past year. Our congregation has much increased since my last report, and it has now a permanent character. . . . We sometimes think that our chapel will soon be too strait for us, and that we must lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes.

"The Sabbath-school has not only maintained a permanent, but an increasing interest. It now usually numbers from 100 to 120. Besides the general lesson, many of the younger scholars, and some of the older ones, have committed to memory many portions of the Scripture. While we know that this of itself will not save the soul, we yet remember that the Word of God is the sword of the Spirit, by which the man of sin is to be slain, and also that it is the means the Holy Ghost uses in the sanctification of the soul.

"We have a new out-station. I was invited to preach there, and found that the people had built for themselves a small house of worship, in which they met on Sabbaths and Wednesdays, to read the word, pray, and sing praises to God. They belong to a church about eight miles distant from them, and had been almost destitute of preaching for a long time. I have preached to them once in two weeks, and hope to do so oftener.

"Our school during the past year has been in a more flourishing condition than ever. There are about 70 on the list, and from 45 to 50 in daily attendance. The school is closed for a few weeks, to allow Miss Dean, the teacher, whose labors have been severe, an opportunity to regain her health.

"There have been added to the church here the past year 13;—10 on profession of their faith, and 3 by certificate. The weekly meetings of the church, of which we have three, besides the Sabbath services, have on the whole been very well attended. Yet we are constrained to say, that though we have much ground of thankfulness to the Father of mercies, iniquity abounds. The terrible corruption of the selfish human heart is everywhere visible; and as though Satan feared that the human heart would not yet work ruin enough for his cause, he is everywhere maddening men with rum!

"Almost all the influences of the Island are in favor of rum-drinking. Professed ministers of the gospel furnish ardent spirits for their guests, and apologize if they have not 'n good article? Rum is abundant; and miserable groggeries are set up in almost every neighborhood. Between this place and town, a distance of fifteen miles, there are as many of these abominable drunkard-making establishments as there are miles! With the increasing intemperance, come along increasing theft, dishonesty, vagrancy, and every species of crime. The people have contributed for the support of their pastor, $38; for chapel repairs, $30; for church purposes, $28; and for support of the school, $30."

Providence.—Mr. Olds gives a favorable account of the church at Providence—of its intelligent and decisive action in a case of discipline; and remarks that "things wear as favorable an aspect at Providence as they have done since my acquaint-ance with them." He thinks the disorders springing from the "leadership" or "ticket system," which prevailed during the period of slavery, and has been one of the greatest obstacles to missionary effort, are gradually disappearing, and concludes with the following gratifying statement:—

"We think we are bound to acknowledge the good hand of the Lord among us, although we have not seen among the people any displays of Divine grace that would be called 'wonderful.' We are however fully persuaded that God does attend the ministration of his own truth, and that it is in numerous instances a savor of life unto life. We think we have good evidence that many of our people are growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And we hope that from time to time some of the impenitent are laying hold of Christ as their Saviour."

About the commencement of the year, a reinforcement, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Hall and Miss U. Hunt, was sent to the Jamaica mission; and Messrs. Evarts and Thompson, with their wives, after spending some months in this country, mainly for the purpose of recruiting their wasting energies, returned to the mission with them. The mission force is now, however, no larger than at the commencement of the year; as Miss Hunt, by the advice of the Executive Committee, has returned to this country, and is now disconnected from the mission. Dr. and Mrs. Hyde have also been disconnected from the mission, although he still remains in Jamaica, and it is not known whether he intends to return to the United States, or to make his permanent abode at the Island.

The income of the mission at the Island, at the different stations, is supposed to be fully equal to what it was the previous year. All of it has been expended in the support of the mission. Besides the amount thus expended, the people have, by the advice of the mission, contributed freely to the general improvement of their places, and the construction of roads, to enable them to get to and from the market with greater facility.

The people at the mission welcomed the returned missionaries and the reinforcement with great cordiality. Many of them came from the mountains to Kingston to assist in conveying their goods to the mission, which they did by carrying their burdens on their heads. All the members of the mission were found to be in the enjoyment of good health. Concerning the general condition of the Island, Mr. Evarts says:—

"Hard times are evidently pressing severely upon all classes of the inhabitants, especially in Kingston, and we hope it will prepare them to profit by suggestions which may be made for their improvement. Surely the times are dark enough, and portentous of coming distress; but it is to be feared that there are few who are prudent enough to 'foresee the evil and hide themselves,' but that most will 'pass on, and be punished.' I see more clearly than ever the necessity of doing what may be done for improving the condition of our people, and leading them on to enterprises for general benefit."

In a letter from a clergyman at Jamaica belonging to another mission, the writer, in speaking of the state of things among portions of the people on that Island, as the consequences of natural depravity, and the results of the awful system of slavery that prevailed for so many generations, says:—

"Stubborn facts declare them to be deeply sunken in degradation and dark iniquity, far away from God, and indulging in hatred towards Him; and by no means willing to take him for their only portion, with submission to His law. They may often think that they desire the gospel, and even ask for it, and say that they wish to know God, while their object is to make both God and his gospel minister to their lustful propensities. We find here, as in all the world beside, that the hearts of men are full of selfishness. Sinners here hate Christ and his gospel just as cordially as sinners of other lands. Slavery has never benefited them in this respect. Indeed it would be a wonderful institution if it should so soften the hard human heart as to prepare it for the reception of Divine truth, and submission to the Divine will. A poor preparatory school indeed is slavery for the introduction of its subjects to the school of Christ!... Slavery prostitutes the bodies of its victims and debases their souls. It tears down families to make room for herds. Until emancipation, lawful wedlock was scarcely known. The habits of the people were all formed to that state of things. And he who supposes that a change from such a state, to one of civilized Christian society, is to be effected in a day, or I may say a generation, has but poorly studied the pages of degraded humanity. We also find deep degradation, abominable superstitions, and the most disgusting, loathsome lustfulness."

Another letter, from a civilian, corroborates the statements made above. We subjoin an extract:—

"Multitudes of families are growing up almost in the wildness of nature, without the protection of the social condition—which is insured by marriage and its hely obligations. When the people emerged from slavery, the vices of the system, its indifference to the higher obligations of life, its loose morality, its diminished self-respect, and low, sensual condition, of course clung to the people. We have indeed had some diligent and self-devoted laborers, but what were they among so many? . . . Instead of seeking to correct the minds and characters of the people, which are the true springs of effective industry, the Government resolved to import multitudes of a still lower description from the East Indies and Africa. . . . The evil worked its own remedy, and education and religious instruction will now be the reading objects in the future legislation of the West Indies."

There is, however, a bright side to this sad picture. In a letter from George Wm. Alexander, Esq., of London, who has recently visited the Island, he says:—

"This fine island is not at present hastening to ruin. It has been delightful for us to gee the large number of the emancipated peasantry and their children, who were brought under a moral and religious influence by the good men who are stationed over Jamaica."

That much good has been effected by the American missionaries, we have abundant proof. Many intelligent persons, residing for years at Jamaica, and visitants from this country and England, who have become acquainted with them, have borne testimony to their self-denial, industry, and success.

It has been already stated that Dr. and Mrs. Hyde have been disconnected from the mission. The Committee feel constrained to say that for some time reports have reached them of strange views being entertained by these persons, involving vital errors in sentiment and practice, and that recently statements have been made to the Committee, upon which reliance can be placed, more deeply affecting the moral and religious characters of those implicated. The Committee, on due consideration, resolved that it is expedient for the Corresponding Secretary to visit the mission as soon as practicable, and that meantime Dr. and Mrs. Hyde be suspended from the service of the Society until the report of the Corresponding Secretary shall be received, and officially acted upon.

It is earnestly hoped that the friends of God will make earnest supplications for this mission, that those who continue sound in the faith of the gospel, and walk as it becometh saints, may be steadfast and faithful, that their labors may be eminently blessed to the emancipated people who have been so long ground to the earth by the oppression of man, and subjected to deep degradation; that those who have erred or backslidden may be reclaimed, forgiven, and restored to usefulness, and the favor of God; that the Secretary may speedily be restored to health, be a minister of good to the mission, and be safely returned to resume his labors; and that the Committee may be wise in council and faithful in directing the affairs of the Association, so that the mission shall, under the guidance and restraint of the great Head of the Church, be an example of everything that is pure and excellent.

OJIBUE OR CHIPPEWAY MISSION.

MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

One mission, three stations.

RED LAKE. Missionaries, Rev. S. G. Whight, Dr. Wm. Lewis, physician and teacher; O. A. Cole, farmer; Mrs. Whight, Mrs. Cole., Cass Lakke. Missionaries, Rev. A. Barnard, Jos. D. Fisher, Mrs. Barnard, Mrs. RED LAKE ... FISHER, FRANCIS SPENSE, farmer.

LAKE WINNEREG. . Missionaries, Rev. A. B. Adams, Mr. David B. Spencer, James Tanner, native questiant and interpreter, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Spencer, Mrs. Tanner,

The general agent of this mission, Rev. J. P. Bardwell, has, as heretofore, devoted his whole time, with the exception of a visit on business to Canada, made at the request of the Executive Committee, to collecting funds and procuring and forwarding supplies. He has made no written report of his year's labor, and it is the less necessary, as he is expected to attend the Annual meeting, and give such oral statements as may be desired. The distance of this mission, its irregular means of communication with us, and the multifarious cares of the missionaries, who have been burdened with an unusual amount of labor the past year, will prevent our giving very complete intelligence of its operations. The missionaries are subject to many privations, owing to the climate, the habits and necessities of the people among whom they labor, the difficulty in obtaining the necessaries of life at certain seasons, the inadequacy of the missionary force to accomplish the great work before them, and the innumerable incidents peculiar to a life in the wilderness at such a distance from civilized society. Still they "endure hardness," and rejoice to be the agents of a merciful Saviour in exhibiting to the red man of the forest an example of Christian society and family arrangement, and pointing him to the Cross.

CASS LAKE STATION.

Mr. Barnard writes, under date of April 26th, in substance, as follows:-

"Winter still lingers. The lakes are all covered with a foot of ice, and the snow is nearly a foot deep in the woods. Our cattle have but just lived the winter through. Our cattle are very hungry, my brother, and so are we. But we do not expect to starve; for we have the promise of our heavenly Father, that 'we shall dwell in the land, and verily we shall be fed." He says the Indians suffer extremely for want of food. One of the missionaries, after narrating the aggressions of some of the Indians, and the hardships endured by the mission from e, and in consequence of the loss of cattle, adds: "We are all well, cheerful and happy." The latest date from the Cass station is June 5th. Provisions had been scarce, and both the missionaries and Indians had suffered many privations: but Mr. Barnard writes: "We are all well and happy. Our crops are coming up, and look well. We trust the Lord will smile upon our efforts, and give us not only the bread that perisheth, but the souls of this poor people. Pray for us.

Rev. Sherman Hall, a missionary of the A.B.C.F.M., who has spent above twenty years among the Ojibues of Lapointe, Lake Superior, writes, under date of July 16th, 1850, to Mr. Bardwell, our agent, and after mentioning a tour he and a brother missionary had taken through the country about the Upper Mississippi, to ascertain whether it was their duty to follow the Indians when they remove, as they will be required to do by the United States Government, says :-

"Of course, we made a visit to your stations, and had an interview with all your missionaries. We found them generally well and prosperous. At Cass Lake and Red Lake, we were much pleased with the external appearance of the establishments. They bear marks of being managed by industrious and enterprising men. . I think all your missionaries in this field show much of a spirit of self-denial and devotion to the work they were sent there to do. They labor under many embarrassments. Some of them need a more liberal support. Mr. Barnard, I think, is specially qualified for this work. He has a better practical knowledge of the language than probably any other missionary in this field. I was much pleased and gratified with my visit, as well as profited. I hope those who have sent those brethren and sisters into this hard and self-denying field will sustain them well by their prayers, and by liberal contributions for their support. They are worthy of both.

LAKE WINNEPEG.

." Mr. Spencer, of the new station at Lake Winnipeg, writes that difficulties occurred on the arrival of the missionaries, owing to a report that they compelled children to be baptized and the women to labor; but, on suitable explanations being made, the chief frankly confessed that he had been misinformed, and he therefore extended to them a cordial invitation, at the same time manifesting no little surprise to learn that the missionaries had told only the simple truth. "In reviewing this providence of God, we have been led to remark," adds Mr. S., "the propriety and wisdom of waiting on the Lord, that he may accomplish his own work in his own way." He adds :-

"We are greatly blessed in having a good interpreter (Mr. Tanner). He has a wife-a Christian woman-and three children, which, with our two families, make in all fourteen souls. He has at heart the best good of his countrymen, and is zealous and indefatigable in his exertions for their eternal welfare." He adds, "From the first, we have endeavored to impress deeply upon the minds of this people that a regard to their spiritual interests was the great object of our coming among them. . . . A few days since, on visiting a sick man who had been on the borders of the grave, he remarked that if I had come to him when he was expecting to die, and assured him of a long life on condition of his praying, viz., becoming a Christian, he would gladly have embraced the offer. Another came in last evening to beg some provisions on the strength of having kept the Sabbath. As a people, however, they have made considerable progress in the knowledge of divine things, and the chiefs and head men express themselves publicly in favor of the gospel. They requested that we would visit them during the winter, when they should be absent in small parties in search of food and game. We did so. With the chief at whose lodge we spent one night, we had an interesting interview."

On one occasion, when the chief had sent to all the wigwams "to tell all to come and hear the Word preached to them," he said, after they were collected together, as follows;—"You all know, my friends, that in my former life I sometimes called you together and gave you to smoke of my tobacco without saying anything to you. You no doubt wondered why I had nothing to say. I now wish to tell you why I used to do so. The tobacco I used to give, you was given in sacrifice to the Great Spirit, for him to pity and have mercy upon me, that before I die he might show me the straight way that leads to life. The Great Spirit has heard my request. That day has come; this is that straight way. I asked for it; I have found it; I now intend to walk in it. I know, my friends, many of you will laugh at me and will speak evil of me; and I know many of you will say of me, "What a fool he is to be cheated by the teachers.' But I care for none of these things. The rest of you may do as you please, but as for me and my children, we will follow the straight way; and it becomes us all to look for the good of our children, and send them to school that they may become wise."

Mr. Tanner, the native assistant and interpreter, whose father, when a child, was stolen from Kentucky by the Indians, brought up by them and married and lived among them, had been consulted by the whole band of Indians, about two hundred in number, respecting a suitable location for themselves where they could settle down by the mission, and cultivate their lands. Before proceeding to business, the chief said his custom was to seek wisdom from the Great Spirit,—a mode of expression which Mr. T. says he never before heard from the lips of a pagan Indian.

The mission was brought into very straitened circumstances last winter in consequence of a deficiency of provisions, having depended upon securing fish from the lake, and almost wholly failed in the effort. They were thankful that they were not, as the Indians often are, reduced to absolute want.

The Indians often quit their employments that they may hear the missionaries preach. But one of them, having refused to allow a meeting to be held in his wig wam, was expostulated with, and after a few moments' deep study and reflection, said, "Read to us." I asked what part he wanted to hear. He replied, "That part you say you read to the chief about the Son of God." Since that time he has been a very attentive listener. Mr. T. says that sometimes there is strong opposition, but in general the Indians are friendly to the mission. He deeply laments that so few of his white brethren, "who say they love Jesus, are willing to leave all and go to enlighten these dark minds, when Jesus left all the bliss and glory of heaven to come and die for Turks." He concludes his deeply interesting letter by saying:—

"Oh that God would cause a seven years' famine to come over the accursed enemy Sectarianism, which is eating out the vitals and consuming the flesh of your beloved Zion. Then would the soldiers of King Jesus go forth hand in hand to fight the battles of the Lord our God. Then would the wilderness break forth into singing, and all the trees clap their hands for joy."

The influence of the agents sent out by Government to instruct the Indians in agriculture, and to teach them trades, has been a great curse rather than a blessing to them. A young lawyer, probably as a reward for political services, was sent out to teach the Indians husbandry; and a foreigner, of an extremely vicious character, succeeded him. This is the more to be deplored, as the Indians have a great passion for gambling, intemperance and other vices; and also consider themselves the children of their great Father, the President.

An impression seems to be general among the aborigines in this region, that their religion is to be superseded by the religion of the white man. This important fact is a great encouragement to the missionaries, and a strong reason for sustaining this mission in a more liberal manner. It also appeals powerfully to the people of God to pray for a more abundant effusion of the Holy Spirit upon these children of the forest.

CANADA MISSIONS.

Mr. and Mrs. Baooks, having left Mount Hope shortly before the last Annual Meeting, which they attended, embarked for Africa, as a reinforcement to the Mendi Mission. Their minds were brought to this determination, after much deliberation and prayer, by a consideration of the urgent wants of that mission, the importunate solicitation of Mr. Thompson for help, and the fact that a large number of the families of their settlement in Canada, having opportunity to dispose of their property advantageously, had determined to remove to another District. At their departure, they left the school in the sole care of Miss Mary A. Trall, from Albany N. Y., who had been fitted out for a teacher among the fugitives in Canada, by friends in Albany, and the Female Missionary Society connected with the State street Baptist church of that city.

A few months after the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Brooks on their foreign mission, the Committee invited Rev. J. P. Bardwell, general agent of the Ojibue Mission, to visit Canada, inquire into the situation of affairs at Mount Hope, the condition of the property given to the Association by Mr. and Mrs. Brooks, and of the colored population between Toronto and Amherstburg, and the qualifications of teachers and missionaries among them. Mr. B. performed this service very acceptably. From his report we gather the following:

"Miss Teall has a large and interesting school of white and colored children, including youth of various ages, besides a large Sabbath-school. One person is wholly inadequate to attend to all the pressing cares that devolve upon her. She is evidently doing much good. The parents can do but little to sustain the school. Very little help can be obtained from Government. Some of the colored people are prejudiced against the whites on account of the distribution of goods and clothing sent into the country for the fugitives. These goods are subject to duties, freight and other charges, the amount of which often exceeds the value of the property, and it has been necessary at times to sell a portion of the goods to defray these charges; and satisfactory distribution of the property has been attended with so much difficulty, that it is deemed advisable that no more articles of the kind should be sent. It would be better for friends at the principal depots on this side to be supplied with suitable goods and clothing to be given to the panting fugitive, as an outfit, as he passes out of the States into Canada.

"A school is now taught in the school-house formerly occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Brooks, by a British subject. It is a district school, and receives aid from the Government. The colored people are fast leaving that part of the country, and are settling farther to the north, near Owen's Sound, where Government gives fifty acres of land to actual settlers, on condition that they clear twelve acres, and build a good dwelling-house, within four years. Some of the more industrious will, however, remain, pay for their farms, and become good subjects. Doubtless as large a proportion become industrious men as could be found among any other people raised under similar circumstances."

Miss Teall appears to have labored with much perseverance, and has been sustained by donations from the friends of the cause, scattered over the country, part of which have passed through the treasury of this Association. Under date of August 30th, she sends for various juvenile publications for her scholars, and writes

"The school numbers over one hundred. I wish for the papers enumerated in my letter, for which I inclose the pay, although I am almost entirely without funds; yet I feel that the improvement and advancement of the children are far dearer to me than the comforts of life. Besides those that lived with me when Mr. Bardwell was here, I have taken a little orphan girl, twelve years old. She lived with

Mrs. Brooks four years, and has been like a lost sheep ever since Mrs. B. left, till she came to live with me, a few days ago. She can read well, has learned Natural Philosophy, Geography, and has some knowledge of Arithmetic. She and little Daniel, who has lived with me ever since I came here, are the best scholars of any of the colored children that I have known. Daniel can read well, can write a plain hand, understands Arithmetic, has learned Natural Philosophy and Geography.

Besides, he is a very trusty boy.

"My school has been unusually interesting this summer. I feel that my labors have not been in vain in the Lord. Some have been led to cry, 'What shall I do to be saved?' How I love to hear that! To me it is like bread to the hungry. Provisions have been very scarce here this season. Thad to send nearly twenty miles for a barrel of flour—and then the cost! But the harvest has been gathered in, and a plenteous one too, for the Lord has dealt with a bountiful hand here this season. It has been very sickly here. At the commencement of the season there was a drouth. Since July 4th, there has been scarcely a week without rain. It has been exceedingly warm. Many have died. Our lives are still spared, though we have all been sick!"

Miss Teall intimates that she has not received my aid or advice from her patrons at Albany since last winter, and remarks, "I am constrained to believe that the Lord will provide; if he does not in that direction, some other way will be opened. I shall continue to trust him. Though I am somewhat straitened at present, yet I believe he will not leave me utterly."

The Association has never taken any other responsibility with regard to Miss Teall than receiving and transmitting such funds and goods as have been specially sent for her benefit. She has relied, under God, upon the free-will offerings of those who might, after being acquainted with her doings, take pleasure in aiding her to sustain her school.

Rev. Isaac J. Rice, late of Amherstburg, Canada West, is no longer in any way connected with the Association. Several months since the Corresponding Secretary was requested to write to him, advising his withdrawal from the charge of the mission station at Amherstburg. He has, we understand, become an evangelist among the colored Baptists. It seems desirable that an intelligent, trustworthy, and judicious man, of regular habits, and possessed of some native dignity of character, should be located at Amherstburg,—one entitled to the confidence of the friends of the people of color, who should devote his whole time to the instruction and assistance of the large number of persons in that region fleeing from oppression-We hope that such an individual will soon be found. The Committee will gladly be the channel of donations to such a person.

The Committee take occasion here to observe that money is, from time to time, sent to them for specific objects, in consequence of very urgent appeals made in newspapers, circulars, &c., and would respectfully suggest that it is more desirable, and would probably better promote the general cause, if such funds were sent to be distributed by the Committee, according to what they may know of the real wants and merits of the different applicants for aid.

There are committees and agents both in Canada and the States, who obtain donations of money and goods, under various pretenses, and for different objects, who are not entitled to confidence. Much that is collected in this way never reaches the destination for which it is intended or collected, and much that does reach its destination is wasted. In one case a white person, acting in the States as the agent of a committee of colored people in Canada, has never been seen by them; no agreement exists respecting the amount of his compensation; he has never been settled with; they have no knowledge of the amount he collects, or of his post-office address. On the other hand, a colored person living in Canada solicits and receives goods and money from the States, under the pretense of acting as the authorized agent of fugitives, being wholly unworthy of confidence. It appears unwise to countenance any agent said to derive his authority from any committee of fugitive slaves, and the sooner the colored people of Canada, as a body, are cut off from the expectation of any such help, the better it will be for them, though many greatly need such assistance, and some would make a good use of it. But if they rely upon such aid, they will not make proper efforts to sustain themselves when they could do so

There is no lack of religious teachers among the colored people in Canada-While some of them are intelligent and devoted Christions, there are others who substitute noise, rant and harsh language for Christianity. It is supposed that about one third of the adult colored population are professors of religion. The difficulties attending missionary operations among the colored people of Canada, arise in a great measure from the multitude of ignorant and fanatical preachers, their strong prejudices and party spirit, and the sparseness of the population. Probably the best mode of benefiting them is to furnish them with competent school-teachers, who will devote themselves to their employment, while the missionaries itinerate among both blacks and whites.

Mr. Bardwell spent a Sabbath at London. There are there three small colored churches of different denominations. There is also a free school to which all have access. There is also a Temperance Society of one hundred members. Most of the colored people at this place are in comfortable circumstances; several are free-holders, and some are good business men.

Mr. Bardwell visited the Dawn Institute. It has dwindled down to a small concern, and the managers are much embarrassed by debt. It seems a great mistake in judgment to attempt to build up a high school or college there, instead of laying out the money collected in establishing and maintaining common schools, especially when the funds are committed to trustees who are incompetent. Common schools are much needed, and are all the seminaries of learning that will be needed for many years. The location at Dawn is a good one for a seminary of a higher class whenever it is needed. Mr. Wilson, the projector of this institution has had no connection with it for two or three years. It is now under the management of a committee of whom Mr. Hauson is the agent. The colored people of Dawn are not sufficiently numerous to constitute a mission field.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have each had a school during the past winter. Mrs. W. had about twenty-five female scholars of all ages, from childhood to old age. One colored girl comes four miles daily to attend the school. One woman having several grand-children attended her school, and in three months learned to read and write very well. Mr. W.'s school was small at the time Mr. B. was there, and it has averaged about fifteen scholars. Mr. W. seem's to have the confidence of all as a man of piety and devotedness. He has had a long experience among this people, and is in many respects well qualified to labor among them. He may have erred in the matter of the Dawn Institute, but may, with his intelligent and devoted companion, with proper aid, be still useful in Canada. Miss Huntington, who was sent out by the Baptist Board, had an interesting school about two miles from Dawn. Mr. B. was informed that she is doing good.

There are many settlements of colored people in Canada which Mr. B. could not visit. He states that he visited Amherstburg, near Detroit, and considers it one of the most important stations in the country: that Mr. Rice is considered a man of piety, though eccentric, and possessed of but little influence among the largest portion of the colored population; that he has been advised by several judicious friends to leave this field for one more appropriate to his abilities and business habits. Rev. Mr. Kirkland's station is ten miles from Amherstburg.

SANDWICH ISLANDS MISSION.

MAKAWAO, EAST MAUI .- Missionaries, REV. JONATHAN S. GREEN, and Mrs. GREEN.

Mr. Green has kept up a regular correspondence. He has communicated for our paper, and for numerous other periodicals through us, much valuable information. He has also been a contributor to the Polynesian, at Honolulu, and discussed ably many subjects of interest to the government, the people, and the mission. Sickness and death have made unprecedented ravages at the Islands; and the frequent and exciting intercourse with California, the return of adventurers from the mines to spend their leisure and waste their money, has had a deleterious effect upon the morals of the Islanders, though in a worldly point of view they have profited by the greatly increased demand for their products. Many of the native church members, although none of Mr. Green's congregation, have gone to California, while thousands of them have died on the Islands. The need of prayer, under such trying circumstances, has been felt by God's people there; and some have been praying for a thorough baptism of the Holy Ghost, believing that God alone can arrest the progress of iniquity, and prevent the Islanders from being awallowed up, to the extent more civilized nations are, in worldliness and that covetousness which is idolatry.

Some of the natives are acquiring property, and are endeavoring to improve themselves and their families, and aid the cause of Christian benevolence. As an evidence of this, a native merchant of Honolulu sends, through Mr. Green, twenty-five dollars, to pay for various religious and philanthropic newspapers and magazines, which he desires to receive regularly. Some of the churches have taken up collections to ransom slave women in this country, who are about to be carried to the South; and for the relief of those who have escaped from bondage. And, subsequently to the disgraceful seizure of Honolulu by the French, the destruction of property by them belonging to the Islanders to the value of upwards of sixty thousand dollars, and the attempt to force upon the Hawaiian race a hated religion at the mouth of the canoon, a collection of $200 was made and forwarded for the Evangelical Society in France, thus heaping coals of fire upon the heads of the French Government and nation.

The experiment of selling lands at Makawao to the people by the Government, has succeeded beyond expectation. Scarcely anything, it is believed, will tend more to save the nation from destruction than the entire success of this measure. Messrs. Lafon, Green and Locke exerted a powerful and salutary influence over the Government and people with reference to this matter. For many years they steadily labored to instruct the chiefs that it was not only their duty to put their people into possession of the lands, but that it was their wisest policy to do so. Influenced by the advice of these missionaries, the people have respectfully but earnestly petitioned the King and chiefs to sell them small farms. Since Dr. Lafon's return, Mr. Green, who had set the example of deriving his support from the native congregation—a practice which we are glad to know has since been recommended by the A. B. C. F. M. to all their missionaries at these Islands—has consented to act as the agent of the Government for the sale of lands, in small percels, to the people of his own charge and to others. At length the King, in Privy Council, adopted resolutions sweeping away the last vestige of the feudal tenure, which has proved so detrimental to all concerned.

Mr. Green laments that missionaries send their children to the United States, and that so many missionaries leave the Islands for home, never to return. The sending of children away prepares the way for parents to leave, and since 1820 no fewer than thirty adult missionaries have left their field of labor and returned to this country, not one of whom has returned; and nearly sixty children of missionarie have been sent to the United States to be reared and educated. Children can be educated at the Islands, and retaining them would be of great service to the Islanders. The example of well-trained families would tend essentially to the improvement of the natives, and be a powerful auxiliary in the civilization and conversion of the implantate.

In a letter dated May 6th, Mr. Green speaks of the increased ability of the people to support their religious teachers, besides contributing to the cause of benevolence in other countries. He says:—

"I am unable to report revivals of religion at the several stations; still I cannot but hope that souls are being converted by the agency of God's truth. While many who, in the season of intense excitement several years since, became hopefully renewed in the temper of their minds, but who were merely stony-ground hearers, are falling off, one after another, the truly pious are growing in grace. . . . The number of poor, drunken, licentious, and in other respects, wretched foreigners who left the Islands on hearing the report of gold, hastened to the mines, clutched the gold till their hands were filled, returned to San Francisco, exchanged their treasure for the intoxicating cup, drank and died, is very great. Such a list of names I could give you from Maui. The thought of the death of such men is dreadful, but the benefit to the people of their removal from the Islands is sur-passingly great. Death has these last few months been doing a strange work in relation to foreigners at these Islands, although a merciful one to the natives. . . . The rush to California has opened a source of wealth to the Islands. There is a demand for everything that the country will produce. Prices have risen greatly. . . . These calls upon the people, and the extravagant profits, have stimulated them to labor. If they become permanently industrious, great will be the gain. On the other hand, the state of things is so peculiar that I cannot but fear the utter and speedy ruin of the nation. . . . The greatest earthly danger is, that foreigners will rush in, purchase lands, and the people be crowded out and perish."

SIAM MISSION.

BANGKOK.. Missionaries, Rev. B. B. Bradley, M. D.; Rev. L. B. Lane, M. D.; Prop. J. Silsey; Mrs. Bradley, Mrs. Lane and Mrs. Silsey. Total, 6.

The missionary families, mentioned in the last Annual Report, sailed from the city of New-York, Oct. 24th. Previous to their departure a farewell meeting was held at Brooklyn, with them and those under appointment for the Mendi Mission; and religious services were held on board the brig Ernani, the vessel in which the missionaries for Siam had taken their passage. Both were occasions of solemn interest. Careful provision was made by the Committee for the comfort of the missionaries and their children, during the passage they were about to undertake. It was sanguinely expected that the fast sailing clipper would make an extraordinarily short passage; but owing to adverse winds, our friends did not arrive at Singapore, some 800 miles from Bangkok, until the 8th of March. Their lealth was uniformly good, except the customary sea-sickness. Of the ability of the officers of the brig, and the seaman-like qualities of the crew, the missionaries speak highly; but owing to the unaccommodating temper of the captain, their feelings were greatly tried. They endeavored to exert a good influence, and have reason to believe that their instructions and prayers were blessed to one or more on board. Under the teaching of Dr. Bradley, the missionaries made some proficiency in acquiring the use of the Siamese language.

At Singapore they found a letter from the brethren of the Presbyterian mission at Bangkok, welcoming their old friend Dr. Bradley and the reinforcement that accompanied him to Siam, and conveying favorable intelligence of the health of the mission families there. Dr. B. also received a letter from Prince Chaufa Mongkut, expressing gratification at his return with new missionaries.

As there was no immediate opportunity to sail for Bangkok, they were obliged to remain at Singapore five or six weeks, when Dr. Lane and Prof. Silsby, with their wives and little ones, embarked, leaving Dr. and Mrs. Bradley for a short period, on account of her approaching confinement. Accounts have been received from Dr. Bradley to May 17th, dated at Singapore. He expected to embark with Mrs. B. and their infant the same day for Bangkok.

The brethren undoubtedly met with a cordial reception at Bangkok, and entered at once upon the missionary service. By a letter received here after their departure from this country, from a missionary at Bangkok, we learned that several of the tracts prepared by Dr. Bradley and Mr. Caswell were out of print, and new editions were greatly geeded. The writer expressed the belief that Dr. Bradley would find full employment for a long time after his arrival, in preparing such tracts as are needed for circulation. The pleasing intelligence was communicated, that there exists at Bangkok a spirit of inquiry which promises good to the missionary work, and that some conversions have occurred.

Dr. B., as physician to the royal family, has access to many of the principal persons in Siam, and his co-operation would naturally be sought by the missionaries of other Boards stready there; one of whom has written that the King and many of his courtiers are much engaged in examining the merits of the different religious now in the kingdom, and that a number of the nobles have sent for the Scriptures to study, though it may be with a proud and skeptical spirit.

Letters have been received by the Corresponding Secretary, written in tolerably good English, from Prince Chaufa Mongkut, explaining the order, so misunderstood at first, that the King, his brother, had determined to expel missionaries who would not submit to certain religious ceremonies, supposed to have something to do with the superstitions of Buddhism. The Prince is heir apparent to the throne, and the principal priest of the kingdom, but he is friendly to the American missionaries and understands the claims of the gospel.

Dr. Bradley, we perceive, is a correspondent of the Independent, a very able weekly religious paper in the city of New-York, and has already communicated letters respecting Singapore, of much interest, some of which have been or will be re-published in the Society's paper. This station is one of the most important ever selected in foreign lands, as the field of effort for American missionaries. In the providence of God, the mission, originally under the care of the A. B. C. F. M. has fallen, but by no fault of the missionaries, into the hands of this Association. We refrain at this time from adding to explanations already made in the origan of the Society, respecting the history of this strange affair, or replying to the attempted justification, put forth in a pamphlet privately circulated, for cutting off the esteemed missionaries whose praise was in all the churches. Suffice it to say, that in a spirit of love and with earnestness they endeavored to infuse more deeply into the mission, what they regarded as the sanctifying principles of the gospel, which produced on the part of some of their brethren of the mission opposition and rebuke, and resulted, on the part of the Prudential Committee, in an act of virtual excision for "doctrinal errors;" as was subsequently stated by them, the circumstances constituted "a complex case." The brethren now constituting the mission, are of one heart and one mind, laboring, we trust, in the inviting field of their choice, for the salvation of men under the approving smiles of the great Head of the Church. We commend them to Him, and to the word of His grace.

CITY MISSIONARY,-REV. CHAS. B. RAY.

The Sixth Annual Report of Mr. Ray was submitted to the Committee in April last, and by their direction printed in paniphlet form. He has acted as missionary to the destitute colored population of the city of New. York. His compensation the past year amounted to $612, nearly the whole of which he collected himself from members of our Association and persons friendly to his missionary labors. Mr. Ray reports that his "church now numbers thirty-four members, and that at times during the winter there have been signal tokens that God was amongst them." Although there has been but a small increase of members, they have been benefited in various ways. Extensive visitation has been made to the sick and poor over a large range of population. Visits have been made on every alternate Tuesday to the Colored Home, one of the charitable institutions of the city, excepting as they have been interrupted by the cholera, and the removal of the institution. A good work of the Lord has been going on at the Home, and quite a number of its immates have been hopefully converted.

Special effort has been made to gather children from the streets into the Sabbath-school connected with the mission church.*

Mr. Ray, in closing his Report, gives the following summary of his labors during the year: "I have held 176 religious meetings—preached 158 sermons—distributed 18,000 pages of religious tracts—and administered the Lord's Supper 12 times. Three persons have been added to the church, and twenty-nine children to the Sabbath-school. A Biblé class of 6 adults has also been taught through the winter by one of the deacons."

MISSIONS IN DIFFERENT STATES.

The Executive Committee have assisted, during the past year, twenty-one ministers within the limits of our own country, in preaching the gospel. Of these, five have been laboring in Ohio, five in Wisconsin, three in Illinois, two in Iowa, one in Michigan, three in New-York, one in Kentucky, (one is now on his way to New-Mexico,) in addition to the New-York city missionary, and the colporteur in Kentucky. The annexed schedule shows some of the results of the labors of these missionaries. It is a matter of regret that full and uniform reports were not seasonably received from all of them, to enable the Committee to state more definitely the facts in the case:—

 Mr. R. has devoted considerable time, in conjunction with the Board of Education appointed by the State, in efforts to gather the children of the colored population into the Public Schools established in the city of New-York.

Mr. Fee, of Kentucky, reports as follows:-

"My church is laboring for Christian union. Truth and consistency drove us to it. When we withdrew we were called schismatics. We replied, No; those bodies are not Christian bodies, but adulterers and slaveholders. They do not expect the spirit of Christ, they teach not the whole doctrine of Christ, they do not the work of Christ; how can they be called Christians? Individual Christians there may be among them, but the body ought not to be thought so. We proposed a union of Christians to come up as one man against the mighty. Presbyterians. Baptists and Methodists came together. We mentioned only fundamental points. letting names go.

"I am laboring with two churches, one in Lewis county and one in Bracken county. The church at the latter place I assisted in organizing a few weeks since. county. The church at the latter place I assisted in organizing a few weeks since. The average number attending our congregations is about 100 in Lewis county, and 150 in Bracken county. We have for a few months been passing through a great trial of persecution. We are not popular, and it is only the few tried one that will come out to hear. It is something to live through such times, have faith tried, and the dross of the love of this world's praise purged out. Something was meant by the apostle when he spoke of 'dying to the world.' We have generally found more encouraging times, so far as heavers are concerned, after these seasons have passed over. Light is now gleaming in the horizon. The clouds

"The additions to our church on profession of faith, during the year, were 23; by letter, one. Several applications for letters have been made by individuals to the surrounding churches, and in almost every instance they have been refused. Hence most persons now come without letter, and unite with us on profession of their faith. The present number of communicants is 35. From the commencement as a church, we have suffered every year by removals. Those who join our church love freedom. Persecution rests upon them and their families. And the advantages for them and their children in a slave State are few. Hence such persons are continually going from our State to free States. They want homes of peace for themselves when age comes on, and places of safety for their children when they are gone. Thus it is that slavery crowds out of our State many of our virtuous and most conscientious citizens. But we have comfort in the reflection, that they will go forth as converted souls, to plant, or help plant, the principles of holiness before God and justice to man in other places. The number of church-members pledged to total abstinence is 31. Four refused signing, because they believed 'the church is sufficient.' All abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks. The number of pledges obtained in Lewis county this year is 54. Have made no move in Bracken county yet. Number of Sabbath-school scholars in Lewis county is 63. As a body, we have given our influence against secret affiliated societies, and have adopted, as a church, the pledge of the American Temperance Union,

"The advantage or utility of our organization here consists not merely in the number of persons converted by its instrumentality, but also in planting in slave territory a church having no connection or fellowship with slaveholding; in establishing the precedent that such can live in a slave State; in waking up continual agitation in surrounding churches, on the subject of fellowship with slaveholding: in training here persons who will move abroad in this and into other States to plant similar churches; in having an organized body here continually, not merely talking, but circulating anti-slavery documents among their neighbors, relatives and acquaintances; also in holding correspondence with friends throughout the State. and forwarding to them anti-slavery documents, thus preparing the way for similar congregations to our own in other counties. From three or four other counties we have intelligence that materials will soon be ready for congregations similar to our own, uniting as Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians upon those points of faith and practice which are essential to Christian character, allowing tolerance of opinion and practice on those points not essential, and thus securing purity on the one hand, and avoiding the evils of sectarianism—dividing the body of Christ—those whom we admit to be Christians, on the other. In this way we present a stronger front than we could possibly otherwise do against slave-holding, and all else that prevents the growth of essential or true Christianity.

May the Lord lead us in the way of all necessary truth, and sanctify us for efficient usefulness!"

In a subsequent letter, he says:—"Two weeks since, next Sabbath, a slaveholder placed himself in the door and would not let me enter. Some three or four hundred peaceable citizens, good farmers and their families, were there. They remonstrated. I talked. The people took a vote, and the whole number, one excepted, walked over to the affirmative side. The slaveholder, with a few of his friends, continued to guard the door. The people offered to use force, but I said, 'No.' I tell you, my brother in Christ, that I have no feelings of revenge.

... I pray that God will induce me to love my enemies. No insult or violence for years past has aroused in me unkind feelings. The slaveholder will be prosecuted. We believe the law cannot be a terror to evil doers unless it is enforced. All our persecutions thus far have resulted in great good. The decisions of the courts in our favor have given us liberty and ascendency over many, which we could not have obtained in any other way."

In June the Committee appointed Rev. W. G. Kephart, of the Free Synod of Cincinnati, a missionary to New-Mexico. He visited New-York to have a conference with the Committee. Theuce he went to Washington to procure information. After his return to Ohio he took leave of his pastoral charge, August 5th, and commenced preparations for his journey. Mr. K. was highly recommended by several friends of the Association in Ohio, and generous sums were pledged in that State for his expenses, should he be commissioned. He was a printer by trade, and since his introduction to the ministry has occupied interesting and fruitful fields of labor, both as a pastor and a missionary. In undertaking this mission he leaves an affectionate and united people, feeling that the providence of God calls him to this new and arduous field of labor. Being without a family, he desires no other compensation than his necessary expenses.

Mr. K. goes to New-Mexico to inquire into the moral and religious condition of the people, to circulate Tracts, Bibles, and other publications of a useful nature, to show the inhabitants the advantages of free over slave labor, to promote education, and the formation of Sabbath-schools and a church, to encourage the establishment of a free press, to communicate to the Committee valuable information, to enlist coadjutors, and to preach the gospel. He is instructed, while he scrupulously avoids becoming a political partisan, or even a politician in the modern acceptation of the term, to bear in mind the obligation resting upon every Christian minister to show the practical bearings of God's truth on the political duties of man, and that he should avoid exposing himself to the penalty of any law, except when he cannot obey the law without direct disobedience to God.

Mr. K.'s last letter was dated Independence, Mo., September 6th. He had made arrangements to leave Fort Leavenworth the week following in "Brown's train," and remarks: "Mr. B. says I can go out with the train, so far as I myself am concerned, free of charge, if I will take their fare; and I suppose if they can live on it I can. I will have to buy a mule, which can be had for $75 or $80, and sold on our arriving at Santa F6, for as much or more than the cost here." Mr. K.'s expenses for freight will be heavy. It is interesting to remark that he had designed to go across the prairies by another mode of conveyance, and that a person connected with the same advised him not to do so, the reason being, as Mr. K. afterwards found, that the contractors had privately determined not to send their vehicles the whole distance. The presumption is, that the partner, who gave the advice, respected the character of the missionary too well to suffer him to be imposed upon. By following his advice Mr. K. expects to save at least $150.

Mr. K. expresses his obligations to Mr. Livingston, pastor of the Presbyterian

(O. S.) church, and to gentlemen interested in the conveyance to Santa F6, for the favorable terms on which he goes across the plains. He adds, that the stories about the dangers attending a trip to Santa F6 are greatly magnified. "Scarcely one train in five hundred is ever seriously molested by the Indians, and the persons who are killed are usually the victims of their own indiscretion in wandering away from the train. At least such is the representation given me here by those who know most of that mode of life. In fact it appears as if nearly every person here has been to Santa F6 at some time or other, especially the young men. Those who have been through give a dark picture of the moral condition of that field, which is anything else than encouraging, but the Lord is sufficient for all things, and I trust I have committed myself, and the whole work into his hand. 'If God be for us, who can be against us?'"

We trust that this brother, and the important mission on which he has entered, will be remembered in the prayers and benefactions of the friends of the cause.

The Committee are constrained to believe that very inadequate views are entertained of the importance of Home Missions, or of the obligations resting upon our friends to contribute to the support of those only whose principles and conduct accord with the principles of the Association. The Home Missionary enterprise is becoming in our country, every year, of increasing importance. Without any disposition to rail at other Home Missionary organizations, we are compelled to say that exclusive of those missionary and ecclesiastical bodies that are formed with a distinct reference to the Anti-slavery principle, there are no societies in this country that seek to carry forward home operations in a manner characterized by the true spirit of the gospel. The great command, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise," is not sufficiently regarded. The slave, precisely the being whose condition is of necessity like that of the heathen, and whose case receives more than any other class of men the sympathy of Him whose mission was to the poor, is scarcely recognized by his fellow-men as having claims on the charities or benefactions of the great existing organizations of our country. Few efforts are made by them to supply him with that instruction which is regarded as essential to his spiritual and eternal interest; no missionaries are sent out to minister adequately to his wants or enlighten his ignorance, although it is a well-known fact that in all the slaveholding States, where their missionaries are sent, not one out of ten of the slaves, even of those claimed by the masters to whom they preach, are brought even occasionally under their ministry.

The line of Christian duty appears to be now as clearly marked out, as proper to be followed by anti-slavery Christians in the work of Home Missions as in Foreign Missions; and there appears to be no good reason why the friends of this Association should not refuse to contribute to the treasury of any missionary organization home or foreign, that sustains, in whole or part, slaveholding churches; that sanctions the admission of such offenders into the Church; that patronizes those who preach to them as if they were Christians, or who assert in any way the Christian character of the slaveholder. There are many ministers of the gospel who have, for conscience' sake, voluntarily relinquished connection with missionary Boards that plant or sustain churches into which slaveholders are admitted, and where such persons are not disciplined for holding men as chattels personal. And there are a multitude of others who, from an apprehension of want, are tempted to stifle their convictions with regard to receiving aid from questionable sources, or to abandon the ministry and seek secular employment. Shall we not esteem it both a duty and a privilege to sustain such men in yielding to conscientious convictions. and in connecting themselves with this Association?

SLAVES' BIBLE FUND AND COLPORTEUR.

The Committee have employed two colporteurs in Kentucky the past year, though only one at a time, to distribute copies of the Bible among the slaves who can read, to circulate Anti-slavery publications, and to converse and pray with bond and free, as they had opportunities of doing them good. The good effected by this instrumentality has been obvious. It is a work requiring great labor, patience, selfcommand, faith and courage. One of the colporteurs, in the record of his daily labors, says :-

"In nearly every family they were talking about the Church question, i. e. the duty of the Church to separate herself entirely from all connection with slaveholding. Through the influence of our little church, the Reformed Baptist church has been induced to take decisive action on the subject.

"Nov. 3d .- In one of the families I visited this day, I found a Baptist sister who said she was going to leave her church. Her preacher had come out in favor of oppression, and she could remain no longer. (She has since joined our little church.) Nov. 15th .- I visited and had conversation in eight families. In one of them, a sister in the Church said she thought we should not agitate the anti-slavery question. While talking, I asked her if she thought she should be silent on the question if she had a sister in bonds. Her instant reply was, 'No; I could not stand that.' I reminded her that Christ had sisters in bonds, and argued the duty of doing for them as we would have them do for us. When I left, I gave her some anti-slavery documents, and she received them thankfully."

It is apparent, from the report of the colporteur, that there are numbers in the slave States who will, if the churches with which they are connected do not entirely divorce themselves from all connection with slaveholders, withdraw from them and form anti-slavery churches. We learn also that the sins of church members, in relation to slavery, are used, as might be expected, by the impenitent, to ward off the force of truth.

A person said to one of our colporteurs : "I and my wife have fully come to the conclusion that we must leave our church on account of its connection with slavery. We feel that we cannot do our duty to God while we sanction this evil. The first time you were here I was an advocate for slavery, but I did it ignorantly, and I hope God will forgive me."

One of the colporteurs was arrested in July on the charge of attempting to entice away a slave woman and her children. The warrant was taken out by a member of a Baptist church. Bail was given for his appearance at court, and he was released. On his trial, which took place in August, he was acquitted. The Judge was very decided in the matter, that the evidence was wholly insufficient. The defense has put the Association to an expense of about $125. The distribution of the Bible will be prosecuted by the colporteur originally employed by the Committee, who is considered a judicious man. He is deacon of an anti-slavery church in Kentucky.

AUXILIARIES, AND FRIENDLY BODIES.

The Third Annual Report of the "Penobscot (Me.) Missionary Association," was published at length in the monthly paper of the Society of May last. It contains an able vindication of the distinctive principles of the Association. They say: "While we judge not for others, we have taken this step as a matter of conscience and duty and we invite Christians of every denomination who hold the same sentiments, to co-operate with us in extending the pure and peaceable principles of our holy religion to all who inhabit the dark places of the earth which are full of cruelty and blood:" and conclude their excellent Report as follows:-

"We have no controversy with other Boards; we cannot stop to dispute or wrangle. We have commenced building the wall over against our own house, and must not be drawn off from our work. The field of operations is large enough for the enterprise of the whole Church of God on earth; and while we invite increased co-operation in extending the benefits of the Society to all 'God's poor,' we say, in the language of Abram to Lot, 'Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen, for we be brethren.'

A Christian Anti-slavery Convention was held at Cincinnati, April 17-20, to consider, "whether each member of an organized body is not held responsible by God for the sin of the organization of which he VOLUNTARILY forms a part." Nearly two thousand responses were received to the call, which was signed by a Committee of fifteen persons, of whom twelve were clergymen, representing eight different denominations of Christians. The discussions continued four days, and the following resolution was adopted :-

Resolved, That the friends of a pure Christianity ought to separate themselves from all slaveholding churches, and all churches, ecclesiastical bodies, and missionary associations that are not fully divorced from slaveholding; and we who may still be in connection with such bodies, pledge ourselves that we will separate ourselves from them, unless they will speedily separate themselves from all support of, or fellowship with, slaveholding.

A Constitution was formed, and an Address to the American Churches was adopted, with a statement of reasons for the organization of the Society, which bears the name of the "Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association," and is aux. iliary to this Association. We hail the formation of this important auxiliary, and rejoice in its efforts to promote the establishment of other associations auxiliary to it.

A Christian Anti-slavery Convention was held at Ottawa, May 28th, which adopted a resolution that "it is desirable to secure a permanent organization of Christians of every denomination in Illinois, who believe in non-fellowship as the only proper Christian position towards slaveholders," and appointed a Committee to digest and report, at an adjourned meeting, to be held September 17, 1850, a plan for such organization. .

A Christian Anti-slavery Convention was held at Medina, Ohio, June 4th, composed of delegates from nearly all denominations existing in the vicinity-namely, Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Episcopalian and Free Presbyterian. They went thoroughly into the matter of considering and discussing the Christian duty of protesting against American slavery. No permanent society was formed, but the members of the Convention pledged themselves to separate from all churches that fellowship slaveholders.

It is a matter of congratulation that other similar Conventions are held from time to time. At a Convention of New-England Baptists, held at Lowell, Mass, August 9th, a Constitution was formed, the third article of which is as follows: 'This Society shall be entirely disconnected from slavery in all its forms, and shall not receive the known avails of oppression into its treasury."

The "Free-will Baptists" and the "Reformed Presbyterian Synod of North America" have long since refused to admit slaveholders to their communion.

THE "AMERICAN MISSIONARY."

More than 11,000 copies of this sheet are printed every month, and sent gratuitously to all donors and persons recommended by them, who will pay the postage, and read the paper. The Committee hope that none of them will be suffered to lie in post-offices, unread, but that the friends of the cause will pay personal attention to this matter, and use their efforts to extend the circulation of the paper, and induce their ministers, church officers and members to read it. The perusal of it has already greatly interested large numbers, and induced them to contribute to the support of the missionaries of the Association, and to secure for the Society a place on the list of benevolent societies, to be presented for the regular contributions of the people.

AGENTS AND COLLECTORS.

The Association employs but four callecting agents. Those in the service of the Society are ministers of the gospel, who preach, when opportunity offers, on the claims of missions, and especially of missions wholly free from the corrupt influences of slavery and caste, and in various ways exert a very beneficial influence with regard to the Association.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, the Committee are deeply impressed with the importance of the Association, the need of its extension, and liberal support. At no time, since its formation, has it been more necessary. The politicians of the day are triumphing over the organized Church, and not a few, who should be its defenders, are basely succumbing to political men and parties. The poor colored man, both enslaved and free, is scorned and trampled upon by the slaveholder; and the people of the North are required to aid in an attempt to force him to perpetual degradation. Mischief is framed by law. An act, in violation of the Constitution of this country, and impiously opposed to the law of God, has been enacted at the dictation of the South, and by the base subserviency of Northern men, that has spread consternation among the people of color throughout the whole country, and aims to make Northern citizens, to a greater extent than ever, participators in the guilt of slaveholding; and thus extend the baneful system over the whole country, on the penalty of fine and imprisonment. Members of churches, and even some ministers of the gospel, are found to approve this enactment, while many citizens resolve to disobey it, and submit to the penalty. It is evident that the Christianity of the nation is about to be tested in view of the act referred to. Desolation is carried into many peaceable families and persecution is coming upon the people of color, and all who befriend them. The times demand of the friends of the pure and uncompromising religion of Jesus, that they evince a firm determination to discharge their duty as citizens and Christians, to obey God rather than man, and to shield the defenseless and the oppressed, come what will to their persons or property. Let the principles of the Association be wrought into our own souls, let us prayerfully and faithfully carry them out into all the relations of life, in the fear of God; and thus we shall do all that lies in our power to extend the true missionary spirit throughout the land and A STATE OF THE STA

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

MATTHEW X. 34:

"THINK NOT THAT I AM COME TO SEND PEACE ON EARTH; I CAME NOT TO SEND PEACE, BUT A SWORD."

This visible world, and that portion of the spiritual unseen with which we have been made acquainted, are, for the present, in a state of war. This conflict is the necessary precedent of universal and eternal peace.

God has his enemy, named through bad pre-eminence, Satan, The Adversary, chief of the opposing dominion, author of evil, head of all rebellion; distinguished among all wicked beings as the worst, and so fittest to wear the fiery crown of hell.

The moral characters of God and Satan are fixed for eternity. God cannot change, and Satan will not. Of course there can be no peace, no agreement between them; but on the part of God instead, infinite aversion and loathing, and with Satan, hatred and hostility to the utmost extent of a creature's ability, and open war against holiness and truth, until God shall crush and chain him for ever in hell.

The governments of these two beings are exactly opposed in their principles and their purposes; the life and success of the one necessarily involve the ruin of the other. Between their subjects there cannot in the nature of things be agreement or compromise. They who sympathize with God are wholly and heartily the enemies of Satan, and the lovers of Satan are the haters of God. Satan, as god of this world, has constructed here a system of things after his own heart. He has remodelled this portion of God's work, and having brought it to the worst possible condition, he pronounces it satisfactory, as, upon the whole, the most evil thing he could produce, the farthest possible from truth and God.

The world, in its perverted, Satanized condition, sympathizes fully with its monarch wherever the heavenly light has not penetrated its darkness, nor the power of God been exerted for its recovery. The unregenerate world is at peace with Satan, admires his character, and approves his policy. The introduction into such a world of a system of government and morals expressive of the character and will of God, would of course produce agitation and war.

This appears to be the meaning of Christ in the text, "I came not to send peace, but a sword."

The infidel, we know, has based upon this and similar passages an argument against the character of the gospel, as if such an announcement could not proceed from a God of love, from the same Being who proclaimed, as the burthen of his birth-hymn, "Peace on earth, and good-will toward men." We are reminded of the agitations and wars which Christianity, it is said, has produced, and we are asked if such a system is from God? Yes, we reply; and precisely because it reflects the character of God, has it been the occasion of conflict.

Satan, as the Scriptures declare, is the god of this world, reigning over loyal and admiring subjects.

If in a devil's kingdom a gospel should be published, which should be welcomed and cherished there—nay, even tolerated without curses and gnashing of teeth—should we not rightly deem it a devil's gospel, part and parcel of his own plan, born from beneath, and by no means proceeding from God, or expressive of his character! A gospel which can by no means win the approval of Satan or his friends, bears the sign manual of Jesus himself.

The gospel is charged with being a peace-breaker, and some of its ministers are thought to possess little of charity, prudence, or wisdom, because the quiet of society is disturbed. But there are some descriptions of peace which are more fatal than the sternest battle, that must be broken up even at expense of war.

The serpent which takes possession of your house has great peace while he stretches himself and reposes by your fireside; but who could refrain from disturbing that quiet, though he should rear his glittering crest in wrath, and bare the deadly fang? Peace, in such case, must be preceded by war.

The corpse rests in peace, in the bushed repose of death; but would not the mourners rejoice to see it broken by the struggle of returning life, though for the moment the body should thrill with agony, or be distorted with convulsions?

The Israelites enjoyed what they called peace in Egypt. They toiled like the brutes, and sat by the flesh-pots in brutal repose. It was the calm of the withered heart, of the deadened sensibilities of an intellect weakened and blinded. Pharaoh too had peace, while the victim did not struggle in his grasp—while there was none to wonder because of the oppressor, nor eye to pity, nor arm to save. But when Moses demanded that he should yield up his prey, rage and battle succeeded the quiet; he tightened his grasp, he doubled his villanies, and the people accused Moses of untimely ngitation and disturbing the peace they had enjoyed. They mistook, as many even now do, the birth-throes of liberty for the agonies of death.

The demons in the time of Christ were at peace with their victims so long as they ruled and tormented them without control; but when commanded to come out, there was instant conflict—the manifestation of a devil's hate and revenge, wreaked on the torn and foaming sufferers.

The world itself is a demoniac, possessed of Satan, and the proclamation of the gospel is a summons from Christ to come out, a writ of ejectment against the usurping fiend; and the world's agony marks the parting struggle, the tearing and wounding of the demon, the terrible transition state between being possessed of a devil and being ruled by Christ.

This is the sense in which the gospel breaks the so-called peace of the world, and causes instead hostility and battle—sends "not peace, but a sword." The declaration of Christ in the text is equivalent to this proposition: The true gospel, faithfully preached, will, from a law of its nature, excite hatred and opposition; and a gospel which finds favor with an unregenerate world, or with a worldly, backslidden Church, is to the extent of its popularity either false or defective.

If we admit that Christ has stated correctly the character of his gospel, and the effects which its faithful exhibition will produce; if we discover that he himself and his inspired preachers and most devoted followers met in their ministry the very consequences which he predicted, then may we learn the divinely appointed method for the spread of Christianity, and test by the Saviour's own rule the missionary efforts of our times; for the method which they adopted was of course chosen by the direction of God, and so the only one perfectly suited to his purposes, the nature of the gospel, and the character of man. Their rule for presenting truth must also be a universal one, fitted to all times and all circumstances, because the law and the gospel address themselves to what is elementary, and therefore changeless in the nature of man. Their method of preaching, therefore, was one intended not alone for Jew or Greek, European or American, civilized or barbarous, bond or free, but for man; and consequently should govern the missionary efforts of our own times at home and abroad.

Let us commence, then, with the prophets, and study this divinely appointed method of exhibiting truth in this fallen and blinded world. They, acting under the special guidance of the Spirit, presented the Law of God as the supreme Law of the Universe, which no compact or enactment of the creature can alter or supersede; which repeals, annuls, and sets wholly aside every human statute that stands in opposition to itself.

They, instructed by God, claimed for his law universal jurisdiction, as a rule of conduct to be applied to every moral act of man, individual or associate, public of private, civil or ecclesiastical—a system of eternal right, a standard of action changeless as the character of God, in force for ever, through all space, and over all meral beings. There was no height of power to which sin could ascend, and plead there the privilege of position; even David could not escape; the king himself was the subject of God. No opinions, however universal, no customs, however popular, though shielded by wealth or protected by fashion, availed to win favor, awaken fear, or change the terms of the message. The prophet asked not what would be popular, what would be safe, but held up the changeless decisions of righteousness and truth, however wild the agitation caused, however great the danger.

The sin of society, of the nation, was pointed out and condemned as readily as the individual transgression. No combination, however extensive, altered to their minds the nature of guilt. Sin, by naming itself organic, did not become so divided and diffused, that the separate particles were too small to be detected by the eye of God, or be holden by the grasp of the law. That other doctrine, so nearly forgotten or rejected now, the doctrine of associate responsibility, was insisted upon always without a hint of a contrary rule in the administration of God; that moral partnership of communities, nations and all organized bodies, by which the sin of the body attaches to each voluntary member, and the whole body is also held responsible for the act of one. The transgression of one involved his whole household, and the iniquity of one tribe was visited upon the whole confederacy of Israel.

This was the character of the preaching of the prophets, under the direction of God; and what was the result? It is recorded thus in the 11th chapter of Hebrews: "They had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword." Did Paul deem these men injudicious or fanatical? No! no! He says they were men of whom the world was not worthy. They preached as God would have them, and the world hated, and persecuted and slew them. Their gospel brought not peace, but a sword.

This law, thus proclaimed by the prophets, was neither changed nor repealed by Christ. The Jewish ritual and merely local enactments passed, of course, with the nation away. But the moral law, with the added sanction of his own death to attest its inviolable character, Christ re-enacted and proclaimed as the universal rule for man—for Gentille as for Jew. By his death upon the cross, he provided a way of escape from the penalty; but the law, in all its original length, breadth, and strictness of demand, remains a changeless, rule for every moral being. The demands of the law reach to the full extent of man's ability. The law is proclaimed from the cross in tones even more startling than those of Sinai; not, indeed, as a medium of salvation, but still a rule of conduct stretching its demands over all.

Let us turn our attention, then, to Christ as a preacher of the gospel, the model missionary, the pattern teacher. He studied no adaptation of his principles to the prejudices or popular customs of his country. As with the prophets, so with his sin found no available cover or concealment. He published, it is true, general principles, as in his sermon on the mount; but then he arraigned each special iniquity, and, measured by the principle, it was tried and condemned. He spared no darling custom or institution because of its popularity, nor any mischief because it was framed by a law; and though sin was protected by the sanctions of religion and incorporated with the Church of God, he tore it away from the very horns of the altar. He found the law of custe existing in society, separating men into classes that would not associate nor eat with each other; and he turned against it the authority of his own_example, and sat down openly to eat with the despised publican, and held familiar intercourse with the rejected Sanmarian.

He found an extensive branch of commerce, inconsistent with the purity of the house of God; and though it had twined itself round the interests of the merchants, the bankers and agriculturists, was an established trade with much capital invested, and fenced round by habit and prejudice, he abolished it at a stroke, because righteousness demanded that it should be brought to an end. He pointed out the sins of classes and parties, not deeming men beyond the jurisdiction of the law of God, because associated in wrong. The lawyers and scribes as classes, the Pharisees and Sadducees as parties in the State, were each arraigned and condemned; and thus he carried through every department of human action the changeless law of righteousness, and demanded its adoption as the rule of life.

In all this he was the Model Preacher, an example for all time in the presenting of truth, and in deating with sin.

In his hands was the gospel popular? Did it produce a calm or agitation; did it bring peace or a sword? Was it tender of popular or powerful sins? Did he study expediency, or did he declare the truth, and bring it to bear against every sin, in spite of the plottings of the Sanbedriu, the howl of the mob, the smitings of the soldier, the jeer and curse of the priest, the degradation and agony of the cross?

Let us turn a moment to the career of the Apostles, men who received their education and instruction from the Saviour's own lips, and were moreover enlightened and guided by the Spirit himself. As they went forth from Jerusalem, they were met by three great opposing interests, which then, as now, moved and controlled society.

First: They encountered the power of caste, separating the Jew from the Gentile. This first of all aroused the hatred of the Jew. The cry that the institutions of Moses were in danger, that Paul had admitted Gentiles to the privileges of the temple, that Peter was breaking down the separating walls between the Hebrews and the Heathen, and that all the disciples were confounding time-honored distinctions, and placing Jew and Gentile on the same level,—these things stirred the whole nation with indignation and alarm, and raised the storm that swept the disciples out of Jerusalem, and scattered them even beyond the limits of Judea. This law of caste was stamped on the Jewish mind by all the power of early education and unvarying practice, was defended by the authority of antiquity, and by the matchless pride and prejudice of the Jew. Its power-may be learned from the fact that Peter himself, while preaching to the Gentiles, refused for a time to eat with those to whom he was proclaiming a common salvation and a common inheritance.

This law, essential to the very existence of their institutions, and twined round every interest, habit, and feeling of Jewish society, was not suffered to slumber untouched amid its strong defenses, but it was denounced in theory, and openly abolished in practice. There was no stealthy, fearful casting in a few seeds of truth under the cold shadow of opposing principles and habits, trusting that the good grain would finally overtop the noxious growth already on the soil; but the thorn was cut down, and the bramble torn up, and the ground prepared, and laid bare and open to the sunbeam.

Again: There was the moneyed interest of society to oppose the gospel. In such a system as the gorgeous heathenism of Greece and Rome, requiring so vast an amount of decoration, the building and ornamenting of temples and shrines the preparation of sacrifices, the commerce, the agriculture, and the more profitable and elegant branches of manufacture were linked with and depended upon the existing order of things; while the simplicity of the gospel worship threatened to ruin all. The capitalist saw his investment in danger, the operative feared that his employment would be taken from him, the agriculturists that one of their great markets would be closed. In Ephesus the influence of these fears was clearly exhibited. The capitalists and manufacturers cried out that their interests were endangered, that the prosperity of their city would be destroyed, and the general business of Asia Minor be interrupted; and the citizens held a mass indignation meeting in the theatre, and denounced the gospel by acclamation. This moneyed interest, clinging to self and mammon, and rejecting principle, confronted the disciples at every step of their progress, denouncing them as movers of sedition and subverters of the peace and order of society; and yet heathenism was everywhere attacked without fear or favor, the truth was proclaimed, and consequences were committed to God.

The apostles encountered also the ecclesiastical interest. A mighty priesthood, with its pomp and pride, its countless places of honor and emolument, jealous of its interests, and loving the possession and exercise of power, overshadowed the Roman world, the chief power and animating spirit of society. Here, if anywhere, was demanded of the preacher and private Christians a wise regard for circumstances, a prudent consideration of public sentiment, an inquiry as to what would be safe and expedient, a study of the established interests and order of society. Yet we behold instead of this, an open adherence to and proclamation of the truth, an unhesitating exposure of error. Right and expediency were believed to coincide. The seed was fearlessly sown, while its protection and growth were committed in faith to God.

We may learn from the experience of Paul himself whether such a gospel, so published, produced peace or a sword: "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one; thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned. In perils by mine own countrymen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness."

Does this read like an extract from the diary of a popular, safe, prudent, acceptable preacher of the gospel, who, by sagacious adaptation of himself to circumstances, had won golden opinions from all classes, and left the great deeps of human pollution unruffled by a ripple?

Such was the character of the apostolic preaching, and it was followed by the very results which were predicted by Christ. The next era in the history of the Church presents us with a similar scene.

That was not a popular gospel which lighted the gardens of Nero with the living bodies of its preachers. That system of religion sought no conformity to the world, no shelter from its opposition or wrath, by blinking the truth, no favor from the wealthy or patronage from the powerful, by bending itself to circumstances, which brought its professors to be mangled by wild beasts in the amphitheatre, bowed them to the sword or nailed them to the cross, confiscated their goods, reduced them to slavery, or drove them beyond the reach of sympathy or hope.

These were the characteristics of that first missionary enterprise, successful beyond all subsequent example, which forced Satun back from all his strong defences, crushed in ruins the most imposing system) he had ever invented, and left, through all the Roman world, the altar without a victim, the priest without a temple, the god without a worshipper.

An analysis of the teachings of Christ, the apostles and early Christians in this first missionary enterprise, presents us with three important statements, which are essential to their plan of instruction. These statements refer, first, to the character of the Christian; second, to the nature of the Church; and third, to the design of the gospel, and the demands of the law of God.

They represented a Christian as one who, by the inherent law of the new nature and in the very act of becoming a new creature in Christ, is separated from all known sin, and brought thus into sympathy with God, and made like unto Christ, Growth in grace then would not be the gradual crucifixion of the old man, extending through threescore years and ten; the body of death meanwhile, like the liver of Prometheus under the vulture's beak, re roducing itself as it is torn away; but spiritual growth is the development of a new life, the advancement of the new creature in Christ. Crowth in grace would not be to attain strength to forsake a known iniquity, for the regenerated nature is necessarily repelled by sin; nor would it be to become more and more devoted to God, because the elementary idea of a Christian teaches that he gives himself as he is entirely to God, and although an imperfect creature, accountable for his imperfections, and sinful in his defects, because produced by himself, yet giving continually all that he has or is, and depending upon Christ to escape condemnation for the deficiencies in his character and exercises of his soul.

Growth in grace, then, as taught by the Scriptures, does not admit the idea of a present toleration of any sin, upon the supposition that we may devote ourselves gradually to God. It is not, strictly speaking, a process of reformation, but the growing up of a new creature toward the perfect stature of Christian manhood. We may lay each day upon the altar the soul's expanding flower; but morning by morning it appears more beautiful in its unfoldings, richer in the glory of its hues, and more fragrant with the breath of the Spirit.

The apostles presented one changeless type of the Christian Church, viz., a body composed of men wholly consecrated to God; separate from sin, and holding with it no fellowship or communion,—a body exercising discipline to preserve this separation, and thus witnessing for God, and reflecting the image of Christ.

They presented the gospel as involving the law, not alone as a plan for delivering men from hell, and placing them in heaven, but as a system of essential and eternal truth, for the regulation of all human conduct,—a rule of life which no circumstances could alter, and no power repeal.

These were the principles, and such was the method of proclaiming them, in that first missionary movement which carried Christianity in triumph through the Roman world.

We will now consider a method of propagating Christianity quite opposite to that which has been presented—a plan of accommodating the gospel to the spirit of the world, so as to produce no opposition—so that truth and error should remain at peace.

Upon this plan the Church proceeded from the time of Constantine to the Reformation.

"Tis said the eagle, "in his pride of place," lured by the glitter of a weapon, will rush down the heavens to impale himself upon the flashing steel. Thus did the Church, soaring heavenward in triumph o'er her foes, and winning many a trophy for her Lord, catch a sight of the gleam of Rome's Imperial Crown, and swept downward to dash herself upon a throne. Wrapped in the purple, wielding the Cæsars' sceptre, and weary of conflict, she sought to be at peace with the world. She proposed alliance with paganism, the only condition of which was that idolatry should consent to be called by the Christian name. The temple of all the gods became the Church of all the saints; the statues of the heroes took the names of apostles and martyrs, and the departed Venus was replaced by the Virgin Mary.

The priest, the altar, the holy water, the incense and feast-days all remained under this peaceful gospel; and the consecrated wafer, offered as a true sacrifice, filled the place of the victim which had-formerly been slain. This was Christianity made easy; it was popular with all, even with Satan himself; and the heathen became Christians by thousands without being conscious of a change.

We know too well what this system produced—a Christianity (?) which rivalled Paganism in its abominations—an ecclesiastical Rome, better fitted for every purpose of Satan than the heathen military despotism which had passed away.

A thousand years of experiment in spreading the gospel, so as to displace sin gently, in a safe and prudent manner, to bow Satan out of the world in a civil way, brought that world to Popes and Cardinals, Cæsar-Borgias, Inquisitions, Tetzel indulgences, convents, and the Jesuits.

This brings us to another era in the operations of the Church—the first great missionary movement of modern times, originated and conducted by the followers of Loyola, and carried forward on the same false principles which had already brought upon the Church a thousand years of apostasy.

These Jesuit missions, in some important points, may challenge comparison with any religious enterprise since the apostolic age. They evinced no stinted, narrow conception; the large design embraced every spot of earth where man had reared his dwelling; nor were the means employed inadequate to produce the result, had their object been to win the world for Christ, instead of subjecting it to the Papal throne.

These missionaries were men whose energy and courage were equal to any crisis, whom no labor exhausted, and no obstacles could arrest; whose patience and self-denial bore all burthens with cheerfulness, and whose steady enthusiasm admitted of no weariness or pause. It is questionable whether any other body of men on earth have combined so many elements of worldly power as these spiritual janizaries of Lovola.

There were once few places of earth where the patient, cool, subtle Jesuit was not weaving his web. With the caravan on Sahara's sands, or by the banks of African rivers; in the East Indian villages, in the cities of China; on the steppes of Tartary, and among Circassia's snows; amid the wilds of South America, or with the northern savage on his war-path, or teaching him in his wigwam; or building their chapels and tinkling their bells on the islands of the sea; they labored to retrieve the sinking fortunes of Rome, and win from heathenism a compensation for what had been lost by the Reformation in Europe.

Why did they not succeed! They did not wholly conceal the great doctrines of salvation, nor were they all destitute of a sincere and earnest piety. What then was the vitiating principle of their enterprise! An attempt so to preach Christianity that it should not offend the prejudices of a fallen world; so to adapt it unto and blend it with existing systems, as to avoid a conflict; to leave untouched popular and deep-seated errors, and to flatter the prejudices and prevailing opinions of a people.

They nowhere presented the gospel as a changeless system of truths and rule of practice, to which every one was bound to conform, or forego the privileges of the Church. If the heathen would but adopt the Christian name, they were permitted to retain so much of error in opinion, and sin in practice, as would disarm both private hatred and public opposition. Caste and polygamy, pride, sensuality and oppression were left untouched, and the Church was composed not of holy men, separate from sin and consecrated unto God, but of those who perhaps, at some future time, when public sentiment should allow, would abandon iniquity, or at least would consent to be changed by the power of God, in the moment of death, just in season to make heaven secure.

In the hands of the Jesuits, Christ too was made to bear as many characters as there are nations under heaven. In India he was a Brahmin of high caste, while in the wilds of North America he was an unconquerable warrior. Where Confucius was preferred to Jesus, it was only demanded that a crucifix should be laid upon the shrine of the Oriental prophet; and where the doctrine of a crucified Redeemer was rejected, they preached only a Christ exalted and glorified. Christianity became like the Pantheon itself, a temple for all the gods. Each deity of earth had an altar, each idolatry a place; and Papal Rome effected what Pagan Rome once proposed to do—ahe placed Christianity, though sadly disfigured, among the religions of the world.

Where now are the fruits of this plan of compromise, this gospel of gradual reform, this peaceful, prudent, civil gospel, which sends a scented note to Satan with embroidered envelope, hoping that he will have the kindness to leave when perfectly convenient; requesting that he will not incommode himself with inconvenient haste; that the beginning of the Millennium will be quite as early as he could be expected to break up so ancient an establishment?

The earth was sown over broad-cast with the seed of this cringing gospel, asking of Satan leave to be; and where are the fruits—the goodly grain gathered to the garner of Christ! God has swept the whole from the face of the carth. From the Chinese seas around to California, the scheme withered in the breath of the Lord, and heathenism stood as before, except that the adversary gained this immense advantage—the standard of Jesus was hoisted over many of his strong defenses, and he lay at ease in his intrenchments, protected by his colors.

If, then, we discover upon investigation that our own system of church extension, at home and abroad, is based to any extent upon the same principles which we have condemned, and God has repudiated by his providence, then to that extent we may safely predict there must be either reformation or failure. I am not about to bring any special accusations against any body of men or benevolent associations. Let us deal with facts and principles, candidly and fearlessly applied, and wherever error is discovered, for the honor of Christ and the success of his cause, let us bend our energies for its removal. Let us examine first the operations of the Church on foreign shores.

In presenting the gospel to India, have we, has Christendom exhibited it as an uncompromising system of righteousness which held no fellowship with any manifest sin, which would throw a covering mantle over no form of error because strongly intrenched in the popular mind, or a part of the national policy? No! It was thought unwise to bring the gospel into direct collision with the strong defenses of the religious system in India; it was believed more prudent to exhibit only so much of truth as public sentiment would peacefully endure, and allow converts to retain some darling sins, such even as they would prefer to Christ, if really required to choose. Thus, by substituting a mistaken worldly policy for the wisdom of God, abandoning the examples and teachings of Christ and the apostles, caste, polygamy, and oppression were baptized into the Protestant Church, and so declared consistent with the law of Jesus.

We discover the same error, the same false principle, prevailing in the Armenian and Nestorian missions. The rites and ceremonies of those Oriental churches are clearly idolatrous, and yet the American missionaries have been instructed not to attack them, not to draw out of those churches the converts which might be won by their efforts. These idolatrous practices, we are told, are the mere outworks. not necessary to be removed before we come to the citadel. The idolatry of the Greek Church was thus virtually adopted as a portion of Christianity, as not at war with the principles of Christ. The Scripture rule is "Cease," first of all, "to do evil," then "learn to do well." "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." These general principles, suited to changing circumstances, have until lately, so far as I am acquainted, governed the Foreign Missionary movement; the "sapping and mining" method, instead of an open exhibition of the whole truth as it is in Jesus, has characterized the whole enterprise, except in the Sandwich Islands, an exception which strengthens every position I have taken. Let us consider a moment the effect of this upon the heathen mind. How, let me ask, is it possible by such a method to impart any conception of the elementary idea of the Christian scheme?

Of holiness, sanctification, the new birth, the heathen have absolutely no conception. They have neither ideas corresponding to our own, nor language to express them. How, then, are you to give a heathen a knowledge of holiness? You cannot enlighten him by any use of the abstract terms. You tell him he must be holy, sanctified; he comprehends you not-you convey to him no idea. He must inevitably be taught upon the plan adopted by God with the Hebrews-the only possible method-an external system of distinction and separation between holy and unholy, pure and impure, through which the abstract idea of holiness is begotten in the soul. What, then, must be the necessary idea of holiness in a heathen's mind resulting from the modern system of training? We inform him that a Christian must be holy; but there the proud Brahmin, with sin unrebuked, is admitted to the Christian Church, and so stands as an exponent of holiness. So with the polygamist and idolater. Pride, polygamy, oppression, idolatry, all stand in the heathen mind as symbols of holiness; they are the standards and measuring rods by which he shapes his ideas. He then starts from these data and reasons upward toward a conception of the holiness of God-and what sort of a God will be presented to his mind? Again, his standard of holiness will be the measure of his own guilt, and the demands of the law-and of course his ideas of these will be false and inadequate, and these again will conceal the true nature of the atonement. I am satisfied that too little attention has been paid to these important points. We have no occasion to wonder that our missionaries' hearts are so often saddened by discovering, after long conversations, that they have lodged no idea in the heathen" mind corresponding to their own. It is impossible, in the nature of things, that it should be otherwise; and Christianity, thus conceived, is merely a caricature of truth. perhaps rather a contradiction, a denial of the attributes of God, and the demands

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

Let us now turn to the Home field. Do we find in our operations here the same vitiating principle, the same bowing to the world's dictation, the same embrace and baptism of sin ?

There stands American Slavery, that Colossus of sin, with one foot upon the State. and the other upon the Church, legalized and Christianized. The Church has adopted it, baptized it, and pretends to set upon it the seal of God's approval. Conforming her practice to her theory, the Evangelical Church has invested in slave property $264,000,000, and owns 660,000 bodies and souls of men, and by their natural increase produces yearly more heathen on our own soil, than her efforts win for Christ on foreign shores; so that the Church is absolutely increasing the heathenism of the world by her direct exertions; multiplying heathen at home faster that she converts them abroad; and yet she is confident that she beholds the dawn of the millennium. Yet that Church stands before the world as the exponent of Christianity. With this enormous iniquity in her bosom she represents the idea of holiness; she is the world's teacher as to what a sanctified Church is; she shows men what it is to be holy, separate and undefiled; she is the earthly representative of the character of God; and the scheme of Christianity, and the world's abstract idea of holiness, correspond in measure, and necessarily, to this external exhibition of it which the Church has made. # She gathers into one body with true Christians, slaveholders and Sabbath-breakers, rum-makers and rum-sellers, and a variety of smaller sinners; and when we ask what is meant by God's peculiar people, holy and undefiled, the regenerate, the sanctified, the people in sympathy with Christ, the elect of God whom he approves, we are pointed to this miscellaneous collection as embodying the Bible idea of the Church of God, the Bride of the Lamb. This is false teaching, of the most powerful and pernicious kind; and the effects have been widespread and fatal in vitiating the public sentiment, in unsettling the first principles of morality, and in obscuring our conceptions of righteousness and God. It is vain to assert that the true theory of holiness and the character of God is abundantly taught in our churches, and by the religious press. It is true that the same language is still employed, but words of themselves are powerless. When the preacher demands that men should become holy and unite with the Church and when he exhorts them to become holy like God, the question is, what meaning is attached to the language; to what ideas does it correspond? The Church has taught us new definitions, and the world understands the preacher to mean that she must become holy as a slaveholder, or a distiller or vender of alcohol, or as one who invests his capital in Sabbath-breaking steamboats or railroads; as holy as a God who approves of such things,-as holy as a Saviour who welcomes them to his communion. It is not a fact that the true theory of holiness and sanctification is taught in the churches, though the old words are retained. The Church by her practice HAS taught the WORLD NEW DEFINITIONS of language.

As a result of these things, two joint powers are brought to bear upon the destiny of the heathen world-Christianity as it is, and the civilization which she has pro-

Through their co-operation, a ship reaches a heathen port from Christian America, and its company, as a whole, to the heathen mind, is an exponent of the religion of Jesus. This is the fruit of the system. The Christian missionary lands with his Bible, the Christian merchant with his whiskey and rum and all the means of driving good bargains, (all, of course, fair business transactions,) and the Christian sailor, in his degradation and sensuality; and all these, to the poor pagan, are alike Christians: he can make no distinctions. Again: China or Mexico is to be opened to the gospel, and by the joint action of civilization and Christianity. But the avenues are opened, not gently in love, but torn open by crashing shot and rending shell, and through the breach, and over smoking fragments of ruined homes, over quivering corpses, and through spouting blood, the Christian missionary with the Bible marches by the side of the Christian soldier with his shotted gun and blooddyed bayonet; and this scene, as a whole, becomes to the Chinese and Mexicans an exponent of Christianity and Protestantism. Nor can it be otherwise. And how much will the impression be changed for the better, if the missionary draws distinctions between Christianity and civilization, and then to make clear what he means by the terms he uses, forms a Christian Church, and there seats together around the table of Christas examples of God's holy and peculiar people, the Brahmin, with his pride of caste, the polygamist, the slaveholder, the Sabbath-breaker, and the rum-seller ! Doing this, if the heathen asks an explanation, he must either allow that the Church is composed of unholy men, or that such men are the proper examples of Christian and godly living, and from them he must judge of the Christian's God.

Of these two forces what will be the result? The utmost possible effect of these powers, if unchanged themselves, will be to extend over heathen lands a Christian civilization like unto our own; and when that is accomplished let us inquire whether the dawn of the millennium will redden the east, or its meridian splendor blaze over all the heavens!

A very brief statement will be sufficient to show us what the condition of the world will be, when converted to our present standard of Christianity and civilization. We will assume our own country as the standard, and without pretending to state numbers with more than an approximation to the truth, we will set down the population of our nation at twenty millions, and the number of heathen in the world at seven hundred millions. Should these pagans be converted to our present condition, there would then be, on what is now heathen ground, one hundred millions of church, members, and also one hundred millions of slaves ! and nineteen millions of these slaves would be owned by professors of religion.

In the United States it is estimated that one in seven is a professor of religion. After the heathen world has been exalted to our position, Christianized up to our standard, there will remain on the present pagan territory six hundred millions of unconverted men. Carrying forward this comparative view, we find that after such a conversion of the world there will be seventy millions of paupers, seven millions of criminals, and seventeen millions and a half of drunkards outside of the limits of Christendom. It is estimated by a late writer that the evangelical Church of this country owns two hundred and sixty millions of so-called slave property. If the one hundred millions to be converted on heathen lands shall own proportionately as many slaves, this millennial Church will have such an investment of eight thousand millions of dollars. If we now add the remaining features of our civilization it will present us with a picture of the world as it would be, if converted to our present Christianity and civilization.

I hold it a self-evident proposition, that to produce such a state of things is the very highest achievement of which the Church, in her present condition, is capable. Neither her example nor her precepts can carry the world one step beyond this. But to advance the nations from this point of universal civilization like our own, onward to the millennial state of the Scriptures, is a far more difficult task than to bring the heathen to the condition of Christendom.

Underneath this wrong action of the Church there must of course be some error of opinion, some false theory, upon which the erroneous conduct is based. Could we discover this, we should possess a sure guide in the work of reform. To my mind it seems apparent. Does not this wicked and mischievous departure from the course of Christ and the apostles spring from inadequate ideas of what constitutes a Christian, and of the development of the Christian life in the individual and in the Christian life in the individual and in the

I do not mean that our theoretical standards are deficient: our formulas state correctly the great doctrines of the Christian scheme: but these statements of doctrine no longer present to the public mind the original ideas. The Church exhibits in her practice her conception of the meaning, and these practical definitions which form the world's dictionary of the Bible, have essentially changed the conception of the whole scheme of truth.

Practically, then, not in her theories, the Church presents to the world the idea of a Christian somewhat in this manner: That he is one who, having had his mind awakened and enlightened in regard to eternal things, in view of the character of God and the claims of the law upon him as a transgressor, determines to flee to Christ for pardon for past offenses, and to reform his errors in future. This reformation, however, is to be the work of a life-time, a gradual putting away of sin, to be completed only at death; and therefore that some sin should be indulged in day by day is only a matter of course, and the professor comforts himself each day with the belief that he is as hely as could be expected at this stage of his career; for the Christian life is a progress toward holiness and God, and the work of reform cannot be finished until the hour of death. This progress in reform is thought to be growth in grace. Now, though man is reformed by the sanctification of the Spirit, yet, strictly speaking, growth in grace is not a work of reformation, but the development of a new life in the soul, the growth of a new creature. The man being made like unto God in the new creation of the Spirit, turns by the instincts of this new nature from every known sin, and the work of sanctification is not the slow putting to death of the old man of sin, but the expansion towards maturity of the capabilities and desires of the new nature in Christ. This practical error, in regard to the individual, leads to another in reference to the progress of the Church. As practically exhibited, the idea of the progress of the Church is, that commencing in a state of spiritual barbarism and ignorance, she gradually increases in holiness and spiritual excellence from age to age, growing up towards the millennial state, the perfected civilization of the Church.

This conception of the life of the Church involves the idea that until the millennium sin must of course be found in her bosom—that there can be no perfection until then; that if we find slaveholding and intemperance and other iniquities at the table of Jesus, we are not to be surprised; for these things will be gradually reformed, the Church is making progress, and is upon the whole as holy and pure as could be expected in this stage of her life. In support of this system, we are told by men high in the confidence of the Christian public, to remember the condition of the apostolic churches, their irregularities) their incest, and even drunkenness at the communion; and we are asked to look around us now, and mark the advancement of the Church, to be thankful, and wait patiently for the millennium.

In an important sense, this whole idea is essentially false: it presents an entirely erroneous conception of the nature of the Church and her early condition.

The fixed and changeless type of a Christian Church is, a body of men who are like Christ.

Christians wholly devoted and set apart unto God. Anointed ones. Such a body can have no growth or progress in separation from sin, in consecration to God. The changeless idea is, that in every moment of its life, from infancy to the millennium, it is entirely consecrated to God, entirely separate from known six. The idea of the life of the Church is not a progress from impurity to purity, but of a body always consecrated to God, and battling for victory, in the name of Christ.

The true Scriptural idea of the Church, then, precludes entirely the toleration of known sins for the present, with the design of gradual reformation—the putting away of iniquity in the indefinite future—a future which unfortunately never becomes the present, so as to call for action. The reference to the early Church is altogether unfortunate. Paul spoke of no present toleration, no waiting for the coming millennium, but he commanded instant discipline and separation. "Therefore, put away from among you that wicked person." This "little leaven will leaven the whole lump" with sin and pollution.

If we have discovered the vital and basis error in our present methods of exhibiting the gospel, then may we also perceive the necessary and essential principle of a true reformation—the only one which has power to meet the exigencies of the case: viz., the entire consecration of the individual soul to God, and the complete separation of the Church from every known and tangible sin-the exhibition of the gospel as containing a system of truths changeless as the character of Goda rule of conduct claiming jurisdiction over every department of human action, and demanding obedience in the name of Jesus our King; that higher law which preceded all, which is above all, which endureth for ever; the Word and Law of God These, my friends, are the great ideas which form the deep, central power which is now heaving beneath the foundations of the Christian Church, struggling to be manifested, to embody itself in definite systems and forms of action. If this whole continent were at once to be shaken by one huge earthquake, the same great central power would produce different results in different locations. Here, it might heave up an island; there, topple down the crest of a mountain. Here, it might bury a city; there, change the course of rivers, and all by the same central force. So with this central spiritual power of the principles I have named. Underneath the wide foundations of the whole Church, it gathers its mighty forces, exhibiting itself through various manifestations, shaking with many agitations the structure of society. Here men behold one effect, and there another; here it produces a temperance reformation; there, anti-slavery societies and conventions; and here a missionary organization, which aims at a higher and purer exhibition of the Chris-

Men may doubt, and sneer, and wonder, and stand aloof or oppose—but they must learn that these are all the results of a spiritual life which is struggling to embody itself upon the surface of affairs. These agitations are at the same time the death-struggles of dying systems and errors, and the birth-throes of a new era. The scene around us, my friends, is the rough and stormy spring, and seed-time—but there will come the calm of summer, and the golden autumn, and the rich harvest, ripe for the heavenly garners.

Men may cry out, "fanaticism and folly." Never was there a more fatal mistake. Tis the strong uprising of ten thousand souls that long for a closer walk with God, and yearn for a deeper, truer sympathy with Christ—of men and women whose daily prayer and hearts' desire is, to be one with Jesus, to have their own life merged, as it were, in the life of God. They long, moreover, to see that bitterness assuaged and that animosity removed, which has separated into warring parties and sects the hosts of the Lord—like broken fragments of one mountain scattered apart by an earthquake—to see Christians brought into such close communion, that all hearts shall beat with mutual affection, member sympathize with member, and all with Christ the Head.

They long for the time when the Church, purified from all known iniquity, shall become the truthful exponent of the Christian system—shall be as a Shechinah at the head of the world's millions, and lead them unto Jesus as "the desire of all nations," in whom shall be found the accomplishment of every human hope.

They believe that the individual should be consecrated now, nor postpone it till a dying hour; they believe that the Church should be purified now, nor wait the approach of some future condition indefinitely postponed. To call this fanaticism is to brand the apostles with folly, and hurl a reproach at the Saviour himself.

MINUTES

FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Association met in the Third Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio, September 24th, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

In the absence of the President, Rev. Wm. Goodell was invited to take the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. M. M. Longley, of Ohio.

The Recording Secretary being absent, Wm. Herrick was appointed Secretary pro tem.

The minutes of the last Annual Meeting at Rochester, September 25th, 1850, were read and approved.

The Treasurer, L. Tappan, read a statement of the receipts and expenditures during the last year, together with the report of the auditors, which was accepted.

The Corresponding Secretary presented the Annual Report, portions of which he proceeded to read. After nearly two hours, the reading was suspended, and the following committees were appointed:—

Committee of Arrangement—Rev. E. H. Nevin, Rev. James A. Thome, Rev. George Whipple.

A Business Committee of seven was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Goodell, Whipple, Blanchard, L. Tappan, J. Johnson, Walker and Miller.

A Committee of five were appointed to nominate officers for the ensuing year, viz. :—Messrs. Herrick, Keep, Fairchild and Whipple.

In the evening the Annual Sermon was preached in the First Presbyterian Church, by Rev. J. Blanchard, President of Knox College, Illinois. Rev. Mr. Walker, of Mansfield, Ohio, and the Corresponding Secretary of the Association, took part in the religious exercises.

Thursday morning, September 25th, an hour was spent in devotional exercises, before the commencement of the business meeting; after which Rev. H. Cowles was invited to the chair. In the afternoon and evening F. D. Parish, Esq., of Ohio, a Vice President of the Association, presided.

Mr. Whipple, as Chairman of the Business Committee, reported; and on motion it was resolved, that a Committee on Home Missions be appointed, to consider and report upon the proper relations to be sustained between the parent society and its auxiliaries. Messrs. Walker, Blanchard, Whipple, Goodman and Cable, were appointed as said Committee.

The following resolutions, presented by the Business Committee, were discussed and adopted:—

 Resolved, That the neglect of Christians to occupy missionary fields which, in the providence of God, are open before them, and to answer the calls of the heathen world, is a misrepresentation of the spirit and genius of Christianity, cripples the energies of the missionaries of the cross, and weakens the confidence of the heathen in them, by practically denying the benevolence which in theory they inculate.

2. Resolved, That in view of the developments that have here been made, we regard it as the duty of this Association to extend its Foreign Missionary operations by enlarging its present missions, and establishing new ones, as fast as the providence of God may open the way; and that the Executive Committee be encouraged to hope that the friends of Christ will, upon being duly informed, supply them with the means of accomplishing all that God would have them do.

3. Resolved, That we approve of the course pursued by the Executive Committee in declining to incur debts for the establishment of new missions, or the enlargement of those already existing.

4. Resolved, That a sanctified and faithful ministry is, under God, the orly hope for the salvation of our own country, and an essential condition to our giving a pure gospel to the heathen; and that the Executive Committee be requested to press forward this department of their labors as fast as men and means may be furnished them.

Whereas the mission at Kaw-Mendi, Africa, has, during the past year, been deeply afflicted by the sudden decease of three of its valued female missionaries, namely, Miss Aldes, Mrs. Tefft and Mrs. Arnold; and whereas, the minds of many are seriously agitated with the question whether, in view of this unexpected mortality, the further prosecution of this mission, at least by Anglo-Saxon laborers, ought not to be abandoned, or at least suspended, the Association, amxious to have the question examined carefully, thoroughly, and in the light of Christian duty, submit the following views of the case:

Without doubt, God would have us use the utmest wisdom and care for the preservation of the health and lives of our valued missionaries, and expects us to study their physical constitutions, habits, and adaptation to the climate; the best means of avoiding exposure, healthfulness of location, &c.; and to avail ourselves continually of the experience of the past for our guidance in the future.

2: This being done God would have us trust his protecting providence, yet considering that ordinarily no great work has ever been done in his cause without sacrifices and self-denials; that neither the beliest of men nor the most sacred of labors can expect exemption from the common laws of human frailty and mortality; and that consequently we must not be in laste to infer that any missionary enterprise which God crowns with success costs too much, and should therefore be abandoned.

3. The Mendi Mission was signally indicated by the finger of God's providence in the success which has crowned its efforts; has been eminently bleased of God all along in the success which has crowned its efforts; has enjoyed special tokens of the Divine favor in the manifest effusions of his Spirit, resulting in the conversion of many souls; and has gained the confidence of the native tribes, so that a wide door is opened for enlarged missionary operations.

4. The incidental relations of this mission seem to give it an enhanced claim upon the regard of the American churches, and to constitute a special reason for its earnest and unfaltering prosecution. It seeks to elevate the African people—a work most intimately connected with some of the greatest moral movements of the age; it is a direct and powerful, not to say indispensable means of arresting the African slave-trade; and it is only a scanty instalment towards requiting those wrongs which Africa has of a long time suffered from the Christian nations of the earth.

6. A careful examination into the particular circumstances connected with the lamented deaths under consideration seems to show that the causes were duiefly special, and not general; and therefore we still have ground to hope that, with the advantage perhaps of a more favorable location, and with greater care against excessive labor and exposure, the mission may be carried forward in future with much less sacrifice of life than during the past year.

6. In view of all these considerations the Association feels constrained to prosecute its efforts in sustaining the Mendi Mission, trusting still in the tender mercy of the God of missions, that He will smile on our efforts, that He will sanctify both to the churches at home, and to our afflicted brethren and sisters there, these sore bereavements, and that He will guide us evermore to do all his will in this department of our labors.

On motion, Resolved, That the thanks of this Association be presented to Rev. J. Blanchard, for his able sermon, and that a copy be requested for publication.

The report read by the Corresponding Secretary was accepted, and ordered to be printed, under the direction of the Executive Committee.

The Committee on Home Missions asked leave to be permitted to report at the next Annual Meeting of the Association, which was granted.

On motion, Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be presented to the societies whose churches have been opened for our accommodation, and to the citizens of Cleveland, whose hospitalities we have enjoyed.

The Committee appointed to nominate officers for the ensuing year reported as follows. Their report was adopted:—

A public meeting was held in the evening, at which Mr. Parish presided.

The Corresponding Secretary made a brief statement of the operations of the Society during the last year, and of the present condition of its missions. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Walker, of Mansfield, Ohio; John Scoble, Esq., Sec. of the B. and F. A. S. Society, England; and Rev. George Thompson, of the Mendi Mission. West Africa.

After a motion to adjourn, to meet next year at a time and place to be named by the Executive Committee, the benediction was pronounced, and the members separated.

sound through all the history of the ages. And this is but an example of what always comes of rejecting God's provision for human salvation: and the more beneficial and effectual the provisions, the more terrible the ruin which comes from rejecting them.

The age of the coming of the Messiah and the first publication of the Gospel was a final crisis in the history of the Jews, and to all the millions, of whatever tongue and nationality, to whom the Gospel was preached. There is a solemn impression on my mind that this is, in like manner, God's own appointed age of missions, and that, as such, it is such a crisis to all Christian churches and peoples, as that was to the Jews, and to all the unevangelized millions to whom the Gospel is carried, as that was to the millions to whom the apostles and their colaborers preached. "Already even the ax lieth at the root of the trees: therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is shewn down, and cast into the fire." And here perhaps we find a theme as fitting as any other for our meditations on this occasion.

But the field is too vast to be surveyed in its totality on this occasion. Were I, instead of preaching a sermon, writing a book, it might not be very difficult to show that the present age is such a crisis, to every nation and tribe of men. How easy, for example, to show it respecting the aborigines of our own country, or respecting the inhabitants of the thousand islands of the Pacific! How easy to show it of China and Japan, assailed for the first time in their history by inevitable intercourse with Christian civilization, both from the East and from the West! How easy to show it of France, and Spain, and Italy, and all Europe! But we must leave all these inviting fields, for the purpose of presenting the subject in relation to a field with which the operations of the American Missionary Association are more intimately connected—our own country.

Confining, then, our view within these limits, our subject presents itself as related to two classes which divide and together comprehend our whole population:

I. That portion of our population which is descended from the great Protestant stocks that originally peopled our country, especially those of English, Scotch, French, and Dutch origin—that portion of our population whose ancestors not many generations back sought refuge in the American wilderness, because driven from their own country by a persecution for Christ's sake too hot to be endured:

II. That portion of our population which, as viewed from our standpoint, must be regarded as occupying a position of disadvantage in respect to Christian privilege and culture—embracing, of course, our fellow-citizens of African, Chinese, and Papal origin.

I. I am to consider the present crisis in its relation to our Protestant population.

The thing I wish here especially to remark is the close analogy between the present relations of this portion of our people to the kingdom of God, and that of the Jews in the time of our Saviour. In order to exhibit that analogy I must notice two points of resemblance:

1. Our peculiar training, and our present peculiar relations to the missionary work of this modern age.

The proof is overwhelming that, as that age was the appointed time of the Messiah's coming, so is this age God's appointed time for publishing, the Gospel to all nations and tribes of men. Then God had brought the whole civilized world, the whole world of our ancient history, under one great peaceful empire, that the missionaries of Christ might traverse every portion of it, and sow it all with the good seed of the kingdom. The like preparation for the planting of the Gospel in all the world had never existed before: it has never existed since, till our own time.

In our own age there is a like preparation for the propagation of the Gospel and the planting of the church of Christ in all lands. In our own age, for the first time in the world's history, every people and tribe of earth is rendered easily accessible to the Christian nations of the world. It is probably full as easy for the Christian missionary of the nineteenth century to reach every inhabited spot on earth, as it was for the first missionaries of the Gospel to reach all parts of the Roman empire. The apostles could carry the Gospel wherever the Roman tax-gatherer collected revenues: the modern church can carry Christian truth wherever commerce carries its merchandise.

God had been providentially training the Jews for a thousand years and more to receive the promised Messiah, and to be the teachers of all the rest of the world, in the religion which he would come to establish. And when at last the fullness of time was come, and the Messiah was among them, how keenly did our Lord feel that it was the trial-hour of the nation. "Go not," said he to his disciples, "in the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. For verily I say unto you, that ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man is come." And again, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are already white to the harvest." And again, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

In a few—a small minority of the nation—the discipline of the ages had done its work. They were prepared to welcome the Desire of all nations, and to be his missionaries to the rest of the empire. All the first preachers of the Gospel were Jews; and in a single generation they carried the Gospel from the Euphrates to the Atlantic. The end aimed at by the long providential training of the nation was gloriously accomplished. A band of missionaries was raised up to preach Christ to the world.

But the great majority of the nation rejected and asked for the crucifixion of the Lord's Anointed One, and were involved in terrible ruin. Our Lord clearly saw that doom impending, and with all the anguish of spirit which a patriot could feel in view of the near approach of his country's ruin. As he approached the city for the last time, he stood on the side of Olivet; and, as he beheld the city, he wept over it. "If thou hadst known at least in this thy day the things which belong to thy peace; but now they are hidden from thine eves." And how terribly was that doom executed!

There is a people whom God has been peculiarly training for generations for this modern missionary work, as truly as he did the Jews for that ancient one. As that ancient people were driven by the Egyptians across the Red Sea, so this modern people fled from fiery persecutions across the ocean to this new promised land. Here God has been teaching them for six generations his statutes and his judgments, under all the advantages of free thought, a free Bible, and free worship. And now that the crisis is come, behold this people in possession of a national domain greater in all the elements of power than was ever before possessed by any kingdom or empire; lying almost midway between the other two great divisions of the earth, as if to exert a controlling force both over the East and the West; enjoying a freedom never before given to any people, with a commerce as ubiquitous as the human race. Under such conditions as these has God placed his free church, that she may arise and conquer the world for the kingdom of Christ.

But this is not all. He has placed this, his American people, under relations the most peculiar to millions of the unevangelized. Our fathers fled across the ocean from the flery furnace of persecution, which the principles of popery, still dominant in the church and monarchy of England, had heated "one seven times hotter than it was wont to be heated." And now millions of adherents of the superstition and spiritual despotism of that same popery have taken refuge under that religious freedom which our fathers established here, from oppression and starvation at home. They find not a wilderness here, as our fathers did, but a most inviting and hospitable home. We have now a noble opportunity to requite evil for good. In the freedom and plenty and protection we are giving them, we are doing it. But we may do more than this. We may give them the Gospel. They are our neighbors, our fellow-citizens. We can preach Christ to them from our own hearthstones. We may be missionaries to millions of papists without crossing any ocean or suffering any exile from our dear homes. And we must do it. We must convert them, or they will convert us. He deceives himself who believes that this land is to be permanently divided, as now, between popery and a free, spiritual gospel. One of these forces or the other is to prevail, and the other is to go down. There is to be here a homogeneous nationality. We may say of this as the lamented Lincoln said at the opening of his celebrated debates with Mr. Douglas, in 1858, "This country can not long continue half slave and half free. It will either become all slave or all free." We meet the old enemy this time in an open field and a fair fight, and we must either conquer him or be conquered. And popery conquered here, is conquered for the world and forever. Shall I add the Gospel of Christ conquered here is conquered for the world? No; it can not be conquered. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. But if we fail, if any portion of the American church fails to stand in its lot in this contest, it will go down-it will utterly perish. If we at this time altogether hold our peace, deliverance shall come from another quarter; but we shall be destroyed.

Nor is this all of our missionary work which has been brought to our own doors. For more than a generation the American churches have been sending missionaries to Eastern Asia, to peoples that can only be reached by tedious voyages half round the globe, and dwelling in sultry climes which are to our constitutions sickly and enervating. Already many precious lives of men and women who were among the noblest God has given to this generation have been laid down in those missionary fields. But now, what the wildest dreamer could never have imagined, the Eastern Asiatics are brought by tens of thousands to our shores, and they are building the temples of their pagan worship under the protection of our religious freedom. They are becoming our fellow-citizens-the hewers of our wood and the drawers of our water. Thousands of American Protestants may be missionaries to the Chinese, without forsaking their own homes or country. Thus it has pleased God, in his own all-wise but to us inscrutable providence, to open the flood-gates to pour in upon our dear country, the land of the Pilgrims, the myriads of ignorance and superstition from both hemispheres: from the one side the degraded offspring of papal despotism; from the other, the children whom the hoary paganism of China hath reared. And none can close these flood-gates, or predict what millions shall enter through them. Perhaps in this dear country of ours, the saying of our Lord is to have its grandest, its final fulfillment, "The kingdom of heaven is like a little leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened." It is indeed a little leaven, and who can foresee in how much meal it is to be hid? And who can not see that unless that little leaven is active and leavens the whole mass, it will itself be utterly lost, and never seen any more. The history of Christianity furnishes already one most wonderful illustration of these words of our Lord. When, in a single generation, the Gospel was diffused among the one hundred and twenty millions of the Roman empire, the little leaven was indeed "hid in three measures of meal." And alas for the darkness and confusion that followed; and during the millennium of darkness and death, it seems to the reader of history as though the leaven was utterly lost, and would never appear again. All the churches planted by the apostles and their associates were involved in utter ruin. Is the same thing to occur again, in the land of the Pilgrims? Is the little leaven here to be mingled in so mighty a mass that it will be utterly lost for ages, and only reappear among the mighty revolutions of the distant future? It all depends on the quantity and the activity of the leaven.

But the full strength of the case is not yet before us. Not only are the American churches placed face to face with the superstitions of the old Roman paganism on the one hand, and the still older paganism of China on the other, but they are still more intimately and responsibly related to four millions of human beings, whose ancestors were violently torn away from the still deeper and darker paganism of Africa-a people who have lived among us for six generations, under the most cruel oppression, without having been permitted to enjoy any taste of our civilization which it was in our power to deny them. They have, by their toil, extorted by the lash and not by the hope of fair remuneration, created a large portion of our wealth. They are now free, and lifting up unmanacled hands to implore our help, that they may not perish; free, not by any wisdom or virtue of ours, but because God shook the whole land by a mighty earthquake, as he did the old prison at Philippi when Paul and Silas were there, and all the prison-doors were opened and every man's bands were unloosed. Literally they are imploring our help, that they may find the way of life-not rejecting and spurning it, as the other unevangelized masses of our country are. It is a question which should go to the heart of every true American, Shall we give or withhold that help? We can not withhold it without becoming guilty of our brother's blood, which will certainly cry unto God from the ground.

The ax is lying at the root of the trees. The agencies by which we shall be involved in their ruin, if we allow them to perish before our eyes without doing our utmost to succor them, are obvious to every observant man. We have been obliged, in self-defense, to give them the ballot. But the ballot will of itself save nobody, black or white, male or female. If they are left in ignorance and vice, they will abuse the ballot to their own destruction and ours. All the base and selfish passions which, before emancipation, conspired to hold the negro in hopeless bondage, are no less ready now to combine to use the ballot in his hands for the destruction of liberty. Nothing, absolutely nothing but the diffusion of the Gospel through the South, and imbuing with it the former masters and the former slaves, can give tranquillity and prosperity to our country. The war has thrown down all the barriers, that the Gospel may enter in and take possession in the name of the Lord. The battle with carnal weapons is over: the spiritual conflict is on our hands, and we must conquer in that, or the blood of our brave was shed in vain. The South, as it is, is a cancer on the body politic, which will not be long in eating its way to the vitals.

The South is far more accessible to religious effort for the black man than for the white man. The black man feels his need of help, and looks imploringly to us to help him. I know not how far such efforts in his behalf will succeed-God only knows-in lifting up the black man. But I know that the black man is perishing, and we are bound to help him. And if we fill the whole South with honest, earnest efforts for the salvation of the black man, we shall not fail in that at which we aim. We shall succeed in planting the seeds of Christian institutions and Christian influences, which will save the South and save the nation. I know not whether the future population of the South are to be the children of black men, or of white men, or of both; but I know that Christian missions may now lay there foundations of the church which will endure forever. The success of the mission of the A. B. C. F. M. to the Sandwich Islands is not doubtful. The native population may become extinct; perhaps it is probable that it will; but that mission will still be the parent of Christian civilization to those islands. So if we engage in this mission in holy earnestness, we can not but succeed in laying the foundations of permanent Christian institutions: if we stand aloof in selfish and proud indifference, we shall perish. The ax is lying at the root of the trees.

2. There is another point of this analogy which must be noticed, though very briefly. The Jews, when our Lord came, had great and strong prejudices to overcome and great temptations to resist, in receiving him as the Messiah; and it was through those prejudices and temptations that they rejected him and were ruined. How could they consent to see the time-honored polity of Moses, the venerable ritual of the temple, and that sacred rite of circumcision which the patriarch Abraham practiced, pass into disuse and neglect? Nay, how could they cease to reverence those supplementary rites and usages, which had been invented by the fathers, and had been handed down through the traditions of the elders? How could they allow even those props with which human invention had sought to buttress up the tottering structure of antiquated polity, to be knocked away? How could they receive a revelation of God which was without a bolity and without a ritual? It seemed to them like a proposition to abandon the stately edifice beneath whose roof they and their fathers had been protected through immemorial ages; and henceforth dwell, they and their children, beneath the open arch of heaven. How could they accept a Messiah so different from him for whom they looked to restore the splendid monarchy of David and Solomon? How could they endure to see the sacred privileges of their religion imparted to impure and uncircumcised gentiles, and enjoyed by them as freely as by the holy seed of Abraham? And then the leaders of the nation were inclined to be at peace with the earthly powers that were around them. Rome was now mistress of the world, and all men, in all lands, must court her if they would have prosperity. How then could they follow as their King and Lord one too poor to have a place to lay down his head at night?

And who does not see that there is much in our condition which is strangely analogous to all this? Our Lord and his apostles built no polity. The kingdom which Jesus Christ founded "was not of this world." But the great Apostasy came-how soon !- and covered Christendom with a gigantic framework of polity which has been the prison-house of the Gospel ever since. In the last three hundred years that old bastile has been terribly shaken with earthquakes. It has fallen into many fragments. But the workmen have made haste to repair the breaches, and, when that was impossible, to build up each separate fragment into a prison by itself. To that polity, under some of its modifications, the church is under some such bondage today as the Jews were to the Mosaic ritual and the traditions of the elders. The great missionary enterprise can not be accomplished till this bondage comes to an end. The church of this country is not less in danger of utterly failing to do the Master's work, through blind devotion to antiquated polity, than the Jews were in our Saviour's time. How can men give up their notions of a centralized and humanly administered government, and accept the church as a spiritual kingdom, having no organic ties but faith and love? How can they believe the church can be safe when so unprotected by any political framework? Alas! so thought the Jews, and crucified the promised Messiah. This thought I can only indicate.

And then how can we consent to communicate a full enjoyment of our privileges to the long-enslaved and barbarous African, and to the despised race, that, with strange features and still stranger speech, is throughng through the Golden Gate of the Pacific? How can we learn to call no man common or unclean? This is a fearful stumbling-block to us, as the admission of the Gentiles to religious equality was to the Jews.

And then, too, it is so pleasant, in these days of liberty and material prosperity, to be in harmony with the worldly forces around us. Why should not Christians enjoy themselves? Why practice all this self-denial? Why not surround themselves with all that is elegant in taste and art, and take their comfort, like the world's people? They can open their doors to their favorite ministers and other eminent servants of the Lord, and thus exercise Christian hospitality. But why must they give their care and labor to the kingdom of Christ? Why not take their ease? And why must they give their money till they have to retrench in the luxuries of their tables and the adornings of their persons and their homes?

And how can Christian women give the best years of life to the toils and cares and pains of maternity, only to train up sons and daughters for Christ? What a drag! What a confinement! What a hard lot! How can a woman of taste and cultivation live so? It is too hard! Some plan must be hit upon by which Christian women shall train fewer children, and have more time to enjoy themselves. And thus they say the seed of our Puritan fathers is ceasing to inherit the land, and the children of strangers and of the maions of that very spiritual despotism which drove our fathers to this land are taking possession of it. Such intelligent, cultivated women must lead easy, self-indulgent, fashionable lives, and leave the rearing of children chiefly to the ignorant and uncultivated daughters of superstition.

Brethren and sisters, this is no romance—no picture of the imagination. It is solemn, shameful, shocking fact! And for this order of things our Protestant and even our Congregational press sometimes apologizes! Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph. Alas! they do triumph already. Even now the voice of unholy exultation over the failure of Protestant American women to perform the maternal function may be heard from every camp of the enemy in all the world.

And yet, if in this her trial-hour the church in this land yields herself to these worldly influences, and is content to glide along the smooth-flowing stream of worldly prosperity, she will fail of her great mission. She will not know the hour of her visitation. Her Elias and her Messiah will come, and she will not recognize them, and therefore will scornfully reject them; and the Lord's vineyard will be taken away from such unfaithful husbandmen and given to others that will render the fruit in its season.

We can only do the work to which the Master calls us by being, as a generation, faithful to God in our prosperity as our fathers were in their adversity-a generation of men and women who will bear prosperity, and wealth, and liberty, with as brave and self-denying a spirit, and with as much devotion to the kingdom of Christ, as our fathers and mothers showed amid persecution and exile—a generation that will use prosperity for Christ and not for the indulgence of its lusts. And if we refuse to do so, behold the ax is lying at the root of the trees, and this tree is no exception.

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

II. But I must hasten to consider this great crisis in its application to the less evangelized portions of our population, toward whom our missionary efforts are to be especially directed. We must consider the relation of the subject to these classes of our population under a two-fold supposition.

1. That the Protestant portion of our population shall faithfully meet the crisis which has been shown to be upon them. In that case our country is safe. On that supposition any intelligent, thoughtful man may look forward to the future with exultant hope. On that supposition there is nothing on earth which has half the stability of our free institutions and our vast prosperity. Our peace shall be like a river, and our righteousness like the waves of the sea. On the supposition that the Protestant churches of this country are true and faithful to their principles and their Head, we have no foe that can stand before us. Prevailing moral corruption, which now appalls us on every side, will be rebuked and restrained, and forced to hide itself in shame. A moral standard will be erected, in presence of which politics, and trade, and finance, and pleasure-seeking will be reformed and made to conform to true moral law. Our transactions with other nations will be too just to provoke any hostility, and we shall be too strong and vital in every part to present any weak points to foreign enemies. Our country will soon be acknowledged as a beneficent power in which all mankind will rejoice. The wilderness will be glad for us; the desert will bud and blossom as the rose. The whole land will be subdued before us. American tranquillity and American prosperity will become the joy of the whole earth.

I can not stop to argue this out. I can only state it, and leave my hearers to think it out. It is all embraced in the single statement that, if such a body of men as now compose the Protestant churches of the United States are faithful to the principles of Christianity, a moral standard will be erected, the influence of which will fill the nation with intelligence and virtue.

In such an order of things the destiny of every man and every class or race of men must depend on their relation to the Gospel and its moral standard-their destiny and that of their children after them forever.

Let us illustrate this principle by applying it to the condition of our colored population. On the supposition upon which we are reasoning, there is no question that this good land is to be possessed and held, and enjoyed in long succession, by the Lord's people. But will the colored man have a share in it? That all turns on another question, and that a question which at this hour is waiting for an answer. Will he accept and embrace the true elements of our happy future? Will he become a thoroughly enlightened, civilized, cultivated man, self-governed, industrious, temperate, frugal? Will he live a life of voluntary self-denial? Will he respect and honor the domestic tie? Will he train his children with self-denying and enlightened fidelity to his country, to the church, and to God? Will he educate them in all the varied knowledge and culture of his age and country? Will he, in short, apply Christian principle to a life of self-denying industry and active enterprise? If he will, his success is certain. Prejudice against his color may be strong, active, and wicked, and throw many and great obstacles in his way; but he will overcome them all, and not only be saved at last, like other men who believe in Christ, but he will ride upon the high places of the earth. Wealth, influence, power will be his, and his children and children's children shall inherit the land forever. But if he will not thus grasp and embrace the true elements of our future, he will have none inheritance in it. Others who have accepted and embraced those elements will be stronger than he, and seize on that future for themselves and their children. He will continue in substantially the same condition of poverty and want as under slavery-to hew wood and draw water. His children will be few, and in great numbers will perish in infancy from that neglect which is the universal hard lot of the children of the poor, the ignorant, and the degraded.

Now, here, precisely here, is the pressing urgency of our mission to the colored man. In such a crisis his future destiny now is. And what we do for him, what he does for himself, must be done quickly. These great questions of destiny are hastening with terrible speed to their decision. The men who are to hold the continent of North-America, and to give it to their children, are hastening on to win the prize. They are crowding every railway train that crosses the continent, and the cabin of every steamer that plows the Atlantic or the Pacific. The human race is in motion to take possession of North-America. There is fearful danger that while we delay, or while our slow processes are tardily proceeding, the hour of destiny for the colored man will strike, and the day of his visitation be past.

Nor are these principles applicable alone to the colored man; they are applicable, in all their force and efficacy, to the men of every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people under the whole heaven, that are trying to take possession of this good land. I fear no inroads of a pagan Asiatic people, provided only our Protestant churches are true to their great mission. If the Asiatics come here, in whatever numbers, and embrace our religion, our moral standard, our Christian social and domestic life, they will be worthy participants in the blessings which our God hath bestowed on us and on our children.

But if they come with no domestic life, with no Christian education of their children, with no Christian standard either of private morals or domestic life, they will but hew our wood and draw our water, and build our railways for a little time, and pass away, leaving no trace behind them. A people of such a life can not grasp and hold this land in competition with a Christian people. If we mean to do any thing for the Chinese that are multiplying within our borders, now is our time.

And the principle will apply, with no modification, to the millions who come to us from papal Europe, and, as citizens of this free country, adhere to the superstitions of popery and train their children in them. The history of the past is our sufficient guide. In no section of papal Europe has the nurture which the Roman Catholic Church imposes on its subject peoples over raised up an enlightened and energetic people, able to cope in free competition with a Protestant population. It has never failed to train the masses in ignorance, superstition, and degradation. And this is precisely what the priesthood intend. There is nothing American it so much dreads and hates as free schools. And it has not yet learned the great truth, that no ignorant, superstitious, and degraded population can hold its own in the free competition of American society. That portion of our population, of whatever nationality, which adheres to the pope and the priesthood, will sink, with few exceptions, to the lowest stratum of society, and, in a few generations, pass away and be forgotten. The Catholic priesthood in all its exultant prosperity from immigration, will ere long find that the ax is lying at the root of the trees.

I have been accustomed, for several years, to regard this subject with a religious awe. I seem to see a decree of God in it. About twelve centuries ago, the armies of Mohammedanism were ravaging the world, and everywhere in their triumphant march were announcing as the alternative of the nations, "The Koran or death." There is something terribly analogous to this in the present great aggressive movement of Christianity. It marshals no armies; it wields no carnal weapons. And yet it does present the alternative of submission or death. It does form the only style of character before which nothing else can stand in equal competition. The house of David must wax stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul weaker and weaker. And the time is near at hand. The angel hath been seen standing with one foot on the sea and the other on the land, and lifting up his hand to heaven, and swearing by Him that liveth forever and ever that there shall be delay no longer. The ax lieth at the root of the tree.

2. But all this is on the supposition that the American churches are true to the call of God in this great missionary work. But let us lock for one moment at the sad supposition that they are not. What then will come to the millions whom they should have evangelized? The American churches themselves will perish, and go down among the degraded and wretched masses whom they should have instructed and diligently taught the ways of the Lord. On the one hand, formalism and ritualism will grow apace, and usurp more and more the place of a living spiritual devotion, and an earnest, practical, Christian life. The Gospel will no longer exert its vital power, and a deadly superstition will take its place. Morals will decline. The family tie will be still more weakened. Men, and women too, will be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Intelligence, industry, frugality, wealth, will decay; liberty will perish; anarchy will come first, and then military despotism, and the children of the Puritans will sink in one common degradation with the descendants of Asiatic paganism, papal superstition, and African barbarism. Some horrid despotism, hitherto unknown in human history, will rule them all with a rod of iron. Let us not deceive ourselves; liberty can not live in this country without Christian morality; Christian morality can not live without Christian faith; and our prosperity can not outlive liberty. No man, therefore, can show any good reason for expecting any continuance of our liberty and prosperity, on any other condition than our imbuing the masses with a fervent, enlightened Christian faith.

Here then, fathers and brethren, is the crisis of the hour, the crisis of American destiny. The generation to whom John the Baptist preached had been brought into being to receive the Messiah, the Son of God. This generation has come upon the stage to preach the Gospel to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people under the whole heaven. The American churches have come to this hour, that they may bear a conspicuous part in this universal work, and especially that they may evangelize the degraded masses of our own population. Destiny is in it—both theirs and ours. Will the American churches turn with all their hearts unto the Lord? Will they consent to cut themselves loose from the dead, decaying, and putrescent carcass of antiquated human polity, and to depend for unity and strength alone on the moral and spiritual forces of the Gospel? Will they carry into the very heart and centre of all their enterprises, and of all the wealth which may result from them, the self-denying spirit of Him who, though he was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich? Will they organize the family and all social lift on the same principles of loving self-sacrifice, in obedience to the of Christ, and not to the latest behests of Paris fashion? Will wives and mothers leave the vain pomps and shows of famion, and ambitious aspiration after public life, and with cheerful and loving assiduity, devote their lives to training children for the church, for wrist, and for God? These, and the like of these, are the questions on anch destiny, our destiny, the destiny of the church, the destiny of our dear country, the destiny of coming ages—is hanging. How will they be answered? The recording angel pauses but a little while for the reply. The ax lieth at the root of the trees.

THE Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association, in presenting their Fifth Annual Report, are in doubt whether first to recognize the hand of God in the affliction that has fallen upon them in the death of three of their female missionaries, or to recount with humble gratitude His favor in the general prosperity given to our work. In no one year since the formation of our Association has so great a mortality befallen our missionaries, and in none has there been such evident prosperity, both at home and abroad.

At the commencement of the year, six missionaries were under appointment for the Mendi Mission, and the treasury of the Society contained but twenty-two dollars and eighty-five cents of unappropriated funds. Before the departure of the vessel in which they were expected to sail, two more were added to their number, and the Executive Committee were enabled to dismiss them to their labor without embarrassing the treasury or incurring a debt.

By the Report of the Treasurer, it will be seen that the receipts of the Society for the fiscal year ending August 31st, 1851, were thirty-four thousand six hundred and sixty-four dollars and five cents, showing an increase over the receipts of the previous year of nine thousand five hundred and four dollars and forty-nine cents. or a little more than 373 per cent.

The number of Life Members added to the Society during the year, on the payment of thirty dollars each by themselves or their friends, is one hundred and ninety-sevn; and the whole number of Life Members is now four hundred and sixty-nine.

The following summary embraces the statistics of our

FOREIGN MISSIONARY OPERATIONS.

The whole number of missions is 5.

Whole number of stations, 11.
Whole number of ordained missionaries, 16.
Whole number of male assistants, 10.

Whole number of female assistants, 20.

Whole number of churches, 10,

Whole number of laborers sent from this country, 46,

Whole number sent out during the year, 11, (of whom 3 were ordained missionaries, 3 were male assistants, and 5 female assistants.)

IN HOME MISSIONARY OPERATIONS,

The number aided directly from our treasury, 23. Through the treasury of the W. H. & F. M. Δ_1 (supposed.) 20. In Ganada, 2 ordained missionaries, with their wives, and 2 other female assistants, supported in part by us, 6.

The whole number of missionary laborers under the care of the Association is 95.

MENDI MISSION.

Missionaries—Rev. G. Thompson and Mrs. Thompson, (now in this country,) J. S. Brooks, Rev. J. Cutter Teptt, Rev. F. L. Arnold, W. C. Brown, Samuel Gray, and Miss Hannah More. Native dissisted—Sarah Kinson. Total,

The commencement of this year's history of the Mendi Mission was full of encouragement. The condition of the mission at Mr. Thompson's return to this country was very promising; the school was increasing in number and interest; the church was in a prosperous and growing condition; the war was supposed to be brought to an end, and the country around was urgent in its demand for an increased number of missions and missionaries. At home, the funds designed especially for this mission were increasing; and the number of persons, male and female, who offered themselves for laborers in this field was so great, that the Executive Committee felt justified in making a careful discrimination in their selection; and a company of missionaries sailed under the most favorable auspices for Africa early in December. The close of the year is shrouded in gloom. The war has recommenced its ravages, and sickness and death have performed a dreadful work among our little company of missionaries there.

FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Mr. Thompson arrived at New-York from this mission on the 26th of September, two days after the presentation of our last Annual Report. His visit was prompted in part by a desire to arouse the churches of this country to a due appreciation of the importance of Africa as a field of missionary labor, to obtain an immediate reënforcement for the mission at Kaw-Mendi, and secure laborers for the new fields rapidly opening in Africa. The immediate occasion of his return was the entire prostration of his health, induced by his very arduous labors and the great fatigues and exposures incurred during a journey of two and a half months lute the interior of Africa.

This journey was undertaken by Mr. Thompson for the purpose of visiting the chiefs in the Mendi and Tecongo country, to mediate between parties who had long been at war with each other, and to secure, if possible, a permanent peace. He wished also to explore that region of country, and ascertain what facilities it effered for the prosception of missionary labor. The Divine blessing attended his exertions, and he returned to the mission, notwithstanding his severe prostration, rejoicing in his success. His journal, and the letters written by him during his absence and immediately after his return to the mission, show that at that time the country was open for the preaching of the gospel, and the people had a desire to hear almost unequalled. The following are extracts from his communications:—

"For nearly nino years, the whole country has been invaded and torn and desolated by intestine wars. God is now stilling the troubled elements into peace. From as far as I can hear the news is, 'They are making peace.' Oh! that the churches would regard the voice of God in this, and immediately send a host of various laborers to take possession of the field, spread the light and truth, and establish the gospel of peace in the whole land. Never was there such an opening, such a demand the troubles and reschools are described.

"Heretofore, no one could travel in the country without danger of losing all he had, if not his life, by bands of warring robbers, who were plundering every thing they could lay their hands on; nowhere could the people be persuaded to be quiet and listen to the gospel. The fear of the enemy kept them in constant alarm, and desire for revenge filled all hearts. Nor so now. Now we can travel any where in safety; and every where the people are eager to hear the gospel. I have been moving about for three months without any lock on my things, and I don't know that an article has been stolen from me, though exposed by night and day. The whole land is before us, and to all human view open for the gospel. I should have made arrangements in many towns for schools, but I have no teachers for them. I am almost alraid to speak about schools and ministers, lest I should raise hopes only to be disappointed. I cannot promise teachers, for I know not where I shall get them. I cannot say, 'You shall have a minister,' because I know too well how hard it is to get now and then one to come to this field. So I make an effort to get all the truth before their minds I can now, begging God's blessing on the seed sown, and to get some of their children into the schools already begun.

"Wherever I go, kings and people are all ready to meet and hear the gospel. If I'go into a town, and say, 'I wish to talk God palaver to you,' in a few minutes they are assembled to hear. By day or night a congregation can be had, with fifteen minute' notice, of very attentive, inquiring hearers, in any town where I have been. They receive the Word with acclamations and thanks without number. They say, 'We were in the dark before you came; we never heard of these things before. No one ever told us of these things till you came.' At different places where I was anxious to pass on, the kings and peeple have begged me with such carnestness to stay and preach to them, I could not resist, but tarried all night, and opened to them the plan of salvation. I use no flattering words to please them, but endeavor to preach right to their hearts and consciences. I boldly and freely oppose all their idolatrous, foolish and superstitious notions, condemn all their idols, greegrees, charms and 'medicines' as delusions from the devil to destroy them, and tell them they must look only to God for belp and salvation. No one objects or opposes, but they often ask how they must pray: 'We never prayed to God; we don't know how to come to him; what must we do to find him!' &c. After preaching and prayer they generally beg God for themselves; others promise to go and beg God for their souls. To see a heathen king bowed with his face to the earth, begging God for mercy, is a sight that moves my heart.

"At Sa-bue-mah, where I made my stopping-place, I had a very interesting congregation of many chiefa and their families, and others. They keep the Sabbath, listen with great attention to preaching, and ask questions with much interest, feeling that they are in the dark; and light baying come to them, they embrace it."

Mr. Thompson gave a very favorable report of the country in the interior. From this description, we should judge it to be as salubrious as it is possible for a tropical climate to be:—

"It is naturally delightful, but desolated by war. My interpreter tells me that in places where towns were thick, they have been so stripped by the war, that a man may walk a week and only find the old rains of towns where no one dwells; but now they begin to build them up again. The people are mostly crowded into towns, as thick as bees in a hive. "The walls are built of dried clay-balls, from twelve to fifteen feet high, and about two or three feet thick on the bottom, narrowing to one foot on the top. Plenty of round holes are left for muskets. The top is defended by sharpened sticks pointing outwards and downwards. On the outside is a deep ditch in the shape of a V, so that no one can stand at the bottom of the wall. Frequently, a ditch is also on the inside, filled with sharpened sticks; if not a ditch, a row of stakes, sharpened and thickly set, so that no one can jump from the wall. Some towns have double rows of walls, with space between. The houses are built without any order-jumbled together so that one can scarcely go between them; and yet every one knows his place and business as well as bees and ants in their crowded cities. The country here is not flat and low like that nearer the coast, but high, hilly, beautifully rolling, and very fertile. Under white men's cultivation it would be as the 'garden of the Lord ?' but African agriculture is very meagre, being done only with a large knife, or a tool something like a light cleaver, to clear the land, and a hoe from one to two inches wide, to till it. The bush is dense and tangled with vines, and ropes, and thorns of various kinds and sizes, from half an inch to six inches in diameter, beyond any thing you can imagine.

"The river varies in width from that of the Ohio to that of the Mississippi; as in those streams, in dry weather there are on the upper parts numerous and banks, over which a most beautiful broad sheet of clear, sparkling water rolls with strong current. In the rainy season the river rises to a frightful height, and pours a 'mighty flood,' almost irresistible to paddles or oars. . . Rapids obstruct navigation, but in a high state of water canoes can ascend some distance, by working along by and among the bushes.

"From Tissana above, as far as I have been it is filled with huge masses of rocks, forming cascades and rapids every few miles. A sight of them is most grand, and the noise can be heard a great distance.

and the noise can be heard a great distance.

"As far as I ascended, I judge it to be as wide and to pour as much water as the Ohio at Cincinnati; if not wider, and with more water. Were there any occasion for mills, it furnishes any number of as beautiful and powerful mill-seats as can be found. Perhaps the day will come when this river will be studded with manufactories, mills, machinery, &c., as thickly as New-England rivers. Is it more improbable than it was three hundred years ago that they would ever be what they are! Mighty changes and revolutions are continually taking place in this world, and Africa will not be left without feeling their influence. Too long has it been neglected and forgotten, while men with knowledge, ingenuity, zeal, and enterprise can come here as easily as they went to America; I will add my belief, with a little in the climate is delightful; no such oppressive heat as you have in July and August, but pleasant. In the dry eason it is warm in the middle of the day, but the fore and after parts and nights are cool and bracing. One could not but love them. In the rainy season it is cool, something like October in America. Those who have lived here long wear woollen clothes much of the time.

"At this distance from the low lands, and with such a high rolling country, with no stagnant lakes or awamps, no wide river bottoms, no sluggish streams or over-flowing of country, I see no reason why it would not be as healthy a country when once cleared up, settled and cultivated, as are the Eastern States. I firmly believe it. I see no natural cause of sickness here any more than in any new uncultivated country."

An agreement was made with Braw, the chief of the Boompeh country, for the establishment of a mission at Tissana of which the following is a copy:—

1st. Braw agrees, and hereby doth give to George Thompson and his successors a place to sit down by him, as his stranger, for the purpose of establishing a mission, to teach school and preach the gospel for any length of time. He and his successors are to be the landlords of the mission, which term includes the provision of the land for a farm, finewood, timber for buildings, protection, hearing and judging of palavers; first making him acquainted with the plans of the mission before executing them.

2d. Braw agrees to build a good house for the teacher, for an equivalent of twelve bars, [$5.76,] and also a chapel, for an equivalent of twenty-four bars,

3d. George Thompson and his successors agree to preach the gospel and instruct the children, fluding them books and clothing gratis, for ten years from date of this; supposing by that time the people will so value the blessings of education, as to be willing to do something to procure the same.

4th. All who send children to the school must feed the same, or give to the mission an equivalent of two bars [96 cts.] a month, in rice, country cloths, oil, or any thing that can be used or disposed of by the mission; in which case they will be taken into the mission family and provided for.

5th. The mission is to make its own school regulations and laws, without any interference from parents, guardians or chiefs.

Tissana, Africa, May 28, 1850.

Tissana is supposed to be about 200 miles from Kaw-Mendi, on the Big Boom river.

At the time of making this agreement, and for some years previous, Braw appeared to be very anxious for the establishment of a mission among his people. He declared that he had given up war, and once and again had sent earnest entreaties for some one to come and tell him the way of life; and at this time, when he saw Mr. Thompson approaching, and knew the object for which he came, he repeatedly cried, "Thank God! thank God!" as he ran to meet him, and cast his arms around his neck.

Besides the opening at Tissana,—of which Mr. Thompson says, "The field is ripe for the harvest, and laborers are imperiously called for; the people are eager for the gospel,"—he says:—

"Moh-bungo, Soom-beve, and Gon-gom-mah are large towns, ready for the gospel, and all close together. They should have schools, but for this we must wait till we can furnish our own teachers. A strong religious influence should be kept up at these places, as they are at the head of navigation on Big Boom, where multitudes of traders resort, whose influence is very bad.

"At Boompen is an open inviting field, which should be occupied by a good white man and his wife. At Tecongo, another should be stationed at once; or rather, two men and their wives should be sent to each of these places without delay, so that if one falls the work need not all stop. At least two and two should go forth togethe

"Around and connected with these large towns are many important places, where schools are called for, and preaching desired. All along Big Boom, from the sea up as high as I went, the field is open to as many laborers as can be prevailed on to come."

Mr. T. closed his journal by an appeal to the American churches, in which he expressed his belief that the war was at an end, while he at the same time indicated his fears that nothing but the establishment of missions among them could make that peace lasting.

A map, showing the general features of the Mendi country, and the course of the Big Boom from the Tecongo river to its mouth, the Little Boom, and the location of the Mendi mission, with other things, was published in the February number of the American Missionary. The information obtained by Mr. T. in his journey is very interesting and valuable. No white man had ever before penetrated there. It was gratifying to learn the influence which our mission was having so far from its location. It has been supposed by some that the general favor with which Mr. T. was received was shown him on account of the influence which colonies of blacks on the coast were exerting. Mr. Thompson assures us that he never heard any colony except Sierra Leone alluded to by them; that no one of them had ever visited any of those colonies, nor seen any one from them.' The favorable reception granted to him was doubtless due, under God, to the kind treatment shown by the friends of this mission and its earliest laborers to the captives of the Amistad during their sojourn in this country, in their passage to Africa, and the good done them by the early missionaries of our Society, before they left the mission to go to their own country. Many of them were from Mendi. The influences subsequently exerted by the mission, and their faithfulness in declaring the whole counsel of God, did much to give importance to Mr. T.'s effort.

Before the 1st of December, through the Divine blessing, a company of eight missionaries, male and female, were collected together at New-York, ready to embark for Africa. Of these, Rev. J. Cutler Tefft and Mrs. Eliza Benton Tefft, Rev. Franklin L. Arnold, Mrs. Minerva Dayton Arnold, and Mr. Samuel Gray, were from Ohio; Mr. Wm. C. Brown, the son of a deceased slaveholder, was from Louisiana; Miss Hannah More from New-York; and Miss Joanna Alden from Massachusetts. Interesting meetings were held in the Broadway Tabernacle and the Shiloh Presbyterian Church, New-York, and in the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn; and on the 9th of December they sailed in the brig Triton, Capt. Long, for Sierra Leone. Almost every vessel that had taken missionaries to Africa had been freighted with rum.

This strange incongruity had been the subject of frequent remark; but however disagreeable it might be for missionaries to go out in such bad company, there seemed to be no alternative. The owner of the brig in which these missionaries were to sail had determined to take rum. He was remonstrated with, but was unwilling to forego the profits. The missionaries and their friends deeply deplored the necessity of going in a vessel thus loaded. Several of them made it a subject of special prayer, and a few days before the time set for sailing, they had the satisfaction of hearing the owner announce that he should not take rum, "as recent advices showed that it would not pay." After a very pleasant passage of thirty-five days, the missionary company reached Sierra Leone, in fine health and spirits, Jan. 15, 1851. They were much gratified by the Christian courtesy and kindness shown them by the captain of the vessel. Mr. Tefft wrote thus:—

"As soon as consistent after sailing, he gave us to understand that it would be his pleasure to have a blessing asked at the table, and family prayers morning and evening. In the morning the captain and mate were with us; and in the evening all hands, except the man at the wheel. The first Sabbath out, the waves rolled so freely, and so many of our number werk confined to their rooms, that we had no public worship. The next Sabbath the captain said he would be pleased to have a sermon, and a prayer-meeting in the evening. Accordingly, we had this arrangement that Sabbath, and every succeeding Sabbath. At these meetings the captain and crew were present. The Spirit seemed to be present with us from the beginning of our voyage. Our little social meetings were found to be a feast of fat things to our souls. We really felt that they were meetings with our God and Saviour."

They arrived at the mission early in Pebruary, and found Mr. Brooks almost entirely destitute of any aid. Thomas Bunyan, the native Mendian, had been dismissed from the mission on account of immoral conduct; and Lewis Johnson (Kin-na) had gone into the interior, on a trading voyage on his own account.

Nine months before, Mr. Thompson had written: "We hope the war-that dreadfully harassing, destructive war-is done; but unless the gospel is introduced it will not stay done. If left to themselves and the free sway of the devil, war will be sure to deluge the country again." The mission at Kaw-Mendi was too weak to furnish the teachers needed for the new station at Tissana, much less to open new ones at Boompeh and Tecongo. Long before our missionaries reached Africa, if not before he made his report in New-York, the war had again broken out in the interior. It had not however, reached Tissana; and the hope was indulged that an embassage from the mission to the Tecongo country would succeed in again securing peace, and the missionaries prepared to establish stations there immediately, as the only hope of making the peace permanent. They found things worse than they had anticipated. Braw had become so entangled in the war, and breathed such a war spirit, that he even forbade prayer being made among his people in the native language, lest the hearts of his soldiers should be cooled and they refuse to go to battle. Their efforts failed, and the war has spread itself, so that they are now shut out from Tissana, as well as from Boompeh and Tecongo, where they had designed commencing new mission stations.

At the latest advices fears were entertained that the old Caulker war would be recommenced, which would bring the fighting among the towns in the near neighborhood of the mission. This would throw the mission again in the midst of the fire, and would entirely prevent extension into the interior. The same Providence that preserved and prospered it in just such circumstances in time past still lives and watches over it, and will do that which shall be for the best interest of His kingdom. To His care we confidently commend it.

The progress of the mission at Kaw-Mendi is very encouraging. Intelligence received from there throughout the year indicates a continual growth of grace among some of the members of the church, and the presence of the converting energies of the Holy Spirit. Mr. Brooks's letters, before the arrival of the newly appointed missionaries, made frequent mention of the thronging of their chapel and the close attention given to the preaching of the gospel. The earliest letters received from Mr. Tefft and others after their arrival at Kaw-Mendi, communicated the cheering intelligence of the addition of four Africans to the church, and the hopeful conversion of others. More recent intelligence has been received of the continued presence of the Holy Spirit among them, of the hopeful conversion of some souls, and the marked progress in the divine life of some of the members of the church. The following is an extract from Mr. Brooks's last letter:—

"We are rejoiced to say that we believe the Holy Spirit is still hovering over us, and that the Lord is from time to time showing his willingness to bless our labors. There are frequently very interesting cases of conversion among the children of the school, and also among the workmen. King Braw has a son in our school thirteen or fourteen years old. When he first came to the mission he was a very bad boy, but since we have been here, he has thought very seriously on the subject of religion, and a few weeks ago, as we have reason to believe, he gave his heart to the Saviour. He is learning fast, and we hope he will be useful. His brother, a young man twentytwo or twenty-three, who has been laboring a few months past for the mission, came a few days since and told us he desired to know all about God-palaver-said he had walked country ways long enough, now he wished to love God with all his heart. I might mention cases of hopeful conversion and deep interest in the subject of religion, that would rejoice your heart. It does cheer us to see our dear children giving themselves to the Saviour, and some of the people around us leaving their heathen ways and walking, as we trust, in the paths of holiness. Surely, we esteem it a great privilege that the Lord has permitted us to bring the Word of Life to this heathen people. We desire to have the Holy Spirit poured out upon us with mighty power. We long to see salvation flow through this whole country like a mighty river."

The year now reported has been one of great suffering from sickness and death at this mission. Every member of the mission family has suffered from the peculiarities of the climate, and the survivors have thrice been called to mourn over the early departure of some one of their companions.

Miss Joanna Alden, who left New-York with the missionary company in December last, died at the mission-house, March 3, after a short illness, from which no serious results were apprehended until within a very short time of her decease. Her death, thus early after her arrival in Africa, was entirely unexpected. She appeared to possess almost an iron constitution and an elasticity and buoyancy of spirit from which we anticipated much. She was of pilgrim descent, and possessed a true pilgrim character. She was a woman of untiring energy and benevolence, the impress of which she bore in her whole appearance. All who knew her, considered her remarkably well fitted for usefulness in the missionary life. She had a peculiar faculty of enlisting the affections and opening the hearts of those about her, and could not have failed to gain the love of the benighted ones committed to her care. But her work on earth is done. The Lord has called her to himself, and she has entered the mansions prepared for her above.

On the 29th of August, intelligence was received of the death of Mrs. Arnold and Mrs. Tefft. Mrs. Arnold died at the mission house June 9, and Mrs. Tefft June 10, 1851. Mrs. Arnold suffered a miscarriage, aggravated by fever, and Mrs. Tefft from the fever of the country acting upon a predisposed tendency of blood to the brain.

Mrs. Arnold was the youngest member of the mission. At the time of her death she was but twenty-one years of age, yet she possessed a correctness of judgment that was truly remarkable. For some time previous to her death her mind had been in a peculiarly spiritual state, and there can be no doubt that for her to die was gain.

Mrs. Tefft was twenty-six years of age. Her health had not been good for some time previous to her going to Africa, and on this account the Executive Committee were in some doubt about the propriety of sending her; but her desire to go was so strong that after advising her of the dangers to which she would be exposed, they left the responsibility of deciding the question with her. She decided to go. When on the Triton, on the eve of her departure, after the concluding prayer-meeting, she exclaimed, "I am happy as a bird; the hour of this meeting is the happiest of my life." To the last she rejoiced in having gone to Africa.

The letters which brought intelligence of the sickness of Mr. Brown and Mrs. Brooks gave the Executive Committee the first hint they had received that the missionaries were suffering from want of suitable dwellings. Application had before been made for a large appropriation to be expended in the erection of mission buildings, and a plage for them was presented. The Executive Committee approved of the plan, and would have made the appropriation, but before the opportunity of acting officially upon it occurred, the purpose of the mission to divide their strength and commence immediately the new stations was announced, accompanied by an intimation that the proposed building would no longer be needed. The Executive Committee waited for further advice from the mission, not knowing how rapidly their buildings had gone to decay. To supply the immediate necessities of the mission, houses either of wood or iron will be sent from this country. A small iron house has been ordered, which will be sent out about the 1st of October. Another will be ordered as soon as a suitable plan can be agreed on. No effort will be spared to supply them with every comfort they can enjoy.

Previous to the commencement of the last rains, and the illness of Mr. Brown, his attention was very much turned towards making the mission, in part at least, self-supporting. Accustomed to the agriculture of a southern climate, his counsel was of great value. The care of the school-boys when out of school was given to him, and he had already entered upon a systematic cultivation of the land around the mission. The scholars were required, and cheerfully consented, to work a portion of each day under his direction. Being acquainted with the culture of the cotton-plant in Louisiana, Mr. Brown was quite confident that it could be successfully cultivated in Africa. He had freely conversed on this subject with gentlemen long resident at Freetown, Sierra Leone, and they were so favorably impressed with the correctness of his views and the feasibility of his plans, that one of them, an officer of the British Government, gave him a cotton gin for the use of the mission. A second one was promised him, to be provided when one of the new stations should need it. Should Mr. Brown's life and health be spared, we shall expect him to afford very valuable assistance to the mission in this way.

A physician is greatly needed at the Mendi Mission. Some of the brethren now on the ground had attended one or two courses of medical lectures, but neither of them had pursued a regular course of medical studies, nor had any experience in practice as a physician. Every augmentation of the number of missionaries, instead of diminishing, increases the necessity of this kind of aid. The brethren appear to think that with the favor of God the lives of some of those who have fallen might have been saved if they could have enjoyed the attention of a skilful physician. They earnestly implore the American churches to give them this assistance. The Executive Committee would gladly comply with their request.

A house carpenter and a blacksmith are also needed. Such persons could render valuable assistance to the mission, especially if qualified to teach when not necessarily employed at their trades.

Instructions are given to the members of the Mendi Mission to consider carefully the question whether the mission may not be removed to a more healthful locality, either on the sea-coast, or to some contiguous part of the country where the same general class of Africans may enjoy its benefits. Before the purchase of Gallinas by the Government of Liberia, that place was open to the missionaries of our Society, and Mr. Thompson urged the Committee to occupy it.

Though cast down, our mission there is not destroyed; on the contrary, they are greatly cheered by the success which has crowned their labors. There has been an unusual mortality this year; but as the sickness among the natives has been unusually severe, we are led to regard it in the nature of an epidemic which may never again be so fatal. The Executive Committee will endeavor to act prudently, but with decision, in the direction pointed out by Providence,

JAMAICA MISSION.

One Mission, five Stations, and one Out-station. Island of Jamaica, West Indies,

In the fall of 1839, five Congregational ministers, four of whom were married, sailed from New-York for the island of Jamaica. They went there with the purpose of establishing a mission among the recently emancipated slaves of that island, and with the expectation of receiving a plain support from the people themselves. On the second day after their arrival at Kingston they heard an inquiry in the streets for missionaries, and learned that four colored men had come as a deputation from the interior to procure a missionary to come among them and instruct them. The story of these men was, that soon after their emancipation the people had said among themselves, "We must have a missionary, but we will not wait for him to come before we build a chapel; we will build first, and pray God to send him afterwards." The chapel was erected, and the people met in it every Sabbath to be seech God to send them a missionary; but none came, and they began to think their prayers were unheard. The suggestion was made, "How do we know that God has not heard our prayers? Let us go to Kingston, and see if the missionary is not there." The American missionaries were found there, one of whom accompanied the delegation on their return to the mountains, and found the fields white for the harvest. The missionaries were soon located at as many different places. four of which were entirely destitute of gospel ordinances. Their expectation of receiving a competent support from the people failed; and after suffering great privations, some of them returned to this country broken in health, and the remainder, at the formation of the American Missionary Association, placed the mission under its care.

Brainerd.—The history of this mission, for a considerable portion of the year under review, has been a very painful one. In the last Annual Report, the suspension of Dr. and Mrs. Hyde from the mission, for causes deeply affecting their moral character, was briefly stated. At that time it was hoped that the Executive Committee would be able to arrest the progress of the evil, a knowledge of whose existence had just reached them, but the providence of God hindered the efforts they were about to make, and prevented the accomplishment of their purposes. The long-continued sickness of the Secretary prevented his visiting Jamaica, until it was too late to hope for the recovery of some, the danger of whose fall seemed to be imminent; and in the November number of the Missionary the final dismissal of Dr. and Mrs. Hyde and Mr. and Mrs. Evarts from the service of the American Missionary Association was announced.

On the 21st of November, immediately after the report of this action had been received by the Jamaica Mission, a meeting of the mission was held, and the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

"Resolved, That we fully approve of the action of the Executive Committee, in dissolving all connection between the American Missionary Association and Dr. and Mrs. Hyde and Mr. and Mrs. Evarts."

The mission also recommended the closing for the present of the high school at Brainerd, and the services of Mr. Veining were thus dispensed with. The nominal force of the mission was thus greatly reduced, and the station at Brainerd left without the services of any resident missionary or assistant. The ministerial brethren from the other stations, feeling the necessity of inculcating truth as the best antago nist of error, supplied in turn the pulpit at Brainerd. The excinded members of the mission succeeded at first in drawing away nearly one third of the church and congregation. Many of these were believed to be true Christians, and the result showed that God had purposes of mercy towards them. They seen became convinced of the corrupting tendencies of the doctrines and practices they were called upon to sustain, and placed themselves again under the care of our mission.

In January, the Executive Committee were happy in being permitted to appoint as a missionary for this station the Rev. A. M. Richardson, who had very successfully filled the pastoral office in Lenox, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson sailed from New-York May 6, and arrived safely in Jamaica after a somewhat perileus passage The first letter received from Mr. Richardson brought the satisfactory information that he had been cordially received by the people at the mission, and that he found the condition of things there less disastrous than he had feared.

In a subsequent letter he says :-

"We have held church meetings nearly every week, and some of them have been quite interesting. I have also appointed two inquiry meetings, by request, at six o'clock on Monday morning. From twenty to thirty attended them, several of whom seemed greatly burdened on account of their sins, and were anxiously inquiring what they must do to be saved. Some of the church have given up their old hopes, and others are freely confessing their sins, and returning to duty. Still the mass of the church are greatly in the dark, and wandering far from God. One individual has been suspended; others are under process of discipline, and will probably have to be dealt with in a similar manner. We find it necessary to proceed with great forbearance and caution. The seeds of error have taken deep root in many minds here, and it will require long and faithful labor to eradicate them. Some who were accounted among the most spiritually minded in the church have been infected with the poison. Our congregations on the Sabbath are usually large, and the number in attendance is steadily increasing. The Sabbath-school, which had been reduced to a mere handful, is now filling up again, and becoming quite interesting."

Under date of August 29, Mr. R. wrote :-

"The number in attendance at the chapel is steadily increasing, and our Sabbathschool and Bible-class have grown larger by one fourth since I wrote you last. The library I brought out has given new life and interest to the school. I meet them at ten o'clock on Sabbath morning, and usually spend an hour and a half with them. I think there is a growing attention to the subject of religion in the congregation. Almost every day numbers come to talk about their spiritual condition. Between fifteen and twenty have presented their names as candidates for church membership, several of whom formerly belonged to the church, but were dismissed for unchristian conduct. Some of these give good evidence of being sincerely penitent for their sins, and a few profess to have lately given their hearts to God. The girl whom we have adopted into our family is one of the number, and I think has truly met with the great change. I have organized them all into a class, and meet them weekly for examination and personal religious instruction. One brother, who had become deeply tinctured with prevailing errors, and had refused to walk with the church, has publicly renounced them, confessed his faults, and returned to his duty. The young man who was suspended has likewise made an acknowledgment to the church, and seems truly penitent. I trust the Lord is preparing his own way before

Eliot.—In the terrible affliction with which the island of Jamaica has been visited during the last year, this station, and the parish in which it is situated, have largely shared. In the parish more than one thousand persons have fallen victims to it, of whom eighteen were members of Mr. Thompson's congregation, and two of them members of the church. Mrs. Thompson has suffered from an attack of this terrible disease, but through the blessing of God is restored again to health.

At Eliot, as well as at some other stations, God seems to have gone before, and pre pared the way to bring good out of this great evil, and to make it a means by which to turn the hearts of some to himself. Our missionaries have been permitted to rejoice in witnessing the verification of the Scriptural truth, "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." For some morths previous to its appearance there had been a good deal of feeling among the people, and an unusual interest on the subject of religion. Mr. Thompson's report says:—

"This feeling continued, and when the disease commenced its fearful and rapid work, many, very many, both in and out of the church, who had been unaffected before, felt themselves quite insecure, and were led to inquire, with apparent sincerity, 'What shall we do to be saved?' Our chapel was crowded. Men would now listen to the Word of God, who before had 'cared for none of these things.' All felt that God was speaking, and they must hear his voice. Many were pricked in their hearts, and some turned unto the Lord. At the time, we trembled, fearful that their professed love to Christ was the result of fear rather than of love, and that when danger had passed away they would go back. This led to much faithul labor both publicly and privately, first, to make them understand what God did require, and second, to lead them to do His will from the heart. Some have gone back as we feared, and now walk no more with us, while others maintain a well-ordered life, and rejoice with thankfulness.

"Since January 1st we have received twenty-four to church fellowship, twentytwo of them on profession of their faith. Several others give good evidence of being converted to God, whom we expect to receive at our next communion. The work still goes on. A few days since a young man and his wife called to let us know that they had fully given up their hearts to God, and devoted the remainder of their days to his service. When the cholera first appeared they were living in fornication. He was attacked by it and brought to death's door. I was his only physician, and urged on him his danger and his sin. He solenntly promised that if God would spare him he would serve Him. The vow was accepted, the means used were blessed, and the man recovered. In a few weeks they were married, and now they wish publicly to profess Christ. Time will test their sincerity.

"With these causes of rejoicing, we have also had those of grief and sadness. The same Spirit that led some to the foot of the cross, ppened the eyes of others to see that they were not there; that their hopes were vain, and they were yet in their sins. Some have gone out from us, and have been cut off from the church; one for selling liquor against oft-repeated and earnest remonstrance, and another for adultery. For these men we had long cherished better hopes. Man looketh on the outward appearance; the Lord alone knoweth the heart.

"Grog-shops are multiplying in all parts of the island, and there are now nearly ten to where there was formerly one. Throughout our mission we are renewing our efforts in behalf of temperance, and meetings have been held here, at Hernitage, and at Brainerd, and more will be held soon. Our church members are all pledged teetotallers, and are not known any of them to drink any thing that incoxicates."

The intelligence received from this station throughout the year has been very encouraging, and has led the Executive Committee to hope that the Spirit of God has been manifestly with it. Not only have numbers been hopefully converted, some of whom have already joined the church, and others of whom are anxiously waiting for the privilege of doing so, but the terrible sifting of the hopes of men caused by the near approach of death has led many to more correct views than they had before held of the importance of entire conformity of heart and life to the will of God, and the necessity of a love that will acquiesce in all his dispensations, and a faith which will sustain the soul in the severest trials.

Schools.—The missionaries have encouraged the people in efforts to sustain their own schools and as far as it was safe to do so, have yielded them up to their entire control. The school at Eliot has been under the management of directors chosen by the people, and from among themselves. A young man from the Brainerd station has been employed as teacher during the year now reported, at a salary of about $14 per month. The entire support of the school has been made by the directors from the school fees, and a donation of £10, received from "Friends" in England.

Purchase of Land for the Mission.—When Mr. Thompson was in this country a special effort was made by him to raise funds for the purchase of lands for the use of the mission. The money then raised, $175, has laid in our treasury until this year.

An effort was made to increase this sum among the people, and the first of August was fixed upon as the time for making it. Mr. Thompson says:—

"We had one of the most interesting anniversaries we have ever had. The last chapter of Joshua was read. The people saw in the journeyings of the children of Israel something of their own wanderings and present condition. A contrast was graphically drawn by several of the people between the past and the present. It would have gladdened any Christian heart to have heard them. Every year shows a decided improvement in the morals, habits, and customs of our people. The progress is slow, but no more so than that of the children of Israel.

"At the close of the day a contribution was taken up. We set as a sum to be raised £20, and found on counting what was paid or promised to be paid in four days, that we had £19 3s. 3d., beside a jackass, worth about £2. In less than a week we had raised the sum to £22. On the next Friday we purchased 9a. 0r. 20p. at a cost of £45 12s. 6d., or £5 per acre. The sum the Society gave us £255 13s. 10d.) put with what we raised, £223) makes the chapel fund £57 13s. 10d. After paying the necessary expense of procuring the deed, we shall have left £8 1s. 4d. to aid in the purchase of about two acres more from Aleppo estate as soon as it shall be for sale. This will make the station premises very comfortable. The people are truly thankful to the dear friends who contributed to this object, and to the Society for forwarding the same. They feel especially grateful to their former pastor, Rev. Mr. Hovey, for his continued deep interest in them, and his efforts in their behalf, and would very much rejoice to see him in Jamaica again."

The report from Eliot gives the following account of the finances of the church and congregation:—

"Considering the adverse circumstances of the past year, and the effort made by some to diminish these contributions, the result is encouraging. I hope more will be done another year."

Representations of the destitute condition in which many of the families who had been deprived of one or both their parents by cholera were left, having been made to the Executive Committee, a large box of clothing, bedding, etc., was sent out to them. In reference to this and the general condition of the people, the report says:

"The contribution of the friends at home for the poor out here have not only been thankfully received, but have done much good. We have had the consolation of seeing many made confortable. It is more blessed to give than receive. Many of our people are improving in their habits and modes of living; getting more household comforts; bringing their families together at meal-time; sitting together in the house of God; caring more about the education and home training of their children, etc. etc. This is encouraging. Truth is prevailing over error and superstition. False notions of religion are being discovered; the hopes of many are giving way; some turn openly to the world, while others turn heartily unto the Lord. A difference is being seen in daily life between 'him that serveth God and him that serveth him not.' Pray for us, that the Worl of God may continue to be precious."

Union.—The report of this station and its out-station bears date August 16. There are two churches under the pastoral care of Mr. Wolcott; one at Chesterfield, and one at Devon-Pen. During the past year seven persons had been received into them; several others were expecting to be received at the next communion. Some cases of discipline had occurred, one of which was for adultery. The report speaks of the alarming extent to which this vice still prevails in Jamaica. It was checked by emancipation and the subsequent efforts of their religious teachers, but the pernicious influences to which they were exposed, and the unboly examples set before them while they were yet slaves, have not yet ceased to affect the people. Some of our missionaries speak of marked improvement the last year.

In relation to the general condition of the church, Mr. Wolcott says:-

"I think the more substantial part of the church are steadily advancing in Christian knowledge and experimental piety; yet there is a lack of that freshness and enthusiasm in the manifestation of their religious feelings which a full realization of spiritual things is naturally calculated to inspire.

"We have received from the peop	ole	for	r th	ie	sup	port	of	the	n	nini	ster,	$37	34

108-200												D121	49

"In addition to this, about one hundred days' work have been given in carrying forward the improvements at Chesterfield.

"Our building at Chesterfield, to which I am compelled to give much time and attention, has been greatly delayed on account of bad weather and want of laborers, but the work is now prosecuted vigorously. You will be better able to estimate the amount of labor required in the erection of a building here, when you are told that the best of the state of the our people carry all the boards on their heads a distance of from two to three miles, and some of the cedar five miles. One man may carry from two to three boards in a day. In this way some four thousand feet are to be got on the ground. Timbers, and in some cases stones, are to be brought in the same way.

"We are often pained with the backwardness of our people in a good cause, and with the meagreness of their contributions. They are poor, and get what they have with great difficulty, and we can sympathize with them, but yet we would have them deal with a more liberal hand. After all, compared with some who have much more wealth, and who have enjoyed many more privileges, they do pretty well.

"The past year, and a part of the preceding one, have been seasons of severe trials, in which the Executive Committee have sympathized; but we trust the storm has passed. Would that it had left no wrecks behind, and made no breaches to be repaired. We trust that what remain have been strengthened and settled, and are now walking together in faith.

"The school at Devon-Pen has forty-four on the list, twenty-six boys and eighteen girls. Chesterfield has about twenty-five. The last-named school is at present independent of the Association. About twenty-five dollars have been received at Chesterfield from school fees. From the Quakers in England £10 have been received for the school, and £5 for the building."

Oberlin.—The school at this station has for some years been conducted by Miss Mary Dean, who went to Jamaica in December, 1847, from the Mission Institute, Illinois. Early in the year her health so far failed that she was compelled to suspend her labors for a season, but soon re-commenced them with somewhat renewed physical vigor. Events subsequently proved that she had not recovered strength to warrant her continuing them, and early in April, having first received the sanction of the Executive Committee, she left the island and returned to the United States. Although the mission regretted the necessity of this step, they cordially approved of it, believing that in this way only could her valuable services be secured in future. Her passage to this country proved to be of great benefit to her, and her sojourn among her friends in Illinois has perfected what was thus happily begun. She now writes that her health is entirely restored, that she is as vigorous as when she first went to Jamaica. The Committee hope she will be able to return to her school soon.

Mr. Olds gives us the following report of this station :-

"In making our annual report we have to record to the praise of God His great fathfulness and mercy to us during the past year. Although it has not been a year free from trials with us, yet it has been one of great mercies. The pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noon-day, have been all around us, but they have entered none of the dwellings of the members of this church. Thousands have literally fallen by our side, and yet we as a mission family and a church have been preserved. We have almost without exception enjoyed uninterrupted health, and can testify that the care of our Father for us has been unremitted. His kind providence has provided for us every thing we have needed. And what is better, we can testify that we have not been without the smiles of His face and the light of His countenance shining upon us. We have a confidence that our labors have not been in vain in the Lord. The pleasing assurances we have that numbers of this little flock are really growing in grace, and becoming more like Christ, are among the most precious recollections of the past year. I do not know that it was ever my privilege while a pastor in the States to witness more of spiritual development during the same period than has been manifested among this people during the time this report covers.

"Nor have the blessings of God's Spirit been confined to the members of the church. There have been a goodly number of hopeful conversions from among the impehitent. Before the breaking out of the cholera among us there was a growing interest among some of the impenitent of our congregation. During the prevalence of that terrible epidemic there was a great rush to the chapels. Many whose fears were excited made fair promises of a better life, which they soon forgot when their fears were allayed. They are now just as indifferent and just as much sunken in lust as before. Yet there are numbers who we trust are leading new lives, and whom we hope to meet among the redeemed at the Judgment.

"Fifteen have been added to the church the last year on profession of their faith in Christ. One has been suspended from church fellowship. Several others have presented themselves to the church for membership, but they have been put off because we were not satisfied that they were really new creatures in Christ.

"The school since Miss Dean's departure has been taught by Charles H. Sims, a young man who has lived with us ever since we have been settled here. He succeeds well in teaching, and we have hopes that he will be an afficient help for us. And yet we hope with trembling, for we see so few who make efficient laborers here.

Providence.—Until the present year this station has been considered an outstation of Oberlin, and its church and congregation have been under the pastoral care of the missionary at that place.

Since Mr. Hall became connected with the Jamaica Mission, he has resided constantly at Providence, and taken the entire charge of the station. On the third of June he was ordained to the work of the ministry by the Congregational Association composed of American ministers residing in Jamaica, and is now the pastor of the Providence church.

In March last he gave a very encouraging account of its condition. A number were then auxious to make a public profession of their faith. In July he

"The church at this place is small, and the congregation is also small, though usually as large as the chapel will accommodate.

"We feel that the cause of God has been advancing, and I think I may say greatly advancing, during the past year. We have enjoyed a precious though limited revival, which has resulted, we trust, in the conversion of some souls. For a considerable time before the cholera made its appearance in the island, God was evidently at work by his Spirit among this people, and several professed to turn to God. After its appearance the interest became more general, and much more feeling was manifested.

"At our last communion twelve persons were received to the church on profession of their faith, and two that had been suspended were restored. At the present time there seems to be a good degree of religious interest manifested, and we feel that some are growing in grace-those lately received as well as others. A large part of the congregation attend the Sabbath-school and Bible-classes. Of these some fifty or sixty, children and others, are able to read the Word of God with a considerable degree of intelligence. Some adults who have enjoyed no means of learning to read, except what they have derived from the Sabbath-school, are all engaged, and all making good progress. The prayer and conference meetings during the week are attended in such a manner as to give us good encouragement.

"The school as will be recollected, is on the hands of the people. Since the last of February we have had a native teacher, Miss Susan Edwards. She is from Eliot, and had resided in the mission family at that place for some considerable time. The school has made very good progress under her instruction; and for the past year has averaged about thirty scholars. The moneys that have been raised by the people have not come into my hands, but have been expended by them in various ways upon the station. Our people are poor, and though they have contributed but a little, we feel that some of them have done all they were able. Most of them labor under great disadvantages, and some of them are struggling hard to get out of the 'old rut' in which they have been so long. We see signs of progress. Reforms of various kinds are at work, slowly to be sure, but steadily. While some are striving to walk upon the high way of holiness, they see a better way than they have pursued in respect to the things of this world, both for themselves, and for their children, and they are striving to attain that also.

"One member of this church has died during the past year with the cholers, and about thirty within the region over which our congregation is scattered."

GENERAL STATE OF THE MISSION.

Notwithstanding the trials under which the labors in Jamaica commenced the year under review, the progress of the mission during it must be regarded as gratifying. Before its close, one of the missionaries wrote :-

"I have just returned from an interesting meeting of our Association at Hermitage. Most of the delegates of the churches brought the cheering intelligence that God was mercifully visiting them. The report from Eliot, Providence and Oberlin was especially cheering. At each of these stations there have been a number of hopeful conversions, and Christians have been quickened by the presence and power of the Spirit. Our congregations have been greatly enlarged, and there has been and is a solemnity and interest that is manifestly the result of the Spirit's influence upon the people.

The labors of a missionary in Jamaica are, owing to the peculiarities of the people, induced by long-continued bondage, and the habits engendered and perpetuated thereby, not only various, but extremely trying and arduous. Among the greatest difficulties they have to encounter are the licentiousness and intemperance of the people, and their exceedingly gross views of what constitutes true religion. The correspondence of our missionaries frequently brings to mind God's ancient and rebellious people, and the forty years spent by them in the wilderness, before they were prepared, even under inspired leaders, to enter the land of Canaan. One of our Jamaica missionaries, who had labored many years as a pastor in the United States, says that the physical characteristics of the two countries are not more different from each other than are the people and the kind of labor required of their pastors or religious teachers. Missionaries for such a field need to be well furnished men; meek as the man Moses, and persevering and unflinching as the apostle Paul.

It cannot but be regarded as a matter of fervent thanksgiving, that the dreadful scourge which has passed over the island did not find the congregations at our mission in a stupid and careless state. If it had done so, the effect might have been like what we have too often witnessed in our own country—the people hardening themselves, as Pharaoh did, under the judgments of Heaven.

The general prevalence of the cholera throughout the island rendered it impossible that the people in the more sparsely settled portions should enjoy the services of a physician; and in this emergency our missionaries were compelled to give medical advice, and in many instances to administer medicine with their own hands, This of course increased their labors, but it brought them into close contact with those who were sufferers, and gave them access to the ears and the hearts of their sympathizing friends. The policy of increasing rather than diminishing the frequency of their religious meetings, and their direct efforts for the salvation of souls seem to have been blessed of God, and numbers were thereby hopefully converted It is almost unexampled, that amidst the severity of their labors, and in a cholera atmosphere, their lives should have been preserved.

The course which the brethren of the mission were ultimately led to pursue, in relation to the errors that sprang up there, was such as commended itself to the friends of Christ in the island; and the confidence given to our missionaries and the general policy adopted by them was never more manifest than at the present time Several applications have been made to them by planters and their late people for the establishment of new stations, some of which were deemed important enough to warrant the sending a deputation from the mission to examine the locality, inquire nto the circumstances of the people, and report to the mission. In one instance, a house and a hundred acres of land for three years, with an abundance of bread-fruit and cocoa-nut trees, or the lease of twelve acres for twenty-one years, at the mere nominal price of one shilling per acre, has been offered them. In another instance they are promised the use of land for mission buildings rent free, pasturage for cattle and provision grounds, with all the buildings needed by the mission, for a term of years, and the payment of a part of the missionary's salary; and in still another instance, a deed of six acres of land and the temporary use of a building for mission purposes is held out as an inducement to our missionaries to commence a new station among a large and destitute population, apparently hungry for the bread of life.

The Executive Committee have approved of the unanimous recommendation of the mission, and authorized the establishment of one new station; and Mr. Olds will probably resign his place at Oberlin to remove there and commence the enterprise. The vacancy occasioned by the removal of Mr. O. will need to be speedily filled, and the Committee hope that an applicant whose request has just been laid before them will prove to be a suitable man for the place, and be ready to go out during the ensuing winter.

Teachers are wanted for some of the stations, and the Executive Committee will be glad to receive and consider the applications of any who may feel that God calls them to this kind of work.

The following scrap cut from the Colonial Standard, published in Jamaica, which was written by an English gentleman long resident on the island, will serve to show the estimation in which the labors of our missionaries are held:-

"There are in our mountains some earnest missionaries from America, who for eighty pounds a year devote themselves with great success to the work of preaching and teaching, and the promotion of industrial education. Can it be doubted that of that class are the teachers that the island needs? Five of their families can be supported on little more than the salary of one of our parish curates. It is by such an agency alone that we can hope eventually to overtake the necessities of the island. Supplied these necessities must be, sooner or later, or the island is lost."

FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Another gentleman, an American, who has spent many years in different parts of the West Indies, gives it as his decided opinion that the moral renovation of the people in Jamaica must be looked for, under God, in connection with the labors of American missionaries.

OJIBUE MISSION.

One Mission, three Stations.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams have retired from the mission, and Mr. Laferty has been added to it during the year.

A detailed report of this mission has not been received, hence we are able to add little to the statistics of the previous year. Two thousand seven hundred and thirty dollars and fifty-night cents have been received specially contributed in its behalf, and two thousand nine handred and seventy-two dollars and seventy-four cents have been expended for it.

The following facts give a brief history of the mission:—It is located in Minnesota Territory, on the head waters of the Mississippi river, from five hundred to six hundred miles north-west from the Falls of St. Anthony, and more than two thousand miles from the city of New-York. It was commenced under the patronage of the Western Evangelical Missionary Society, and has since been placed under our care. In 1843, even persons, male and female, established the mission, by opening two stations—one at Leech Lake, the head of one branch of the Mississippi, and the other at Red Lake, thirty miles north-west from the head of the north branch of the same river. The station at Leech Lake was relinquished in 1845, and in the following year one was commenced at Cass Lake. A new station was commenced at Lake Winnipeg in the summer of 1850. These are the only mission stations in that section of the country. There are now sixteen persons connected with them.

The Ojibus Indians form one of the largest tribes within the territory of the United States, being estimated to number about thirty thousand souls. They are divided into bands of from two hundred to a thousand persons in each. These bands are located from twenty-five to a hundred miles apart, each one having its home, its hunting ground, and its chief. When our mission was commenced, these Indians raised nothing, and were destitute of all domestic animals except dogs. They depended for subsistence upon hunting, fishing, wild rice and sugar. Being in a poor country for game, they often suffer with hunger, and many die from starvation.

Our missionaries were obliged to clear and cultivate their own land, saw their lumber, and build their own houses, preach the gospel, teach school, visit the sick, and aid the Indians in every possible way. The Indians, through their influence, example and aid, have been induced to cultivate the ground to a considerable extent. There is a farmer at each station connected with the mission, who aids them in clearing and ploughing the land.

A school has been established at each station. Some of the children can now read well in any book printed in their language. A church has been organized at Red Lake, which embraces ten native converts. Two have died who were members of that church, and died in the triumphs of faith. There have been some hopeful conversions also at Cass Lake.

At the earnest solicitation of some of the members of this mission, accompanied by representations of the strong desire of some of the neighboring bands of Indians to have new stations established among them, Rev. J. P. Bardwell has gone into the Ojibue country, with the intention of visiting some of the places named, and with authority to make arrangements preparatory to the extension of missionary operations. He took with him a year's supply, and was accompanied by Mr. Robert Laferty, of Ohio, recently appointed an assistant to that mission.

On his way up he met Dr. Lewis and his wife, of the Red Lake station, on their way to the States, where they expected to remain during the summer. Just before meeting with Mr. Bardwell, brother and sister Lewis were called upon to part with one of their children, who sickened and died on their journey from Red Lake. This brother and sister expect to return to their work this fall, and to take with them an assistant female missionary from Northern Ohio.

From the mission, our latest intelligence says that the dysentery has been very fatal among the Indians. At Red Lake, about one out of fifteen of the Indian population had died of this disease. Brother Wright, our only ordained missionary at that station, had lost two of his children from it.

Mr. Barnard wrote to Mr. Bardwell, April 16th, urging the importance of some new stations. He says:—

"The field is opening on both sides of us. I feel more and more encouraged to go forward. In order to meet the wants of the people of this country, we need many more laborers.

"The chief of Gull Lake (Hole-in-the-day) is very urgent to get a teacher; so much so, that he went himself to St. Paul, and spoke to the people in all the different meeting-houses, urging them to send his people a teacher, and he would appropriate funds from the annuity of his band to support him. On hearing this fact, and learning that no response had been given him, I wrote to him, inquiring whether he had found a teacher, and why he wanted one, &c. I felt that we should be verily guilty of the blood of that people if we held our peace at such a time as this, and let the enemy take the field. I have not yet heard from him. Gull Lake is just above the Crow Wing river. ["Hole-in-the-day" is a young man of very energetic character. His father was the most influential man in the nation.]

"An urgent appeal has just come from Pambina, the region beyond us. That whole tract of country is to be purchased this summer by our Government, and will, by its fertile soil, pleasant location and extended prairies, draw many hundreds of half-breed settlers from the British side of the line, which, in addition to the inhabitants now there, will make a large and important settlement.

"The trader there, Mr. Kittson, has recently sent to us, urging that our Society send men to establish a manual-labor boarding school there, and he will apply for an appropriation at the treaty next June to support it. He wants some one of us with whom he is somewhat acquainted. He is an American, and a very influential man. No doubt, there is a wide field of usefulness opening there. Shall we enter it? Who will go there, and who will come here to supply the place of the one who leaves? If an appropriation should be made by Government, it would not cost the Association much to support one family there. We consider that the most important field in this country. Besides the half-breeds, there are many Indians constantly there. No doubt, considerable help might be obtained from the Scotch settlement at Selkirk's colony to aid a mission there. Indeed, they told us when we were there, that if we were as near as Pambina, they could almost support us. So far as living is concerned, I should have no fears but that I could support my family there, even without any aid from the Association. Yet I think if one goes, the Society should send him. The important thing to consider is, the Call.

Is it from God? If so, let us attend to it, and go ahead, trusting in him for strength and wisdom to direct. If God's children do not occupy the field, Satan's will."

CANADA MISSION.

ST. CATHARINE'S. CANADA WEST... REV. HIRAM WILSON, and MRS. WILSON. AMHERSTBURG, C. W REV. DAVID HOTCHKISS, and Mrs. HOTCHKISS. MT. PLEASANT MISSION SCHOOL MISS SUSAN TEALL.

(MISS MARY A. TEALL is also receiving occasional aid from our Association, although her appointment was from the Baptist Free Mission Society. They have never pledged her a support.)

The amount received for this mission during the year is $1,144 47, and the expenditure $956 44, leaving in the treasury a balance sufficient to meet the pledges made to our missionaries there.

Since the date of our last report, Rev. Hiram Wilson and wife, Rev. David Hotchkiss and wife, and Miss Susan Teall, have received appointments as missionaries and teachers in Canada.

Mr. Wilson has removed from Dawn Mills, and is located at St. Catharine's, Niagara District. The connection which he formerly had with the British and American Institute at Dawn has terminated, and he is now devoting himself wholly to the missionary work, under the direction of the Executive Committee. Soon after the commencement of the year he visited several of the districts of Canada West, and thus enjoyed an opportunity of inquiring into the number, condition, and prospects of those who have fled into Canada since the enactment of the Fugitive Slave bill. Within three months from the time of its passage, it is supposed that not less than three thousand fugitives took refuge there. The emigration still continues, although in diminished numbers. Those who have thus been driven out from their homes generally reach Canada in a destitute condition, but it is gratifying to know that in many parts of the province a liberal spirit prevails in reference to them. In the Western District, the Home District, and the Niagara District, Mr. W. thinks the greater part of them find employment, and are likely to do well. There are occasional cases of suffering and distress, which require and receive not only sympathy but aid.

The following are extracts from Mr. Wilson's letters :--

"I have endeavored to adapt my services in this field to the necessities of the season and the pressing wants of the colored people, having special regard for the comfort and welfare of strangers recently from slavery, and those driven over in autumn last by the atrocious 'Fugitive Slave Law.' That law, so called, has done a direful work, not only in spreading terror amongst the colored people of the nominally free States, but in breaking up families and driving them in a desolate and forlorn condition to these northern shores, to encounter the rigor of a cold climate and an unusually severe winter. I have done what I could to mitigate the sufferings of these heart-broken poor, and have not labored in vain.

"Besides attending promptly to the wants of strangers, widows, orphans, &c., in large numbers, we have gladdened the hearts of several preachers of the gospel, by assisting them to clothing.

"A few days since a poor man just from slavery called on us, whose feet were in a shocking state, having been frozen about Christmas, on his way between Utica and Syracuse. He hardly dared speak to people, white or colored, lest he should be betrayed and taken back again to Maryland. His right foot was badly swollen and raw, and some of the bones had come out of his toes. We deeply sympathized with him, clothed him from head to foot, and procured for him proper medical aid. He was very grateful for what we had done for him, and gave us a brief history of himself and of his sufferings in slavery, which was truly affecting. While speaking of his poor father, who, fifteen years ago, was sold off to Georgia, to be seen by him no more; and of his sisters, fourteen in number, who were all victims of the horrible slave-trade, and carried off to the South to be for ever separated from him and from one another; and of his aged mother, who died six months ago in Maryland, supposed to be about one hundred years of age, he sobbed and wept freely. Poor, forlorn stranger! with tears he told my wife that he never yet had found a home on earth, but said he hoped by-and-by to find one in heaven."

Rev. Mr. Hotchkiss is stationed at Amherstburg, and his labors have been mostly confined to that place and its vicinity. In our last report it was stated, that while some of the many religious teachers among the colored people in Canada were intelligent and devoted Christians, there were others who substituted noise and rant, and harsh language, for Christianity. It has fallen to Mr. Hotchkiss' lot to meet with some of this class, and they have used every occasion to excite prejudice against him. The opposition he has thus been called upon to contend with has been very discouraging, but it is now yielding, and there are several places open to his labors where good congregations may be gathered. He will visit these places in succession, and besides preaching the gospel to the people will encourage and aid them in establishing schools for the young. His post-office address will still be Amherstburg, Canada West, Miss Susan Teall is connected with her sister, Miss Mary A. Teall, in the Mount Hope Mission School at Waterloo.

The colored people find more difficulty in purchasing lands in the neighborhood of Waterloo than in some other parts of Canada, and many of them have removed, or are about to remove, from there on this account. The number of scholars in the school has thereby been much diminished. Their teachers are very anxious to be able to take a number of children into their own family, so as to have the entire control of them for a series of years. They almost despair of doing them permanent good in any other way.

The annual statement concerning the school, from which the following extracts are taken, was written by Miss Mary Teall. She has received but little aid from our treasury, except such as was contributed directly for her benefit :-

"The past year has been one of unusual care, toil and suffering, both mental and physical. Our work for the colored people is almost done here, as they have nearly all moved away. There will not be over twenty scholars for the coming winter.

"Our winter school commenced November 15th, and continued till March 15th. The whole number of scholars was eighty, thirty of whom were colored. The average number in attendance was fifty. There have been nineteen conversions among the children of our school during the past year. Only two of them were of colored children. Both of these were interesting cases. One is that of the orphan girl of whom I wrote you before, who experienced religion during the revival last spring, and joined the Wesleyan Methodist Church with the rest of the converts. Her education was quite superior to that of most children of her age, and she bade fair to make a good Christian and teacher among her own people; but her grandmother, a poor, ignorant, and withal miserable creature, for fear that as wretched as herself, took her away, although she had no home to which to take her. She wandered about from place to place, trying to divert her grandchild from all good, and placing her in evil company and in the midst of temptation.

The other case of conversion is that of a youth of seventeen, a brother of M., a The other case or conversion is that of a youth of seventeen, a brother of m, a girl who lived with me one season, and who died in the triumphs of faith last June. He came here one evening with his mother, apparently in agony, for he had long been under deep conviction. He cried out: 'Pray for me; oh, pray for me!' We did pray and labor with him till he apparently passed from death unto life, and then he arose, and with tears thanked us for the kind instruction he had received.

Then I felt that my labor had not been in vain.

"Not long since I took a little colored girl, seven years old, who was given me by her father last year to bring up, to the funeral of J. B. V., the namesake of Mr. Brooks. When we returned, she asked: 'Why did Johnny's father kiss that dead body? Johnny is in heaven.' On the next Sabbath she inquired: 'Can't Johnny see us?'

"A person born and brought up in town, and always living there, can form but little idea of the state of things here. There are but two families here who are regular in their attendance at school, during all sorts of weather. One of these lives half a mile from here. The other is my own. We live but a few rods from the school-house. There is but little time during the year that the roads are dry; only five weeks this season. In winter many children have neither shoes nor clothes sufficiently weakly the road to be the school of t ficient to enable them to go to school.

"My Sabbath-school, which I have kept, with the exception of two Sabbaths, for nearly three years, is doubly interesting since the revival. Much seriousness is often manifested among the children and in the Bible-class. I am still of the same opinion as when I saw you, that it is utterly impossible to do the colored people any permanent good, unless the children are taken when young entirely away from the influence of the adults. Better, a thousand times better, would it have been if they had never heard of religion while installator."

In our last Annual Report the opinion was expressed that much of the clothing sent into Canada for general distribution among the colored population was productive of more evil than good, and the friends of the fugitive were urged not to send any, except to persons with whom they were personally acquainted or who were under the care of some responsible Missionary Society. The Baptist Convention of the State of New-York appointed a Committee to visit the Baptist colored churches in Canada, and report their condition. Their report has been published. The following are extracts from it:—

. "In the States there has been much said about the destitution and sufferings of the fugitives, and much has been done for their relief. This reported destitution and suffering we find has been greatly exaggerated. None need assistance of this kind but the aged and the sick.

"We found in all the places we visited that respectable colored people, in churches and out of churches, were united in their testimory that contributions of cloting and provisions, for distribution among the fugitives, except for the aged and the sick, would prove a curse rather than a blessing. All who are able and willing to work can supply their own necessities; and we rejoiced to learn that most of the colored people availed themselves of these advantages, and are doing well for themselves and their families. A few in the cities and villages are shiftless and indolent, and will probably continue so if benevolent friends in the States will continue to support them.

"We heard much complaint among the colored people in Canada of the want of responsible agencies there to receive and disburse things sent them by friends from abroad. They say that goods sent to Canada for distribution among the poor fugitives have never reached them, but have been converted into money or left to spoil. Some have been sold to colored, and some to white families, and some merchants have purchased to sell again. Some provisions, they say, instead of being distributed among the poor fugitives, have been left in the storehouse for months, and injured. A merchant in Detroit informed us that flour had been sent to his storehouse for fugitives, and left there until it became soured, when he was directed to ship it to Buffalo, and sell it for starch, at ten shillings per barrel! From all we could learn, we thought these complaints were too well founded. Contributions have been sent to strangers, or to persons from whom reports have not been required, and such has been the result.

"Another evil, of which we heard much complaint from the colored people, was the multiplicity of associations got up professedly for the benefit of the figitives, but really for their own emolument. The professed objects of these associations are various. One is organized for this and another for that, and each sends off a colored man into the States to collect money for the fugitives, most or all of which is divided among themselves. We were told of instances in which three or four men would club together, call themselves a society, make one of their number their agent, and when he had come into the States, and collected money for the poor fugitives, return to his society to divide among them the portion of his collections that did not belong to him for his agency."

Contributions of clothing, of a kind suitable to be used in preparing children for school, are much needed in some parts of the province, and would be gratefully received by our missionaries there. The Executive Committee would, however, discourage the sending of second-hand clothing into Canada for general distribution. Such gifts have no tendency to elevate the people, and the distribution of them causes a dissatisfaction and jealousy that greatly hinder the work of the missionary.

At a large convention of colored people held at Sandwich, Canada West, the following resolutions were passed:—

"Whereas, Fugitives from Southern slavery are flocking to Canada by scores, who are penniless, houseless, and among strangers, most of whom understand agricultural pursuits, but for want of a little pecuniary help to commence with are compelled to suffer for the necessaries of life; believing that the friends of humanity, not only in the United States but in England, Ireland and Scotland, stand ready and willing to help us, if some feasible plan could be properly brought before them: therefore

"Resolved. That we recommend to the people of color in Canada, as far as it may be practicable, to go into agricultural pursuits, as the most certain road to independence and self-elevation.

"Resolved, That this Society will aim to purchase thirty thousand acres of government land somewhere in the most suitable sections of Canada, where it can be obtained for the homeless refugees from Southern slavery to settle upon; and that said lands should never be given away, but sold to said persons at cost, and on such terms as to enable them to pay for it by their own industry."

Something of this kind is greatly needed. Wherever it has been tried, the fesults have been happy.

The increasing number of fugitives from American oppression now in Canada magnifies the importance of this mission, and the Executive Committee hope to be able to prosecute it with increased vigor another year. It must not be concealed from the patrons of the Association, that this mission is one of the most difficult and least promising of immediate results of any under their care. Upon a careful investigation of the causes of this difficulty, the Committee are constrained to believe that they have their origin in the oppression which the colored people have endured in the United States. As a people, in their native land, the Africans are remarkably confiding, and readily receive influences for good from the hands of the white. That after long years of suffering they should have become jealous of all influences coming from the class to which their oppressors belong is not to be wondered at, and should not discourage our labors for his temporal and eternal welfare. In the providence of God we have been called to engage in them, and every new revelation of their necessity should call forth renewed energy and devotion to the work. Let our prayers accompany our labors, and God will permit us to see his work prosper in our hands.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

MAKAWAO, EAST MAUI.-Missionaries, Rev. JONATHAN S. GREEN and Mrs. GREEN.

Although Mr. Green receives his support from the people to whom he ministers, he still retains his connection with our Association, and makes frequent reports to us. He wishes to have a responsible connection with those who are laboring for the overthrow of slavery and the purification of the Church in his native land, while they are giving the gospel of salvation to the destitute of the world. He desires to bear a constant testimony in favor of the distinctive features of our Association, and against the sins of oppression and caste. He says:—

"I regard it as a great privilege that I may thus communicate with you and our common friends and helpers in the work of missions, disconnected from the gains of slaveholding, something in relation to labors, trials, encouragements, and prospects at this remote post of Christian and missionary warfare; may tell you of our joys and sorrows; may sympathize with you in the labors in which you are engaged at home and abroad, and in the trials which are inseparable from the faithful discharge of duty; and may thus secure a share of your sympathy and cooperation in our labors and trials among the people of these islands."

The aid he has received from this country during the year reported has been confined to a few books and pamphlets sent him by us, while his people have raised sums much more than sufficient to pay for them, in behalf of the various objects of benevolence in which we are interested. In the account of benevolence, the people of this country are indebted to the poor Sandwich Islanders of Mr. Green's charge.

The proximity of California to the Sandwich Islands is working great changes among the inhabitants of the latter. Of these Mr. Green says:—

"I need not tell you that we are in the neighborhood of this El Dorado. I feel that we are quite near enough. But as we had no agency in locating the gold mines, and as we rejorce in the confident belief that God had a good and wise design in placing the gold in that country, it becomes our privilege as it is our duty to bow submissively to the Divine will, while we do all we can to educe good from what I cannot but regard as a great evil. If the discovery of the gold of California, human nature being what it is, does not prove a vial of God's wrath, poured upon our guilty country, and upon other lands, then I shall be mistaken. Indeed, has it not already proved to be thus? To how many has it proved the gate to the grave? Ah, would this were all! Has it not been the gate to perdition? For thousands of worlds would I not have a son or a brother go thither, in search of gold! I have not consented that my people should go, nor has a single individual whom I regarded as serious, enterprising, or hopeful gone; and I pray that none may think of going. Still, as I said, some good to this people has come of this last of gold; and by the blessing of God on sound instruction, watchfulness and prayer, more good may come, though the evils may greatly outweigh the blessing. Of this I may speak in another connection.

"The number of poor, drunken, licentious, and in other respects wicked foreigners who left the islands on hearing the report of gold, hastened to the mines, clutched the gold till their hands were filled, returned to San Francisco, exchanged their treasure for the intoxicating cup, drank and died, is very great. Such a list of names I could give you of men who went from Mani. The thought of the death of such men is dreadful; but the benefit to the people of their removal from the islands is surpassingly great."

The stimulus afforded to industry by the increased demand for the productions of the island Mr. Green hopes may tend to make the people permanently industrious. Long after Mr. Green went to Makawao, the King was the owner of the lands, and the people were regarded as mere tenants at will. Looking upon this as a system of oppression, Mr. G., with others, labored to secure for the people the liberty of purchasing the land in fee simple. This was effected, and furnished to the people some slight stimulus to industry. The additional stimulus of a good market is now given; but there is great reason to fear that the attendant evils may more than counteract the good. He says:—

"The rush to California has opened a source of wealth to the islands. There is a demand for almost every thing that the country will produce. Prices have risen greatly. Ships, brigs, schooners, and other craft have come down from California, rich in gold, and have bid high for produce. Speculators from Lahaina and other places have crowded into our neighborhood in search of provisions, especially the Irish potato. They have purchased at extravagant prices; some of the bids have been as high as from five to eight dollars per barrel. So eager have been these speculators to obtain this article, that they have purchased young and small potatoes, many hundred barrels of which have rotted on their way to California, and thus the gains of themen have been consumed. Still, these calls upon the people, and these extraordinary profits, have stimulated them to labor, and have made money exceedingly plenty; and if the people shall become permanently industrious, great will be the gain.

The solution of the problem of the continued existence of the Sandwich Island race is hastened by the California excitement, and Mr. Green fears to a fatal conclusion. He says:—

"The state of things is so peculiar, that I cannot but fear the utter and speedy ruin of the nation. Smitten with the love of gold, many a poor Sandwich Islander has raised all he could scrape together, has gone to the mines, and there laid his bones. Some few have done well, but the greater part that come back return poor and sickly, and with bad habits."

Again, the increased value that is given to the productions of the islands is bringing in a foreign population, before whom he fears the native islanders will fade away, as the Indians have before the settlers of this country. But the danger more to be feared than all others is, that professed Christians will become worldly and careless, dishonor God, and peril their own souls.

The Sandwich Islands are, however, destined, he thinks, to sustain a large population, and he is anxious that additional laborers should be sent there. The field occupied by Mr. Green embraces Hamakua, Makawao, and Kula. The former he describes as a place suitable for a missionary station; the land good, and the country well watered. The population is, bowever, diminishing. Kula, lying south of Makawao, along the base of the mountain of Maui, is the potato country of which he has spoken. Of this country he says:—

"On many accounts, no part of my field is more important than this. The land is good, the soil like an ash-horp, with much lava remaining. The whole country is cultivated, and chiefly with the Irish potato, which flourishes greatly, and commands high prices. A mission family is much needed, as the whole country is teeming with inhabitants, and multitudes are hastening hither to engage in the potato traffic. . I have four places for meetings in the district, which I design to visit about once a month. Makawao is central to the whole field, but it is not possible for me to do justice to all the people. There ought to be three churches in this field."

At a later date, he says two missionaries with their wives could find plenty to do, and would soon be sustained by the people.

Concerning the spiritual condition of his charge, Mr. G. says:-

"I am unable to report revivals of religion at the several stations; still I cannot but hope that souls are being converted by the agency of God's truth. While many who, in the season of intense excitement several years since, became hopefully renewed in the temper of their minds, but who were merely stony-ground hearers, are falling off one after another, the truly pious are growing in grace, and becoming more and mere confirmed in their attachment to the cause of the Son of God. Things are quiet and orderly, and knowledge increases as rapidly as we can reasonably expect."

He adds :-

"There is an interesting state of things among us, and it is my prayer that we may be visited with the gracious influences of the Spirit. Mr. Ii, who now labors at Huelo, in Hamakua, introduced some fifty serious inquirers, whom I addressed on Saturday. Others came forward, so that there was a large and apparently solemn company. Quite a number are from the Romanists—i. e., from among those who have been wild, and adhering to the Romanists."

SIAM MISSION.

BANGKOK, SIAM.—Missionaries, Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D.; Rev. L. B. Lane, M.D.; Prof. J. Silsby; Mrs. Bradley, Mrs. Lane, and Mrs. Silsby.—Total 6.

This company of missionaries, whose arrival at Singapore was mentioned in our last Annual Report, reached Bangkok about the 1st of June, 1850. Their reception by the missionaries of other Societies stationed there was most cordial. As soon as it was known that they had reached the river, they were met and welcomed by their brethren of the Presbyterian mission, who juvited them to make their homes with them until, with houses could be fully prepared for their reception.

Immediately after their arrival, Dr. Bradley resumed his labors in preaching and tract distribution. The other members of the mission, having to make an acquaint-ance with the Siamese language, were under the necessity of applying themselves to the study of it. A part of each day Dr. Bradley devoted to their instruction, in addition to which they secured the services of native Siamese teachers.

The first letters received from the missionaries after their arrival out, solicited an appropriation of five hundred dollars, for the specific purpose of publishing tracts and portions of the Scriptures in the Siamese language. In their letter they say:—

"The Siamese are a reading people. A large majority of the adults-some of the missionaries think nine tenths of them-are able to peruse our books, to obtain which numbers of them daily visit our houses; and, although many of them do not read the books which they get, and others who read them do not realize much instruction perhaps from them, yet large numbers of them do, and are found able to give an intelligent account of them to the missionaries. In this way the seeds of truth are being sown in many minds, and are germinating there; and it is felt that by the blessing of God they will in due time bring forth fruit to the glory of His great name. While, therefore, it is true that the results aimed at in missionary labors are not yet here realized in the conversion of many souls to God, it is perhaps equally true, that amongst a people like the Siamese, of considerable intelligence, and with a system of religion harmonizing to a great extent with their knowledge, the indications of advancement towards right views will, in very many important respects, be different from those events which followed the introduction of the gospel into the Sandwich Islands, though not less real, or ultimately less rapid. But with reference to this it is important for the Church at home to remember, that if great things are here expected, great things must also there be attempted. Siam is to be converted to God by that instrumentality which God has appointed, exerted too in the way and to the extent which he has appointed."

The Committee have complied with the wishes of the mission so far as to enable them to carry on their printing operations, and republish some of their tructs the editions of which had become exhausted. Many of these tracts were prepared by the late Rev. Jesse Caswell and Dr. Bradley, before they became connected with our Association.

The operations of the mission were greatly embarrassed during the first part of the year by the imprisonment of the Siamese who had acted as teachers to our missionaries, or assisted them in their printing operations. This was done immediately after the departure of Sir James Brooke from Bangkok, where he had labored unsuccessfully to negotiate a commercial treaty between the Government of England and that of Siam. During this attempt at negotiation, the King had learned that some of his people had instructed the foreigners not only in the common language of the kingdom, but also in the sacred character, and that some books had actually been published in that character. Great offense was taken at this, and before the departure of Sir James Brooke, threats were made that all the teachers of the missionaries should be seized and imprisoned immediately after he had gone. This was done, and for a time the missionaries found great difficulty in procuring even the domestic help they needed. They were required to furnish the Government with duplicate copies of all the books they had published in Siam, and the King and some of his chief men gave these books a careful examination. After a time the teachers were released, and some of them soon returned to their labors at the mission. The missionaries themselves were not molested in their work, and no governmental action was taken against them.

Dr. Lane and Professor Silsby have each made a missionary tcur into the country-Professor Silsby, after one of these tours, writes:—

"I was satisfied that many read our books with profit, and I met with some individuals that I do believe have thus become wise unto salvation. At Maklong, a town near the mouth of the second river above mentioned, I found an old lady who repeated parts of books which she had heard read, and among them the Lord's Prayer, although she could not read herself. Others evinced a similar acquaintance with our books, and came to us inquiring for a continuation of the Scriptures which they had received; for as yet they had obtained, as a general thing, but one or, two of the Gospels. Time, however, will not permit details. We feel much encouraged by what we witnessed upon this tour. The Word of God will accomplish that whereunto it is sent, and the leaven of its influence is gradually pervading the hearts of the Siamese; but you must remember the world does not contain a more compacted system of error to oppose the truth, than that which here exists.

The brethren of the mission all unite in recommending this kind of missionary labor.

Mrs. Lane's health has suffered very seriously during the past year; so much so that Dr. Lane felt constrained to leave Bangkok, and spend a few months at Singapore, to try the effect of such a change upon Mrs. Lane's health. The result was happy; she has recovered, and they have both returned again to Bangkok. Dr.
Lane strongly recommends the stationing of one missionary at Singapore.

The last letters received from Siam contain intelligence of the death of the late, King, and the coronation or inauguration of Prince Chou-fah Mongkut. Dr. Bradley writes:—

"All the Protestant missionaries of Bangkok, together with all others here who are regarded as being under European colors, were honored by a special invitation of his Majesty to attend his inauguration. No other mere spectators, not even of the Siamese, were allowed to be present. There never before had been any precedent of such an honor having been conferred upon 'white-faced foreigners.' . . .

"At this ceremony his Majesty addressed the European and American spectators. The purport of the address was, that he was happy to see us there gracing the ceremonies of his inauguration; that we were not like strangers to him, but old acquaintances and friends; that he wished our mutual friendship to be continued; and that he should feel himself happy in doing what he can to protect us in his kingdom, and give us freedom in our several avocations. It was gratifying to have him thus publicly testify his kind regards toward us. Immediately upon this he added that he had caused a dinner to be prepared for us, of which he would invite us all to partake after the audience should be dismissed. . We must not put our confidence in princes, but we may and ought to praise the Lord our God that he has placed Chou-fah Mongkut on the throne of this kingdom, and is inclining him to give us a kind of passport to the confidence of all this great people. . . .

"It is to me an interesting fact that the present King of Siam and his colleague have been for more than twenty years receiving various lessons on languages, science, government, and religion, from Protestant missionaries. Messrs, Gutzlaff, Tomlin, and Abeel were the first to give them these lessons. After these, Rev. J. T. Jones took an important part. After him, or rather in connection with him, others, together with myself, (Dr. Bradley,) lent them such aid. And last of all, the late Rev. Jesse Caswell, being specially called to the work by the invitation of his Royal Highness, entered into it thoroughly, as he was wont to do every thing else he undertook, and gave this Prince daily lessons, Sundays excepted, for a year. Mr. Caswell went daily more than two miles to the temple of the Prince, giving him a lesson of an hour, and spending about the same amount of time in a place near by in talking to the people and distributing tracts. This place was fitted up by the Prince especially for Mr. Caswell's convenience."

Mr. and Mrs. Silsby have been called to part with their younger son. He died of cholera the 26th of May, aged 2 years and 24 months. Mr. Silsby says, in reference to it: "Our hearts bleed, but it is our Father's hand. Pray for us that we may not be chastened in vain."

The Executive Committee cannot but rejoice in the favorable opening thus presented to our missionaries in Siam. Their long-continued prayers seem to be answered, and Siam now lies entirely open to the missionary of the cross to carry the gospel of life to every part of it.

The expenditures for the mission during the year bave been $5,978 46. This makes provision for the ordinary expenses of the mission up to July next.

HOME MISSIONS.

CITY MISSIONARY, REV. CHARLES B. RAY.

The seventh year of Mr. Ray's labors as City Missionary, among the destitute colored population of the city of New-York, terminated in May last. His report was then presented to the Executive Committee, and published by their order in pamphlet form, and distributed by Mr. Ray among the immediate patrons of his mission. The following extracts are taken from his report:—

"It has been my privilege to sustain the twofold relation of general missionary and pastor of a small church, which may be considered in part fruits of missionary efforts. Still, the members of the church and congregation are mainly made up from another class than those who strictly need missionary labors. Being sustained as a missionary, however, has enabled me to collect together this church and congregation, and to serve them as pastor. The church is congregational in its government, hence ecclesiastically independent of all other bodies. We worship in Convention Hall, 179 Wooster street; a fine locality, though not in the midst of a colored population."

"Besides the Sabbath services, I have been engaged in general visitation among those who most need and ought to receive the visits of some one, who should bring to them the gospel of Christ. These constitute a large class, to whom God's house and the gospel are strange things, many of whom are never in a condition to visit the sanctuaries of God, if they have the disposition. There is therefore no other way for them to have the gospel but by carrying it to them at their own homes, or wherever you may find them. In some sections of the city, large numbers of them are to be found in the streets; and deeply impressed that these should have the truth as it is in Christ presented and applied to their case, I have made them the object of my morning and evening walks on missionary labors. . . In this way I have preached to them the gospel of Christ, and pressed its claims on their attention as their only hope for a reformation in life; but especially as the hope of the soul for life and salvation hereafter."

Mr. Ray has also engaged in the distribution of the Bible, the circulation of religious tracts, and in endeavors to promote the religious education of the children. Among the results of his labors, he says:—

"While we have not witnessed the past year a special interest in religion among the unconverted, we have nevertheless had times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord among his children. Spiritual growth has been the experience of several members of the church, who have often testified to each other and to their pastor that their peace had never been so great, so uninterrupted, and so much like a river, as during this year. . . .

"Three persons have been added to the church during the year—two on profession of faith, and one by letter. Two others are under advisement to join, if they shall be approved, one of whom, we trust, has been recently converted, in connection with our religious services on the Sabbath. Of other cases of conversion during the year, I can speak positively of but one, a promising young girl, who was brought to Christ on her sick-bed. She has since departed this life in peace and hope."

The church now numbers thirty-seven persons. His visits to the Colored Home on Thursday of each week have been continued. At these visits the inmates are called together for Divine service, and he has preached the gospel to them. Of this institution he says:—

"Few institutions of the kind are oftener favored with the refreshings of Divine grace. Many go there desperately wicked, and go thence to the avocations of life new creatures in Christ, or depart this life in glorious hope of heaven."

Concerning his field of labor, Mr. R. says :-

"We have here a colored population of about twenty thousand, who depend almost entirely for their religious privileges upon their own brethren; few, indeed, are found attending upon the means of grace elsewhere. . . . We have in our possession seven houses of worship, which will inclusively sent about four thousand six hundred persons. Besides these, we now occupy five halls, in all of which can be seated not to exceed nine hundred persons. We have therefore church-room for five thousand five hundred persons. If we make a reasonable allowance for children too young to attend religious worship, we shall still have probably a population of ten thousand who may be considered as having no place to sit down in and hear the gospel. Take the best view we may of this case, it must be admitted that here is a field for religious effort larger than the one under cultivation; a field as ripe for the harvest as any, and which the gospel would benefit as much as any other. Surely these facts urge to increased efforts to extend the gospel, to multiply places of worship rather than diminish them. It is in view of this state of things that I have been impelled, even amid many discouragements, to do what I could to bring some of this multitude in some way under the influence of the gospel. I shall continue to labor, hoping in God for still greater success."

Mr. Ray makes the following summary of his labor for the year :-

"I have held 261 religious meetings; have preached 170 sermons and lectures; distributed 12,000 pages of tracts; distributed 35 copies of the Holy Scriptures; attended 13 funerals, baptized 10 children, and administered the Lord's Supper 13 times. Two persons have been hopefully converted, three additions made to the church, and 69 children gathered into the Sabbath-school."

This mission has now passed from under the care of the Association, and become independent. The following is from Mr. Ray's report:—

"Hitherto I have acted in the missionary department under the supervision first of the Union Missionary Society, and more recently under the American Missionary Association, which took the place of the former. This relation was sought by me on entering upon this work mainly as a recommendation to the public, comparatively unknown as I then was. As I am now so well known, and have-many friends, and having always virtually been thrown upon what I could collect for a support, this relation is deemed no longer necessary, and at my request, the Committee concurring therein, it will cease. I shall continue to labor in this field as heretofore, acting in all good conscience before God and man. And while I shall aim not to do or accomplish less, I shall hope even to accomplish more, at least for the church I have gathered, which seems to require more of my attention; in doing which I may ultimately be doing a greater good."

Mr. Ray collected last year for his own support $706.50, and for the expenses of the church $103. H

Mr. Fee, of Kentucky, continues to labor with the two churches organized by him in Lewis and Bracken counties. The following are extracts from his report:—

"The churches to which I minister are known as 'Free Christian churches,' thereby marking the distinction between the slaveholding churches and themselves. They are strictly independent in their church polity. . . .

"The number added to the two churches on profession of their faith during the last year is ten. We have as yet received but one or two persons from other churches in this State by letter. Several of the neighboring churches have refused to grant letters to applicants when it was known that they wished to transfer their membership to us. We therefore receive nearly all our members on profession of their faith.

"That the sphere of influence and usefulness is enlarging daily we have no doubt. I am preaching in four different places in Lewis county, and in three in Bracken county, and have invitations to go to two more. We need more laborers.

"Daily observation and experience teach us that, with the blessing of God, a free, pure and full anti-slavery gospel can be preached in the South by meek, kind, prayerful, faithful and persevering men. Fiery zeal against slavery, with coarse epithets and vulgar abuse, will not succeed. There must be that deep feeling of love to God, and love to man, which shows that the preacher does not oppose slavery because he hates the slaveholder and wishes to thwart his purposes, but because he desires to save his soul from hell, as well as to free and bless the slave. Nothing but Christ's tender love, his meek and unostentatious action, will suffice. The spirit that uept over Jerusalem will conquer. . . A friend, who has recently travelled over eighty of the counties of the State, says there will soon be anti-slavery churches in every part of it. There is a growing opinion that it is inconsistent for Christians to fellowship that which they admit to be wrong."

The church in Bracken county is yet small. It numbers thirteen members. A school-house is occupied as a place for worship.

"During the last year we have been making efforts to build church edifices, one in each of the two counties in which I labor. The churches in each voted that the houses should be equally free to all persons. This is designed to show to all, that in our houses they may have equal rights, equal chances and encouragements to hear the gospel of impartial love; that thus, by example as well as precept, we may put down the spirit and practice of caste. Opposition to this movement is strong. It is harder to reit men to act against caste than against slaveholding. We are anxious to build upon this principle, because we believe the thing opposed is contrary to the spirit and precepts of the gospel. To build up a religion of oppression and caste would be to spread a false religion; a religion that would deceive souls, dishonor God, and curse mankind. What will be the responsibility and communition of those churches and Mission Boards which are building up and sustaining a religion that sanctions both slaveholding and caste; and what the guilf of those who, with light before their eyes, aid them in so doing! May not our good be evil spoken of."

In Bracken county the church is endeavoring to build a plain brick house, at a cost of about $600. They need aid to the amount of one hundred dollars from abroad. Mr. Fee says:—

"There is money somewhere in God's treasury for such a work as this. I am sure that He approves of it. We have means enough to inclose the house, but not to finish it... May the Lord give us favor in the sight of his people, as he did Nehemiah in the eyes of the King of Persia, when he desired to arise and build."

Since commencing to build in Bracken county, the school-house in Lewis county, in which the church there worshipped, has been burned down. It was the work of an incendiary. A new house will now be needed by that church.

Mr. Fee is frequently called upon to lecture on the subject of slavery, and is greatly encouraged by the attentive hearing given to him on these occasions.

New-Mexico.—Mr. Kephart, whose appointment to a mission to New-Mexico was announced in the last Annual Report, reached Santa Fé on the 14th of November last, after a journey of two months across the plains. His journey was made pleasant by the courtesies he received from Judge Brown, the owner of the train in company with which he travelled. Upon his arrival he was warmly welcomed by Rev. Mr. Nicholson and his wife, of the Methodist Mission, who had passed him on the route, and by Rev. Mr. Reed and wife, Baptists, who had been about two years in Santa Fé. Mr. Reed held the office of Chaplain in that part of the United States Army that was stationed there. There was thus a company of three Protestant ministers gathered together in that city, to cheer each other's hearts and cooperate with each other in the propagation of the gospel.

Both of these newly-arrived missionaries were received with great cordiality by the officers of the army and of government, and by the American population generally. Many of them expressed great anxiety to see a better state of things in Santa Fé, and professed a willingness to afford the missionaries every assistance "consistent with their own relations."

On the Sabbath after their arrival Mr. Kephart and Mr. Nicholson joined in the observance of the first communion season that had ever been celebrated by Protestants in Santa Fé. The rules of the Baptist Clurch prevented Mr. Reed from administering that ordinance to the few Christians who were there.

The moral condition of Sadta F6, and the territory generally, is described as most deplorable. The debasing sin of prostitution is most prevalent. Fathers and mothers are found selling their own daughters, while yet mere children, for the vilest of purposes. In his most recent letters Mr. K. refers again to this. He says:—

"I have heretofore written of the extreme licentiousness of the people. I think there is no sin upon earth that has so debasing and hardening an influence upon a people. Notwithstanding all I have written on this subject, you cannot have even a shadowy conception of the reality." He then adds that the example of the Romish priesthood is such that women feel encouraged to offer themselves as mistresses to every professed minister of Christ.

Another and very serious obstacle in the way of an American missionary, is that the people of New-Mexico are a conquered people. Concerning this he says:—

"I have every reason to believe that like all such they secretly hate the Americans, and would gladly avail themselves of the opportunity to throw off the yoke.

"We live upon a volcano which, but for the continual parade of arms, would burst at almost any moment, leaving its terrible scoria of human sculls and running streams of blood. There is but little room to doubt that there are many disaffected Mexicans who would at any time form a coalition with the savages against us, did they believe that thus combined they would be strong enough to rout our army. The course of many Americans toward the Mexican population is calculated greatly to increase this feeling."

The determination of slavery propagandists to exclude from the territory every thing that is likely to stand in the way of the introduction of slavery into New-Mexico, is another great obstacle in the way of the faithful ambassador of Christ. When it became known that Mr. K. regarded slaveholding as a sin, and would treat it as any other sin, he was waited on by an influential slaveholder, who with great apparent solicitude endeavored to persuade him to be entirely silent on the subject. Finding this unsuccessful, intimidations were resorted to, with what success can be learned from Mr. K.'s report of the interview:—

"'Then,' said he, 'the mob will be upon you; they are talking of taking you out and inflicting violence upon you.' I told him I did not covet a martyr's fate, but I hoped I should not shrink from it, if it became necessary to bear it in the line of duty; that I knew my rights as an American citizen and a man, and I knew how to maintain them; that I never yet had surrendered any one of those rights at the dictation of a mob, and I never would do so but with my life. He then told me that 'they were willing to pay my expenses back to the States, if I would leave.' I replied that I felt very thankful to the gentlemen who had so generously and largely drawn upon their own resources, or were willing to do so, for my benefit; but I could not think of taking such an advantage of a generous impulse. 'Well, said he, 'you must take your own course then, and abide the consequences.' I told him I should certainly take the liberty to do so, though I felt much obliged to him for his deep interest in my behalf; and here we parted. I have heard nothing further from the mob."

The kind of opposition with which he is called to meet may be learned from the following statement of Mr. K.:—

"They will hedge up my way by every possible device, so as to prevent me from making a survey of the country, and finding out its agricultural, manufacturing and mineral advantages. They will send their forerunners in every direction, to every point, to prepare the way before me by hedging it up. The more wealthy of the Mexicans—the peon-holders—can be easily persuaded that the same agency that would abolish slavery would also abolish peonage, and I believe that they are about as stubbornly bent upon the perpetuation of that system as the slaveholders are in regard to this. Taking all these things into consideration, I sometimes feel as if it were a bootless expenditure of my time and your money longer to stay here, and am very much inclined to return home; but the thought recurs, 'Who then will be left here to lift up his voice for freedom? Not one!' and I cannot bear the idea of giving up the field so. I have, however, felt it to be duty to give a plain statement of the facts in the case."

When entreaties and threats of intimidation failed either to induce Mr. Kephart to preach a gospel tolerating slavery, or to leave the field, the undermining process was resorted to. The attempt was made to deprive him of a place in which to preach; and when this failed, exertions were put forth to prevent the attendance of hearers. This for a time promised success, but the providence of God opened a way for the promulgation of truth through the press, and he is now likely to be able to reach more minds than he could have done by preaching only.

In the prosecution of his work, Mr. K. became much interested in the Pueblo Indians. He thinks they will compare very favorably with the Mexicans in intelligence, industry, and a desire to improve their condition. He says:—

"There is no man, I presume, of intelligence, acquainted with the facts, who will not be forced to acknowledge that the Pueblo Indians are among the better portion of the New-Mexican population. They are more intelligent, more industrious and economical, as harmless and inoffensive, and far more virtuous than the mass of the Mexicans; superior to them in almost every element essential to the character of a good citizen."

Some of them are very anxious to obtain the New Testament, (in Spanish,) and read it readily when it is furnished to them. Concerning them he states the following facts:—

"One morning I took a few Testaments and tracts to a store for the purpose of sending them with a gentleman who is about opening a new store in a distant village. Just as I laid down the books a Pueble came in, and coming forward with some eagerness, he asked me if those were Testaments. I told him they were, and handed him one to see if he could read, (for I do not give them to those who cannot.) I found he read very well, and gave him a Testament and a few tracts; for which he made a great demonstration of thankfulness. A merchant here says, that he could oftentimes get a mule for a Testament."

Mr. K. fears that these Indians, and the Navajoes, are doomed to destruction, unless the providence of God interferes to prevent the design of the supporters of slavery. The reason for this is thus stated:—

"With that native love of freedom which burns in the bosom of an Indian like the yell fires of his own Monteauma, there is no hope that the Pueblos can ever be won over to the support of a system which even the untutored savage seldom practics, but from motives of revenge. If admitted to citizenship, they might prove a troublesome element, when it shall be thought advisable to form a State Constitution. And yet if, with all this gross injustice and outrage, the poor Indian grows a little restive, and shows an unlovely spirit, nothing but annihilation is a fit reward for is ingratitude.

"The Navajoes have a pleasant vineyard, (for they are the best agriculturists in the Territory,) that we would like very much to cultivate. The slaveholder has been there and looked upon their luxuriant corn-fields, and the golden beauty of their wheat-fields, and has made his calculations upon the profits those fields would yield if cultivated by his slaves. We have Ahab's covetousness without the redeeming trait of his generosity, for he would have paid almost any price for the vineyard of Naboth and have taken peaceable possession, but he wouldn't sell out. We make no such offer, but get up a Jesebel pretext of extermination, that we may curse that fair free soil with the grouns and tears of slavery. This diabolical deed is deemed necessary for the security of slavery here, and it will be done if it can possibly be accomplished."

In no other country do our missionaries meet with opposition so stubborn as this; in none do they meet with obstacles greater than slivery, and the determination to extend and perpetuate its existence, afford to the progress of religious truth. Our North American Indians, even those who adhere to their pagan rites, welcome the missionary of the cross, because of the temporal blessings he brings with him. The King of Siam gives a cordial welcome to the minister of Jeeus, and volunteers the promise of protection, although he knows well his opposition to the superstitutions of is religious creed. The savage princes of Africa invite the institutions of religion, although they are seen to be at war with their oppressions, their slavery, their blood-thirsty revenge, and their favorite vices. But the determined slaveholder in New-Mexico will, if possible, drive out all the institutions of science and religion, unless they can be made to strengthen his cherished system.

Although the immediate prospect of successful results in his efforts to preach Christ in New-Mexico are so unpromising, Mr. K. still desires to be retained there until the experiment is fully tried. He hopes that fairer prospects will open, when, by a better acquaintance with the language of the country, he is able to get more direct access to the native population. In these hopes the Executive Committee unite, and they will, if Providence favors, retain him there.

The whole number of Home missionaries who have received aid directly from the treasury of the parent society during any portion of the last year is 23. Of this number but 17 are now under appointment from us, one having deceased, and the commissions of five others having expired. Some of these now receive aid through the W. H. and F. M. Association, and others derive their support wholly from the people to whom they minister. The expenditures for Home Missions, exclusive of those for New-Mexico, have been $2,632 96.

Owing to the absence of the Corresponding Secretary of the W. H. and F. M. A. from Cincinnati, a detailed report of the operations of that auxiliary has not been received by us. The number of home missionaries commissioned by them is believed to be 20. Their acknowledged receipts have been $3,718 91. After deducting agency expenses, and the expense of sustaining their paper, the balance of funds received by them has been appropriated in the home field.

It will thus be seen that the whole number of missionaries aided by this society and its auxiliaries is about double that of the preceding year; and the amount expended has increased in the same ratio.

In the Annual Reports of preceding years the Committee have urged the importance of Home Missions, and of their being conducted on pure gospel principles. To receive the oppressor of the poor, him that "reproacheth his Maker," into the Church of Jesus Christ as a brother beloved, one walking orderly according to the ordinances of His house, we regard as anti-gospel in its spirit and tendency; hence we cannot aid an individual missionary, or fraternize with a missionary body, whose principles or whose practice declare that slaveholding is no barrier to Christian communion and church fellowship. The developments of the past year have deepened our convictions of the importance of securing for our own country a ministry that will not strike hands with the oppressor; that will declare the whole counsel of God, and require of candidates for admission to church fellowship that they break every yoke, and let the oppressed go free. We rejoice therefore that we have been enabled nearly to double the number of our missionaries during the last year, and in the prospect of a large increase in that upon which we are now to enter. A sanctifled and faithful ministry is, under God, the only hope for the salvation of our own country, and an essential condition to our giving a pure gospel to the heathen. The churches of the United States are rapidly awaking to the importance of the work of Foreign Missions. The gospel that they give to the heathen will be the gospel they themselves have received. If it allows of the abominations of slavery at home it will abroad, and practically will make Jesus Christ the minister of sin by encouraging the idea that men may be saved in their sins. So far then as the hope of the world depends on our land, it depends on the existence of a sanctified and enlightened ministry at home; one that can rightly divide the word of truth, and discern between the righteous and the wicked; between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not.

COLPORTEUR AND SLAVES' BIBLE FUND.

The Executive Committee regret their inability to report progress in this department of their labors during the past year. There has been contributed to the fund $164-21, but it still remains in our treasury, as the Committee have not been able since Mr. Haines retired from the work, to secure the services of a suitable man to undertake the self-denying and arduous duty of a Bible colporteur among the slaves, They are still anxious to secure the services of one or more for this work, as their past experience proves that in suitable hands it is a practicable one, and that the Christian Church will supply the means for prosecuting it to any possible extent. Negotiations for the employment of natives of Kentucky in this work are in progress. If they succeed, timely notice will be given in the American Missionary.

AUXILIARIES AND FRIENDLY BODIES.

"The Penobscot (Maine) County Missionary Association" is among the oldest and most efficient of our auxiliaries. Its fourth annual meeting was held at Bangor, Maine, in February last. The following are among the resolutions passed at that time:—

"Resolved, That the friends of the American Missionary Association have abun dant cause for gratitude, and encouragement to labor in the field of their allot ment and choice, because of the openings for their efforts God has made for them, and the success he has vouchsafed to those efforts—especially for the hopeful state of their mission in Africa, showing that Ethiopia is already 'stretching forth her hands a unto God.'

"Resolved, That the success of missionary labors cannot depend on maintaining Christian union and sympathy with men who hold 'the image of God' as property, and their brethrein in servile subjection; that, on the contrary, we believe the gospel must fail of its high triumphs among heathen nations, unless it goes forth, emancipated, to proclaim the Scripture brotherhood of all men—liberty to captives—the opening of prisons to all unrighteously bound.

"Resolved, That we refer all who have doubted the safety and expediency of missionaries brigging the gospel into direct conflict with the social evils of the countries to which they are sent, to the history of the Mendian Mission, and the recent developments on the Big Boom river in Africa."

The Free Synod of Cincinnati is, in its missionary operations, auxiliary to our Association. This Synod was formed about four years ago, embracing oleven ministers and twelve churches. They are now increased to three times that number. The constitution of this church is wholly reformatory. Its framers, believing intemperance and slavery to be sins against God, exclude from their communion slaveholders and drunkards, and all who willingly, directly or indirectly, countenance and support them.

At a meeting of this Synod held in April last, they issued a Delaration and Testimony against the Fugitive Slave Law. Their deep abhorence of the system of American slavery, and the spirit with which they mean to labor for its overthrow, may be learned from the following extracts taken from their Declaration:—

"We testify against and declare unceasing hostility to the system of American slavery, which has not only enslaved the Government of the country, and dictated its public policy, but which has also subjugated the Church, filled the hearts of many of her mainsters with cowardice and treason, seared the consciences and blinded the eyes of a majority of her members, and carried her far on the downward week treatile a newtone.

"In the great struggle in which we are engaged, of vindicating the religion of Jesus Christ from the foul slander that it tolerates, authorizes and justifies the diabolical system of American slavery and its counterpart the Fugitive Slave Law, we extend the hand of confidence and fellowship to those other denominations of Christians in the United States which laws adopted our principles, and are aiming at the same object; and we express the earnest hope that the bonds which unite us together in this noble work may become stronger and stronger, until our real unity shall show itself to the world in our visible unity."

The Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association, the formation of which was noticed in our last report, held an annual meeting in Cleveland in October last. The address issued and the resolutions adopted show that they have taken their stand on solid ground.

The necessity of our Free Mission movement is thus stated by them :-

"1. In the first place, it is needed to give exercise and currency to a portion of the missionary spirit of the Church, which would be utterly dormant and inoperative without just such a channel for it to flow in as our Society opens. There is a growing opposition in the Church to holding religious fellowship, in any form, with slave-holders. This is a feeling which cannot be suppressed, because it is the result, not of bigotry or bitterness, but of sober, conscientious conviction—of benevolence and true piety. Many of the earliest and warnest friends of missions have consequently been fast losing their interest in missions which hold fellowship with slavery. A missionary movement free from such contamination became therefore necessary to secure their aid to the generial cause, and to save their own piety from the deterioration which it would inevitably suffer by giving way to a spirit of apathy to all missions. This would have become a serious evil in the Church, had not this new missionary movement come in time to the rescue.

"2. In the second place, it is happily calculated to counteract the prevailing spirit of sectarian alienation in the Church—a spirit which mars its moral beauty and moral influence. Coöperation in labors of love is found to be one of the best remedies for this spirit, which has unhappily divided the flock of Christ. Such coöperation draws their sympathies together in one common channel. The Tract and Bible Societies have done a noble service to the Church in this way. And the perfection of what these institutions have so nobly begun, seems to require a similar coöperation, too, in the missionary work, to furnish an additional bond of sympathy and union. The principles of our organization are peculiarly favorable to Christian union. They constitute the strongest conceivable bond of union.

"3. In the third place, our movement is needed to save the holy cause of evangelization from a polluting connection with sin. That clause in our Constitution which provides that the Society 'shall not contribute its funds to missionaries or clurrches who support, countenance, or tolerate slavery, polygamy, caste, or other popular immoralities,' was not inserted there without occasion. The purified Church of the future will read this distinctive characteristic of our movement with astonishment, as it will reveal to them the fact that other missionary organizations did support, countenance, or tolerate these polluting abominations in their connection. Our movement owes its origin to the fact that existing organizations were found giving the countenance and support of religious fellowship to all these vices, and that, too, after years of earnest remonstrance on the part of the advocates of an uncorrupted Christianity."

The hopeless condition of the oppressed, when the religious sanction is given to the oppressor, is thus stated:—

"We utter the deep conviction of our oppressed hearts, when we say, that the most cruel enemy to the down-trodden of our country, is the church or the missionary board, which, while it is held in high esteem for its labors of love, invites the oppressor to sit with it in heavenly places, and thus gives the sanction of its holy fellowship to his cruelty. This religious sanction is the right arm of his power. Without it there is no power on earth that could sustain him against the withering influence of the free principles of our country. This is the painful aspect of the subject that commands our earnest solicitude, and that impels us on in our free mission movement. The groans of three millions of our countrymen-many of them brethren in Christ, as well as brethren in the flesh-crushed by the strong arm of the Church's moral power, send up appeals to our hearts which we cannot resist. How can we look quietly on and see the beneficent power which is carrying salvation to dying men, at the same time unwittingly strengthening the hands of the oppressor, and rendering more secure his grasp upon his bleeding victim? How can we refrain from beseeching our brethren to spare his lacerated body and imprisoned soul the cruel inflictions which their very beneficence is laying upon him? What we ask of them is, to withhold the sanctions of religion from cruel wrong and polluting sins; while they are 'doing a great work for Christ,' not to do a work of like magnitude for Satan; while they are Christianizing the heathen in other lands, not to brutalize and heathenize millions of their own countrymen."

A Christian Anti-Slavery Convention was held at Chicago, Illinois, commencing July 3. Members from eleven different States enrolled their names, and the Convention was organized after the passage of the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That this is designed to be a Christian Convention, in spirit and action, and should be conducted as a religious convocation, attending to the business of the Redeemer's kingdom."

Able reports were made by Committees on several subjects committed to them.

Among these reports were the following:—

"On the connection of the churches with slavery through their Home Missionary operations.

"On the connection of the churches with slavery through their communion and church fellowship.

"On the connection of the churches with slavery through their Foreign Missionary operations."

The first of these reports was presented in the form of a series of resolutions, from which the following are taken:—

"2. That Home Missions generally in this country have heretofore been conducted upon the principle that the members of the churches planted and aided may hold slaves; and that consequently the members of Home Mission churches actually have held and do hold slaves in all parts of the country where slaveholding is permitted by law.

"3. That in the judgment of this Convention, churches whose members are permitted to hold slaves are a source of corruption to the gospel of Christ, for the simple reason that professing to teach and represent the religion of Christ, they do actually teach only religious sentiments and observances, omitting that 'judgment' or 'justice' which is among the 'weightier matters of the law,' and that 'righteousness' which is the basis of the 'kingdom of God.'

"5. That without sitting in judgment upon the motives of the men who have hitherto managed Home Missions, and without denying or depreciating the good which has been done, or claiming perfection for ourselves, it is the object and intention of this Convention to labor and pray for the casting out of slavery from Home Missions in this country.

"6. That for this purpose a committee be appointed to ascertain as accurately as may be done, in the course of the year ensuing, the number of slaveholding Home Mission churches of all denominations in this country; the number of alaves owned by the members of said churches; and generally the statistics of slaveholding Home Missions in this country; and report the same to a future Convention as a basis of further action."

The second of the above-named Committees concluded their very able report as follows:—

"The Committee regret that the little time at command prevents a more elaborate and well-ordered report, and especially that we are prevented from entering into an examination of the teachings of the Scriptures upon these points, because in this, as in all other moral questions, the Word of God is the ultimate guide and authority.

"We will confine ourselves to presenting a single point, with which, however, we believe the whole instruction of the Bible is in strictest harmony.

"We are commanded to withdraw ourselves from every 'brother that walketh disorderly;' and nothing is more plain than that if a church, persistently, and after remonstrance, refuses to put away a disorderly member, that church herself walketh disorderly, and should herself be withdrawn from.

"This narrows the whole discussion to a single point. Is the slaveholder walking disorderly? Is it disorderly or not, to crush out of a man the image of God, and change him into a brute, a 'chattel personal,' a thing? Is it walking disorderly or not, to annihilate the first, and originally the most precious institution of God on earth, the family, and reduce men and women to the condition of a herd of cattle?

"Is it walking disorderly or not, to extort from our fellow-man, through life, and without requital, the earnings of his industry?

"Is it walking disorderly or not, to refuse to our brother man all true knowledge of the Word of God, to blind his eye so that he cannot perceive the way to the cross, and for our own selfish purposes not only crush all his hopes for this world, but ruin his soul for eyer!

"Is a brother walking orderly, according to the practice and in the spirit of Jesus, when he walks through blood and tears, shed by his own injustice and cruelty, and over the scarred bodies, the crushed rights, the blighted hopes, and ruined souls of men i

"If these things are disorderly, then the command of the apostle, and of Christ through him, is explicit: from such an one we must withdraw; and if our church sanctions the disorderly walk, the Scriptures are equally clear: 'Come out from among them.'

The report of the Committee on Foreign Missions also sustains fully the position assumed by this Society in relation to the exclusion of slaveholders from the Church of God.

Other smaller Conventions of Christians have been held in different parts of the country, and affirmed the same principles.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

The monthly circulation of this paper is now about 13,500 copies. As heretofore, it is sent to every donor to the Society's funds who wishes to receive it; and at the request of any donor it will be sent for a limited time to any person who is so far interested in the Society's operations as to be willing to pay the postage and read the paper. Thus far it has proved to be a valuable agency in the collection of funds, and the most economical one in our employ. Great numbers have thereby become deeply interested in our missions, and contribute to our funds. The Committee recommend its general circulation as a means of enlarging the income of the Association.

During the illness of the Corresponding Secretary last autumn, Mrs. Sarah J. Davis, of Boston, at the invitation of a member of the Executive Committee, came to New-York and remained there, giving very valuable aid in the operations of the Society, until the Secretary was able to enter upon the full discharge of his duties. Her general supervision of the American Missionary, and the communications which she wrote for that paper, gave to it an increasing interest, and we have no doubt raised up for it some very valuable friends. Her assistance in providing the outfit of the female missionaries who sailed for Africa last winter, and the counsel which she gave, was such as none other could have rendered at that time. She declined receiving any compensation for her valuable services, and the Executive Committee with entire unanimity entered the following resolution on its minutes:—

"Resolved, That the thanks of this Committee be presented to Mrs. Sarah J. Davis, for the services rendered by her to the American Missionary Association and to its missionaries during her abode in this city."

CASTE

Without having indulged a doubt as to the correctness of their principles, the Executive Committee have been gratified in being able to publish, from the Missionary Herald, the "Minute of the Madras Conference on the subject of Caste." In this document the Conference say:—

"Caste is one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of the gospel in India. It meets and thwarfs the missionary, not only in bearing the unsearchable riches of Christ to the unconverted Hindoos, but in building up the native Church in faith and love. This has been painfully felt in Southern India, wherever natives, at their baptism, have been permitted to retain it. In such cases experience has shown for more than a century that this evil, so far from melting away under the genial influences of the gospel, possesses the most inveterate tendency to perpetuate itself, thereby stunting the growth of congregations and enfeebling the aggressive energies of the native Church.

"Of late years the evils of caste have been better understood than formerly, and largely exposed. The eyes of Christians in India have been opened to discern much of its true nature, and the conviction is constantly deepening in their minds that to tolerate it in any form is to oppose the law of Christ. Practical cases of a very painful nature have arisen at Madras and in the South—cases which have constrained the Madras Missionary Conference to turn their attention to the consideration of this subject; and so fully has this Conference been impressed by the developments of the system, that they feel it to be their duty to lift up their united testimony against it. In doing this, they desire with devout gratitude to praise the great Head of the Church for the unanimity of sentiment on this subject which He has been pleased to give to his servants of so many different denominations as are represented in this Conference. They feel encouraged to hope that the time is not far distant when every missionary of the Cross will become so impressed with the heathenish nature of the evil as no longer to give the least toleration to it."

And again:-

"The Madras Missionary Conference would most gladly dismiss the subject which has now been before them, were it not for the painful circumstance that some even of their missionary brethren in India are to be found still tolerating castes in their churches. To these brethren they feel it to be their solemn duty, in faithfulness and love, to declare their caure disapproval of such a course of procedure."

This paper was signed by forty-three missionaries connected with different missionary bodies, and of different religious denominations. The Church missionaries, and those that belong to the Gospel Propagation Society, about fifty-five in number, signed a similar document, and the Missionary Conference in Calcutta agree with the views expressed.

These are the views presented by the formers of our organization at Albany, in the fall of 1846, just four years before the date of the paper from which we copy this document. If the missionaries of India had always held and enforced these views, the missionary churches would have been saved the painful necessity which has since fallen upon them of cutting off scores of members and catechists for their adhesion to this sin.

The action of these missionaries is gratifying, not so much because it is an endorsement of views previously held by us, as because it is an enforcement of the truth where it is most needed in practice. Your Committee carnestly pray for the speedy, coming of the time when all missionaries, every where, will use similar language in relation to slavery and all other sins.

CONCLUSION.

In the maintenance of our principles we are not called upon to decide the question whether all possible slaveholding is sin, nor whether every man that for any supposable cause holds the legal relation of a slaveholder to his fellow-man thereby excludes himself from the kingdom of Christ. With his secret motive we have nothing to do, nor are we called upon to assign a character to a possible slaveholding. Slavery, and especially American slavery, is known and read of all men. With its character only have we to do. Is it from above, or from beneath? This question decided, and our duty, as we conceive, is clear. If from above, then all we have to do with it as Christians is to seek its preservation and prevent its abuse; if from beneath, as we verily believe, then the man who engages in its support, who perpetuates its existence, who joins hands in enforcing its enactments, who participates in its responsibilities and its privileges, walks disorderly, and should be withdrawn from, should be excluded from the Church of God. This is our position. It is Bible ground, and we cannot recede from it without apostasy from Christ.

In concluding the report of their labors for another year, the Executive Committee feel constrained to renew their acknowledgments of the Divine favor. The necessity of withdrawing support from some in whom, up to the commencement of the year, they had had entire confidence, and whose labors in times past have undoubtedly been blessed to the promotion of the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom; and the loss, by death, of three missionaries in whom high hopes had been placed, are indeed afflictive providences, long to be remembered with sadness, and forcibly teaching us to cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils. Mercies have, however, been largely mingled with these judgments. The number of foreign missionaries sent out has been greater than in any previous year. The number of our home missionaries has nearly doubled. The increase in the receipts of the Society is larger than ever before: the added number of life members greater; and the reports received from our foreign missions especially show that the churches under their care are in a prosperous condition, that many of their members are growing in grace, and that through the Divine blessing souls have been converted to Christ. These are matters of devout thanksgiving, and call for the earnest gratitude of our hearts. They do more; they strengthen our hands and encourage our hearts to undertake a greater work and hope for a richer blessing in the service of Him who suffered on Calvary for us, who died on the cross that we might have life, and who now calls upon us to show to the heathen world the salvation of which we have tasted. The work he has given his Church to do is yet undone. The whitening fields are multiplying before us; the cries of the heathen world are becoming more importunate than ever. In the five years that have passed since the formation of our Society, more than one hundred millions of them have passed beyond our reach; in five years more another hundred millions will have followed them. The blessing of God has been given to our efforts, the favor of many of his chosen ones has been given to our work. It is Christ's voice calling upon us to work in his vineyard; it is his call to do with our might what our hands find to do.

JOHN XX, 21,

"Then said Jesus unto them again, Peace be with you; as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

I have before me a difficult if not dangerous task. I wish, in the present discourse, to speak of the errors and faults of American churches and American Mission Boards, and I wish neither to be, nor to seem to be, the enemy of either. Not because I wish to spare the errors and sins of my brethren or my own; but because I believe that the churches, all imperfect as they are, contain the light of the world and the salt of the earth.

Yet, as the Bible faithfully records the sins and errors of God's children, so I believe that great and radical faults, if they exist in the churches, should be pointed out, in love to Christ and fidelity to his children, though to do it aright, I am aware, requires a spirit wiser and holier than mine. I shall attempt to discharge the duty, relying upon the Spirit of God.

AMERICAS MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION,

Christ was sent to turn men from their sinful practices, by correcting their principles and changing their hearts. The beginning of his preaching was, "Repent." Both his harbinger and himself required repentance as prerequisite to entering the "kingdom of heaven then at hand;" and with both of them repentance included renunciation of the sins repented of.

The mission of Christ's disciples in this world is to continue and complete that of himself. It is to "save his people from their sins." For this was the errand of Christ, and as the Father sent him into the world, even so hath he sent us.

At this day, at least before this audience. I need not stop to argue that a slaveholding church, continuing such, can never fulfil this mission of Christ; in other words. that slaveholding is not of the kingdom of God. For the property-holding of men and women includes in the principle of it, and tends to generate in practice, all the elements of vice, and crime, and sin. So far as the man-owner cherishes the spirit of this system, so far most men see and say that he is vicious. So far forth as he enforces his property-power over his innocent fellow-man, he sets aside justice, and practices crime. And the very claim of complete, exclusive property jurisdiction and control over a human being is direct infringement upon and sin against God, who hath said, in a meaning which is certainly invaded by slaveholding, "All souls are mine." A slaveholding church, therefore, inviting worldly men to join it to be saved from their sins, while it cherishes and permits a practice which, as Dr. Beecher has shown," violates every precept of the Decalogue, is like inviting men into the sea that they may escape being drowned! A slaveholding church, therefore, does not accomplish the mission of Christ. It is not and cannot be part of his kingdom, which is "righteousness."

The American Missionary Association does not differ from the people of the city which now entertains it, nor indeed from sober and enlightened men every where, in its condemnation of slavery. Multitudes, even of those who regard abolitionists as fanatics, nor as inctured with fanaticism, yet hope that slavery will melt away before the gospel, and by this hope confess their opinion that a slaveholding church must cease to be such, before it can accompilish the mission of Christ.

For what purpose then has the American Missionary Association been formed? Upon what necessity is it founded, and what is its peculiar end and use? Can it justify the attention it has attracted? Will it retain the large and hourly increasing confidence it has received? Or is it like the cone of the summer whirlwind, a thing of heat, and air, and dust; a shape thrown up by the gusts of anti-slavery excitement, and which must vanish when the breeze that raised it ceases to blow?

To answer these questions, (and they must be answered, for they will be asked,) we must know not only the principle of its formation, but the necessity out of which it grew; not only what it is, but why? True, the duty of this Association is not to assail the existence of other societies, but to vindicate its own; but this work in itself includes a statement of its principles, pretensions and promises, compared with other similar organizations. Let us not then be deemed the enemies of those other organizations, some of which are justly venerated for the time they have stood, the ability with which they have been conducted, and the good of which God has made them the instruments. My object in respect to them is not to get away their funds, but their sins. Surely I am not acting as an enemy to other missionary or church organizations, if humbly and in a proper spirit I seek to show upon what principles they must be conducted if they would accomplish the mission of Christ. It is in such a spirit I hope to allude to other organizations. And surely it should be permitted us to examine with freedom, since it is only by so doing that we can hope to learn how to act aright.

Let us glames hastily at the history of slavery in the American churches, that we may learn wisdom from experience and study principles in the light of facts.

Slaveholding has existed in the Christian churches of this country some two hundred and fifty years, yet many would have us hope that the gospel as heretofore administered will undermine and expel it. For almost this entire period of two centuries and a half the slavery question has been more or less agitated in the churches; yet many oppose the adoption of a rule excluding it, upon a plea of ignorance and that the subject is not yet understood! The first slaves brought to New-England were ordered to be sent back by the General Court. In 1791, President Edwards taught that "While you hold negroes in slavery you do exceeding wrong, and that in a higher degree than if you committed common robbery or theft." In 1794, John Wesley denounced slaveholding as covering the slaveholder and all his possessions "with blood;" and made ordinary slaveholding from the ordinary motives a disciplinable offense. In 1818, the Presbyterian General Assembly declared "the voluntary enslayement of one part of mankind by another an atrocious violation of the most precious rights of human nature, utterly inconsistent with the gospel of Christ." In 1831, the Synod of Cincinnati, then the leading and most learned body of Protestants in the whole western country, declared slaveholding to be "a heinous sin and scandal; calling, like other sins, for the discipline of the Church;" and appointed a day of fasting and prayer for the removal of slavery from the Church and country. This was a full year before the New-England Anti-slavery Society was formed in Boston by Garrison, Buffum, and others. In 1835, the same Synod of Cincinnati, of which Drs. Beecher, Wilson, Stowe, Baxter, Dickinson, Rev. Mr. Brainerd, of Philadelphia, and others, were then members, refused a Rev. Mr. Harrison leave to labor in one of their churches, "because he is known to be guilty of holding human beings in slavery." And in 1845 the New School branch of the same Synod suspended William Graham from the ministry for teaching that Jesus Christ has "authorized" slaveholding " in the charter of the Church and in all the laws He ever made for its regulation." There is not an orthodox Presbytery or Congregational Association, out of the dave States and west of the Alleghany mountains, which has not, within the last fifteen years, passed resolutions more or less stringent against slaveholding; and east of the mountains, most of the State Congregational Associations have been deeply agitated by their corresponding connection with those ecclesiastical bodies which tolerate slaveholding; and multitudes of individual churches, and some of the lesser ecclesiastical organizations, have spontaneously and without any concerted general movement declared against receiving slaveholders to their pulpits or communion tables; while many of the lesser sects and denominations, as the Covenanters, Seceders, Associate Reformed, United Brethren, Albrights, Friend Quakers, and more recently Freewill Baptists, Wesleyans and others, have excluded slaveholders from fellowship, habitually and by rule.

All these are but a small portion of the declarations of opinion and means of enlightenment enjoyed by the American churches on the subject of slavery. If ignorance of the subject is still a good reason for delaying the adoption of a rule excluding slaveholding from church fellowship, it is difficult to foresee when it will cease to be so. Every thing has been said and done but the one thing needful, which is to exclude slaveholding from the church and mission organizations in this country, and thus strip slavery of its religious respectability. Deprive it of its shelter in the Church of Christ, and, in the words of Albert Barnes, "There is no power out of the Church which could sustain slavery an hour..."

Yet by a singular and melancholy delusion, while many are pleading "imperfect knowledge" and "practical difficulties" against excluding slaveholding from the Church; and while the Secretaries of our older Mission Boards, Home and Foreign, are still asking that "the churches" may take further action against slaveholding, before they and their Committees are called upon to exclude it from their operations, thousands of sincere souls, who are to-day in ecclesiastical fellowship with the sin, are hugging the error that the slavery agitations have already put the evil in a process of removal, and that it will soon perish from their churches and boards!

Let us see how this matter stands. Let us see whether slavery is increasing or diminishing upon the hands of the American churches. For if it be true that we are gradually getting rid of slavery, we certainly ought to be patient; for though nothing but an immediate abandonment of sin satisfies the theory of morals, there is gradualism in their application and enforcement. Are the churches freeing themselves from slavery or not?

While Romanists and some nominally Protestant churches, which are like the Papists in their government and forms, having no discipline, but systematically and on principle omitting from their gospel "the weightier matters of the law," are agitated by nothing but their own trifling sectarian concerns, those churches which concern themselves about the morals of the people are agitated by all moral questions.

It is estimated that members and ministers of Protestant churches own six hundred thousand American slaves. In the slavery agitations of the last fifteen years, the three leading Protestant denominations have split asunder: to wit, the Prebyterians, Methodists and Baptists. In each case, though other questions mingled in the discussions, yet slavery caused the division. And it is remarkable that in each of these three cases, the slaveholders excinded or withdrew from the abolitionists, and not the abolitionists from the slaveholders! Yet there are pious souls who sigh over the church-rending propensities of abolitionists, who have no reproofs for their Southern brethren upon the same head.

It is also remarkable that the spirit which presides over and guards the fortunes of American slavery has so managed these rendings of the three great American Protestant denominations, as to keep slaveholding in fellowship in all the fragments! Singular enough; three denominations split upon the subject of slavery, yet keep in each half of their riven churches the very thing which divided them! So that slavery has now six large church organizations instead of three!! The wounded bear is said to hug closer the spear which enters her heart; but here are churches hugging the curse that consumes them!

It is true that in the division of the Baptist General Missionary Convention the support of the slaveholding missions was assigned to the Southern section, but the leaders and officers of both the Northern and Southern divisions of the Baptists fraternize as before, and no rule is adopted by the Northern body excluding slaveholders from fellowship!

Thus, while thousands of sincere Christians are blinded by these divisions into the belief that somehow slavery is to suffer by them, in each of the three instances slavery stimulated and slaveholders effected the division, and the result is six large organizations in which slaveholding is fellowshipped, instead of three! And as one half of these have a northern location and some anti-slavery reputation, they wield an influence in favor of slavery ten thousand times stronger and more disastrous than the united bodies did before the divisions took place!

The Presbyterian schism took place in 1837–8. The Old School branch has now fifty slaveholding Presbyteries, more than one third of its whole number. This large body since 1836 has not swerved from its protection and support of slave-holding, but rests on its report adopted at Cincinnati, in 1845, "That it cannot condemn slaveholding as sin, without condemning the course of Christ and the apostles"

The New School Assembly, at its first separate meeting in 1838, was followed by but three slaveholding commissioners, and there was fervent prayer and strong hope that this might become an anti-slavery body. But once separate from the Old School and seized by the natural desire for denominational success, it has steadily increased its slaveholding wing, till it has now twenty slaveholding Presbyteries, between one and two bundred ministers, and from fifteen to twenty thousand members in the slave States, all walking in Christian fellowship with slaveholders! This Assembly meets next year in Washington city.

Until 1845 the great mass of Methodists in this country belonged to one denomination, the Methodist Episcopal Church; and preachers and members of that order now own some more than two hundred thousand slaves. In the year 1846, a secession movement was made by Southern Methodists, who met at Louisville, and formed the Methodist Episcopal Church South. And thousands of pious Northern Methodists suppose that since the division their Church is getting free from slavery. So far is this from true, that on the contrary, the Methodist Church North has already about one fifth part as many slaveholding societies as the entire Church South! It reports in the slave States three Annual Conferences, 857 preachers, and 86.627 members, all in actual and full fellowship with slaveholding.

In the Baptist division, which was completed the same year, (1845,) more deference was paid to the wishes of those who desired a Christianity which was free from slavery. As their general organization was a missionary organization, in the partition which took place, the slaveholding-missions were assigned, or fell rather to the Southern organization, while the two bodies fraternize as before, and neither have any rule against slaveholding fellowship.

Thus, through the craft of the slave-power and the compliance of prominent men in the churches, the spirit which guards American slavery has severed each of the three great American Protestant denominations in twain, and yet in every instance has so managed the schism that not one body of them all is secured to a free Christianity, but the result of the whole is that slavery has the moral and religious protection of six large bodies instead of three; and one half of the six Northern bodies, with more or less of anti-slavery reputation, to blind their own members and reconcile them to a slaveholding fellowship!

In the department of missions proper, the case stands as bad or worse for freedom as in the denominational organizations.

The A. B. C. F. M., which is the leading Mission Board of this country, after more than thirteen years' agitation of the subject, has settled down (so far as organizations can be settled upon error) upon the principle of allowing slaveholders free access to and unmolested fellowship in its mission churches in the Cherokee and Choctaw nations; and the Board endorses the character and course of its missionaries while so doing.

The American Home Missionary Society in 1842 aided nineteen churches, and in 1850 the same Society aided sixty churches, in slave States. This year, 1851, the number aided there is fifty-six. During the intervening period the whole preaching force of this Society has increased about one fifth. And this Home Society, like the Foreign Board, has no rule or custom against slavery, but allows slaveholders to unite with its churches wherever it has churches in States which permit slavery by their laws. So far as my information extends, all its churches in the slave States have slaveholding members. And so far as the Society is concerned, all its churches may receive slaveholders, whether in slave States or free.

Thus the American Home Missionary Society, in these years of anti-slavery church agitation, has increased its slaveholding dependencies faster than its free, in the proportion of ten to one!! This surely does not look like diminishing or getting rid of slavery!

The missions of our Methodist and Old School Presbyterian brethren are ecclesiastical missions, and are of course all conducted upon the principle of slaveholding fellowship; while the Romish and Protestant Episcopal churches are not agitated by such questions as that of human freedom and bondage, their members doing, in these respects, like the rest of the world.

This extensive prevalence of slaveholding, and its vast increase even, in American churches and missions, grievous as it is, is less alarming than the doctrines by which it is sought to be justified. An abuse may be cured, but a false principle is a perpetual fountain of abuses.

The American Board is understood to rest on the doctrines of its report made by a large and influential committee, and adopted at Brooklyn in 1845. The language of said report bearing on the present subject is this:—

"May not the master and slave, the ruler and the subject, giving such evidence of spiritual renovation, be all gathered into the same fold of Christ?" (the Church;)

"Under such influences may not the master be prepared to break the bonds of the slave, and the oppressive ruler to dispense justice to the subject, and the proud Brahmin fraternally to embrace the man of low caste?" etc., etc.

The same report declares that the missionaries among the Choctaws and Cherokees, in receiving slaveholders to their churches, make no objection to slaveholding. and the Board repeatedly endorse the missionaries' character and course,

The doctrine of this leading Mission Board then is, to receive slaveholding and caste to fellowship in their mission churches, trusting to the ameliorating influences of the gospel to do them away. And the American Home Missionary Society's practice is based upon the same principle. For this Society-requiring its missionaries to report their progress against the evil of dram-drinking, while it cheerfully aids an increasing number of churches which are known to receive and retain in fellowship the evil of slaveholding, by many deemed worse-proclaims that it deems slaveholding not a sin to be abandoned, but an evil to be mitigated · and corrected by the general influence of Christianity.

Such are the relations of our leading church and mission organizations to slavery. And long and earnest prayer, argument, and remonstrance having failed to change them, and as discussion has revealed to the world that slavery lodges securely in them, it is plain as any moral fact can be made, that till these organizations cast out slavery, every shilling given to their funds is given to a body which supports and propagates a slaveholding religion, and gives religious respectability to slavery as truly as if every such shilling was paid to purchase certificates of church-standing for slaveholders, signed by the secretaries of the mission boards, and countersigned by the pastors whose churches support them!

It is plain, therefore, that no way remained for those who believe slaveholding, caste, and kindred corruptions ought to be and must be excluded from the churches of Christ, but either to acquiesce in a course which, it seemed to them, would entail these evils upon the Church for ever, or to form an association to plant the gospel in this and foreign lands free from slavery, caste, and kindred abominations. They therefore formed such a Society in the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, which, as shown by its Reports, has received, during the few years of its existence, large and yearly increasing evidence that it is regarded with favor by God and by multitudes of his people. I believe that its founders will yet rank among the special benefactors of mankind.

But the views of the men who originated the American Missionary Association were by no means limited to the founding and administering a single missionary organization. Their object is to divorce Christ's religion from despotism-American Christianity from American slavery. What they wish is, to see the property-holding of the human species placed among disallowed practices, cast out of Christian fellowship, and stripped of that moral and religious respectability which it derives from sitting at the communion table with the followers of Christ. And they wish this, not merely to carry a point in controversy, but because they sincerely believe that God never intended one man to be the property of another, but that owning men, women, and children as property is as clearly against the constitution of society ordained by God as polygamy or incest.

The Association therefore holds no hostile or menacing attitude toward other mission boards or church organizations, but only against their practice of sheltering and protecting sin. Fully believing in the truth of its own principles, it hopes soon to see them adopted and acted upon, not only by other mission boards, but by all evangelical churches in this country; the number of those churches which exclude slaveholding being already great and rapidly increasing.

Let us therefore consider, briefly, this slavery-excluding principle, noticing some of the objections made to it, and some considerations in its favor.

I. It is said God tolerated sin, especially the sin of polygamy, in the ancient church, on account of men's blindness and hardness of heart; that "the Mosaic institutions, received directly from God, had this principle incorporated in them."

The answer is: The principle of the Mosaic code is obviously and mischievously perverted to the protection of a slaveholding church fellowship. But whatever Moses did or did not teach, we know that Christ taught morals, especially the morality of human relations, as they were from the beginning, and we are to follow Christ. And surely it must be said of the property-holding of men, as Christ said of divorce at the husband's will, and taking another wife while the first lives: "From the beginning it was not so." Slaveholding should therefore be cast out of Christ's Church, along with divorce at will.

II. It is said again, "that while the facts of the Scriptures were being enacted, idolatry and slavery were universally practised, and that idolatry is and by name denounced, while slavery is not. From this it is argued that we should condemn idolatry and tolerate slavery."

To this there are several answers, and either answer is sufficient.

1. Idolatry is a generic sin, of which there were and are many species, as the worship of Baal, Ashtaroth, and the worship of the groves. But slaveholding is a species whose genus is oppression; merely one of many forms of despotism. Oppression is denounced as idolatry is, (Ex. xxii. 21, etc.,) and slaveholding is denounced fully as much as some specific forms of idolatry, (Neh. v. 5, and Jer. xxxiv. 17; 1 Tim. i. 10, etc., etc.) A despotic prince is a civil ruler as well as despot. Slaveholding is unmixed despotism. The slaveholder's title to his slave is a thief's title to a stolen man. His authority is mere usurpation of power, without warrant in nature, or reason, or Scripture. The civil despot might cease to oppress and still be a ruler; but the man-owner cannot lay down his property-claim to his man and still be a slaveholder. A civil despot should therefore be reformed; a slaveholder

2. Again: The Bible does not denounce slavery so much as it denounces idolatry, because slavery did not need so much denouncing as idolatry did to make men hate it and see its sinfulness. And it is a principle in God's administration not to do for men what men will do for themselves.

The Bible does not denounce things in simple proportion to their wickedness. Whoever will count the words may see that the commandment which forbids idolatry takes just twenty-five times the space in the Decalogue of the precept against murder; and the like proportions run through the Bible. Is therefore murder twenty-five times less criminal than idolatry? So the command forbidding Sabbathbreaking takes twenty-four times the space of that which forbids theft. Is Sabbathbreaking then twenty-four times more criminal than stealing !

No. God denounces practices in proportion as denunciation is needed to show the candid that the practice is a sin; and he denounces slavery less than idolatry, because men will always denounce it more. For wherever a slave is held, there are two men at least who have the means of knowing it is wrong, viz., the owner and the owned. Slaveholding therefore always has been hated and denounced, as murder and theft have. But idolatry, invading directly no one but God, required for that reason a more ample and specific denunciation.

III. Further, it is said: "God by Moses permitted his chosen people to own slaves; therefore slave-owning is not sin, and ought not, as sin, to be cast out of the Church."

The answer is: God did not permit the Hebrews to own slaves. The Hebrew bondmen and bondmaids were not property. When bought of the heathen, and brought over the lines into Judea, they became Hebrews by circumcision, (Gen. xvii. 13,) and thus entitled to the privileges of God's covenant. They had access to the courts, could plead and be impleaded. The law bore alike on their masters and themselves. They had, by law, exemption from servile labor during the Sabbaths and solemn festivals which constituted nearly one fourth of each year. And during this ample leisure they had by law instructions in the oracles of God. To call these Hebrew bondmen slaves, therefore, is to speak in simple contradiction of the facts. For the slave is property. He has no legal existence, no rights, no remedy for his wrongs, no access to courts,* no country, no legal kindred, no wife, husband, brother, sister, son, daughter, land, goods, body, soul even; nothing is his in the sense of being at his dwn disposal legally, and regarded his as in the case of other men.

Moses found human society a despotism the world a prison, and mankind situated like convicts under keepers. His own tribe were forced to make brick without straw, not because inferior as persons, but weaker as a clan. The weak were everywhere victims. The father or master had power of life and death over the son or servant, and the social condition of woman was that of a squaw in an American forest; she was a beast of burden.

In this world-prison Moses set up a community, the freest and most equal the world ever saw. The importial and unsalaried Ruler was God. The taxes, strictly for governmental and educational uses, were a fixed proportion of each man's gains. "One manner of law" ruled foreigner and native. A regularly recurring bankrupt law brought at fixed intervals a release of debts. While this law equalized property, it operated fairly, as all business transactions were made in view of it. The law courts were held in the city gates where the poor went out to labor. All had access to the judges. The proceedings were summary, and the remedy immediate. There was at first no standing army, no military, naval, or pension list. And when, afterward, a king was permitted, he was forbidden to accumulate chariots and horses, by which he might intimidate and enslave his people, or vast sums of money to corrupt them, or to multiply wives to deprave himself and his court. His office was elective; his subjects called "his brethren;" and he was to rule according to the laws, (Deut., chap, xvii.) And, to crown the whole, this singular, sacred community and type of the kingdom of God was made, by a divine commandment, a safe harbor for the fugitive slaves of the surrounding nations, (Deut. xxiii. 15.)

In this wonderful community the Hebrew bondman was a sort of manual-labor student in the school of God; and the bond-service itself soon expired by its own legal limitation, leaving the laborers of Palestine all free in a world whose laborers are states as the laborers in our Southern States are slaves in a Christendom whose laborers are free! The Mosaic system was light in a world of darkness, while our slavery is a spot of darkness in a world of light! To call the Hebrew bondmen slaves, therefore, and quote Moses' system as a precedent and cover for slavery in American churches, is a most astonishing complication of errors. It denies history, perverts Scripture, quotes an ancient system of legal bond-service with gradual emancipation, to cover a modern, perpetual, property despotism; in short, it falsifies and belies God to degrade and enslave men!

IV. "But Christ and the apostles," it is said, "received slaveholders to fellowship, communed with them, did not denounce them, but prescribed their duties as church members; and we, under their example, have no right to cast them out of the Church."

The answer to this, as to the former objection, is, that its alleged facts are not true.

Christ saw no slavery. There was none in Judea, where he lived and labored. He said nothing of it, as he said nothing of the harems then existing in Persia. He also founded no churches.

The question is, Did his apostles set up slaveholding churches? Were the New Testament churches, like those in our slave States, made up of slaveholders, nonslaveholders, and slaves?

It is certainly difficult to believe that they were. It is difficult to believe that Christ's apostles, who were Jews, abolitionists by nation, and harborers of fugitive slaves by a divine mandate, when converted to Christianity, a freer system still, set up churches upon a "perfect law of liberty," in which the elders and descons were alayeholders! It is difficult to believe that the apostles, who had obtained a special decision from Christ himself, that the marriage tie was indissoluble except for adultery, immediately set up churches in his name and upon his word, and allowed slavery in them, which denies marriage to slaves and damages it to masters! It is difficult to believe that they founded "the kingdom of God" upon "righteousness," vet allowed slavery in it, which confounds and reverses all the common obvious. fundamental principles of "righteousness" between man and man. It is difficult to believe that such slaveholding churches, even amid Greek and Roman despotism, could have been long attractive to the poor as the first churches were; or that churches, with slavery in them, which in this country and the nineteenth century allow the mass of society where they are planted to relapse toward paganism, could have brought men from Paganism to Christianity in the first century, and in Asia Minor. No: I never can believe that the Christian Church, which even in this backslidden age makes slavery uneasy by the Holy Spirit in its members, could have introduced and allowed slavery in its communion, when its assembled membership by the same Spirit was blazing all over with tongues of fire!

Yet, however difficult to believe, if true, we must believe it. Let us therefore see how the argument stands,

The argument relied on to prove that the New Testament churches were slaveholding churches, is succinctly this:—

"That the churches planted by the apostles outside Judea were in slaveholding countries; that the Greek terms translated 'master' and 'servant,' mean 'slaveholder' and 'slave,' that the apostles speak of and to these as members of their churches; enjoin duties upon them as members to be done in the Church; exhort servants under the yoke' to 'count their own masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed; and that 'they that have believing masters should not despise them because they are brethren, but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved," etc., etc. This, so far as I am informed, is all the proof relied on that the New Testament churches were slaveholding bodies, unless it be the authority of writers whose opinions are founded upon the evidence given above.

Upon this argument I observe:

1. It is all inferential. No early Christian appears in the New Testament fecord claiming, buying, selling, or owning a slave or slaves, or exercising any act or right of ownership. The only approach to any thing of the kind is where Paul sends back Onesimus to Philemon with his apostolic injunction "not now to receive him as a servant, but as a brother beloved;" and it is held by writers that Onesimus was received as a brother, and soon became Bishop of Ephesus. There is certainly no slaveholding in this transaction. Nor is there any direct proof that any one member of any one of the New Testament churches ever claimed or exercised the rights of a slaveholder in a single instance. The supposed proof that there were slaveholders in those churches is purely inferential.

2. And the answer to this inferential proof is this: It may be that in the act of joining the Christians, the heathen slaveholder and his slave ceased to be such, and became a Christian master and servant, and equal brethren in the Church. It may be, therefore, that our English translators were right in calling them 'masters' and servants, while they call the persons who were articles of traffic in mystic Babylon 'slaves,' (see Rev. xviii. 13.) It may be that the 'servants under the yoke' whom the apostle exharts to obey and serve their masters, 'that the name of God and his gospel be not blasphemed, were converted slaves, whose owners were still heathen, and they must still obey them or rebel against Rome and die; and if they refused to serve their heathen owners because they were Christians, those owners would think their religion a trick to get their liberty, and blaspheme the gospel in consequence. It may be that those who had believing masters, (that is, when owners and slaves both joined the Church.) actually ceased to be slaves, and became men when they crossed the lines into the kingdom of God, as a slave becomes free when his master voluntarily comes with him into a free State; and that the apostles exhorted such not to 'despise' their former masters because they were now brethren, but to continue to work for them, as the masters would now 'give 'them what was 'just and equal' (Col. iv. 1,) and because they were equal brethren, partakers of the common benefit' as God's children. It may be that when the apostle says to a converted slave, Art thou called, being a servant I care not for it; but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather,' he meant to teach what his words plainly mean, that slavery was to be endured as a grievance, and got rid of if possible; and if he did teach that, no brother could "give his servant what was just and equal" while he held him in that grievous state. In short, it may be that the New Testament churches were not slaveholding churches, and that learned men have fallen into the error of supposing they were so, by attaching modern ideas to ancient texts. But surely, before men make Christ and his apostles the propagators of a slaveholding Christianity, they ought to prove that there were slaveholders in their churches claiming the rights and exercising the power of owners of men!

Now let us see what argument there is to prove that the New Testament churches were not slaveholding churches. And,

1. It is inferentially evident they were not slaveholding churches, because if they had been, as slave increase outruns free, the churches, like the petty States and communities of antiquity, would have soon been full, running over, and finally run down by their slaves. But as the slaves who joined the first churches soon disappear from history, and no convulsions are recorded capable of emancipating them, the inference is that they became free on entering the churches, and by degrees were elevated and melted into the mass of members.

2. But the Christian Constitution expressly abolishes slavery, in terms more explicit than the "Bill of Rights" in the Constitution of Massachusetts, by which the judges held that slavery was abolished in that State.

The constitution of Christianity is the Jewish constitution as amended by Christ.
Under that constitution, that is, in Christ Jesus, "there is neither bond nor free."

I know that it is said these words have only a spiritual meaning, and that they

I know that it is said these words have only a spiritual meaning, and that they drew no practical consequences after them. And it is true that the meaning was primarily spiritual, and meant that God made no distinctions of nation, tribe, condition, or sex, in bestowing salvation. But I know also that the outward distinctions which Jews and Pagans had before made among men perished and fell off when they entered the Christian Church; so that literally and socially, as well as spiritually, there was among the Christians no Greek nor Jew, circumcision or uncircumcision, "Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free." Even the Jewish distinction of male and female was dropped by the Christians, so that the wife became the equal companion of the husband, who was yet her "head." The pious females, like the males had their names enrolled in the churches, and one at least, viz., Phebe of Cenchrea, became a messenger and deaconess of the church. In every instance of the above list an outward change actually took place in the Christian's condition, unless the "bond and free" were an exception. But they were not an exception. Neither the Mosaic bond-service nor the slavery of the heathens was introduced and allowed in the Christian churches. The constitution of Christianity expressly forbids it, and there is not in the whole New Testament one instance of a Christian claiming or exercising the power of an owner of slaves!

Here the whole argument might rest; but there is other and abundant proof that the New Testament churches were not slaveholding churches.

Their rules of discipline, as well as their constitution, forbid the supposition.

Their rules of discipline were the principles taught by Christ. They seceded from the world upon Christ's word, and built their communities upon it. And one of these principles, on which they came out from other Jews, was Christ's law of marriage and divorce. They went to him with this particular case, and got his decision: "What God hath joined let not man put asunder." Of course slaves, when they became converted, and joined the churches, came under this law of the inviolability of marriage. Could their slaveholding brethren then own them as property? sell a man here, and a woman there? 'Or, as the parental depends on the marriage relation, and is equally sacred, could the Christian master take as property the children who were the fruit of marriages among their servants; and that too in the Church, and under the law of Christ, and while the churches had newly seceded under those laws, and especially under this particular law of marriage, on which they had obtained his special decision? The supposition that such slaveholding acts and relations were allowed in the New Testament churches seems to me to be a very shallow and stupid assumption, not only without proof, but against all such proof as governs such cases.

But the moment you admit that the marriage and parental relations were inviciable among the first Christians, that moment you admit that their churches were not slaveholding churches. A law making the domestic relations inviolable to the 600,000 slaves owned by American Christians would affect their property value and condition, as a like law would affect the property value of horses or cattle which should allow them to clan together in herds of from two to a dozen, and make it impossible to sell or work them apart. And churches in Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, or New-Orleans, which should practise and teach that it is against the law of God for slaveholders to separate families, when convenience or necessity required them to dispose of slaves, would be instantly branded as churches of abolitionists; and slaves under their laws would not be chattels, but men. And such were the New Testament churches which were planted in alave states.

I conclude therefore that the New Testament churches were not slaveholding churches; and that all churches in this country, or elsewhere, which are so, being constructed upon the admission of the property-holding of men, and practically denying the ground principles of morality, and the domestic relations which God has established, are not churches of Christ, but a sort of mongrel organizations, resulting from an attempt to base the "kingdom of God" upon the principles of the kingdom of Satan; and surely, of such organizations the foundation is not apostles and prophets, nor is Christ the chief corner stone.

If the present views and reasonings are correct, they furnish a ready answer to all the apologies, excuses and palliations, which are used to keep us quiet, and leave slavery in the Church.

"God blesses the Mission Boards, and therefore they cannot be so very wrong," says one. "God works in the missions of the Boards, and where God works is good enough place for me to work," reasons another. Says a third: "God converts slaveholders in their slaveholding, and if the Holy Ghost communes with them, I can."

It is a sufficient ceply to all such reasonings to say, that we must not attempt to follow God's example in contempt of his precepts; and his precepts require us to put away our own sins and not to suffer sin upon our neighbors; to keep our garments and the garments of our churches pure.

"God blesses slaveholders and slavery-supporting Mission Boards." True; he blesses sinners of all sorts. His blessings, like his rain and sunshine, fall on the evil and on the good, the just and the unjust. Nay, he blesses serpents, cockatrices, murderers and idolaters, and tolerates devils even in the universe which he rules. He knows his own responsibilities, and will doubtless vindicate the wisdom and propriety of his course. Let us not stupidly intrude into his prerogatives, but seek rather to obey his commandments. And us to the Holy Spirit's converting and communing with slaveholders, God communed with Abraham while he was a polygamist; and if this pretense of copying God's example justifies our keeping slaveholding in the Church, it must justify our taking in concubinage also!

"But the slaveholders are ignorant, and know no better." I answer, It is time they did. Two centuries' discussion ought to have enlightened them.

But conceding their ignorance in church discipline, we are not to proceed by the offender's ignorance, but by God's truth. Though in the application of discipline to individuals we may charitably consider even inexcusable blimdness and error, yet in settling principles of discipline, which is what we are now doing, we must not base the rule upon the slaveholder's darkness, but upon our light; otherwise we must have a geographical religion, and a church discipline graduated to every degree of latitude and longitude of human ignorance and sin.

The duty then of the secretaries and appropriating committees is, when churches in slave States apply for aid from their funds, to ascertain whether their communion is open to slaveholding, and if so, to withhold aid till the evil is corrected; and it is the duty of every pastor and of every Christian to see that the funds given are not misapplied and perverted to propagating a slaveholding religion.

And now I am aware that this present argument may be unsuccessful, and fail to convince some. Perhaps it ought to fail. But I am persuaded that every humane and right-minded person wishes it were successful. I am persuaded that you are not anxious to believe that Christ's apostles welcomed slaveholders such as ours to the communion table of their Lord. And though you may believe that the pagen slaveholders who joined the first Christian churches, amid the darkness of the age and the weakness and ignorance of the disciples, were allowed by apostles even to retain enough marks of the old relation to enable those who wish to do so to call them slaveholders still, I do not believe that you rejoice in this ancient darkness, or wish to copy it in this age of light. I believe that you hate the presence in the Church of Jesus of a system which is divorcing philanthropy from religion, and by making Christianity odious, turning the heart of humanity from humanity's friend. And if, in spite of these arguments, you still believe that this foul and inhuman system of human bondage did, in the twilight of a dark age, actually find a temporary shelter in communion with Christ's first disciples, I think you look on the fact with mingled pity and abhorrence, as upon concubinage or polygamy in Abraham or Jacob, attributing it to the age and not to the men.

Let us treat these two old crimes alike. If some believe that the first churches were slaveholding churches, all agree that the Christian Church afterward abolished slavery out of its fellowship. Let us not go back and try the horrible experiment over. Let us improve by their experience, and proceed from their beginnings, and keep the Church of Christ, which has once abolished slavery, barred and bolted against it by the Word and Spirit, in the name and by the authority of God.

Let our home mission societies cease to send our young ministers from the Northern schools into slave States, telling them they are at "liberty to open their mouths against slavery," and their communion to slaveholders; thus sending them to preach an anti-slavery gospel, and administer a pro-slavery discipline. It puts our young ministers who go South into the absurd position of maintaining liberty in principle and slavery in practice, and thus confounds their ideas of moral subjects, breaks down their consistency, debauches their integrity, and makes their consciences the material between the upper and nether mill-stone.

Let us drop this wasteful process, and join together to plant the South with slavery-excluding churches. Let us begin with the upper counties of Kentucky, where two such churches already exist. Let us set one of these moral light-houses upon every mountain in East Tennessee. The hundreds gathered into such churches in North Carolina and Georgia by the Wesleyans prove that the thing is possible there. The Scotch Presbyterians who have slavery-excluding churches in Tennessee, Alabama, South Carolina, Maryland and Kentucky, prove that such churches are at least possible in those States. The existence of Christianity in the world which crucified Christ, proves that true churches can exist wherever there are men. Let our great church organizations turn out slaveholding from the temple of God. Let our Mission Boards, which annually gather up the hearts with the treasure of our churches, cease to lay those treasures at the feet of the slave-power. Let their anniversaries remember that one half the population in one half of our country are slaves, debarred by law from the Word of God and the privileges of the gospel, except as distilled through slaveholding hands. In short, let our religion become a free religion, and our country will soon become a free country; the principles of liberty which Christ taught and our fathers bled for will be wreathed into a bright halo of glory around the eagle upon our national flag, and we may then set up our banners in the name of our God.

I have but a single word more. If haply one still believes the New Testament churches were slaveholding churches; if unconvinced as Christians, I appeal to you as men. "Why, even of your own selves, judge ye not what is right?" Why not begin with this subject where the Bible begins revelation, with the assumption that God is God and man is man, and reject from religion that which dishonors God and destroys man! Why not excommunicate slavery by nature, without waiting for revelation! If "nature herself doth teach that it is shame for a man to wear long hair," doth it not much more cry "shame" upon the guilty folly of putting man into a brute's condition—into a state in which, to conceal the crime of the transaction, he ought to be covered all over with long hair? Oh, if there be a "woe for the man that striveth with his Maker," that woe must sit heavy upon him who, by enslaving men into brutes, boldly resists God's efforts to elevate them; and heaviest of all upon that monster priest whose mercenary soul finds Scripture for the deed!

Let us rejoice then that the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION rests on no doubtful interpretations of Scripture, or reasonings in which there is any dispute. There is certainly no Scripture against abstaining from slavery. Unless slavery is a Christian grace, we are surely safe in propagating Christianity without it. And if God is not an oppressor, we are right in spreading his kingdom without oppression. And if any persist in believing that slaveholding in the first Christian churches was a crime which was "winked at," God now commands all men every where to repent. Amen and Amen.

SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Association met in the First Church, Bangor, Maine, the 29th of September, at two o'clock P. M., Hon. Wm. Jackson, President, in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. David Thurston. The Recording Secretary, Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, read the Minutes of the last Annual Meeting, which were approved; and Messrs. C. B. Smith and A. Willey were appointed Assistant Secretaries.

The Treasurer, Lewis Tappan, Esq., read his Report of the receipts and expenditures of the Society, together with the certificate of the Auditors, which was approximately

The Annual Report was read by the Treasurer, in the absence of the Corresponding Secretary on account of severe illness. The Report was accepted, and laid on the table, to be made the subject of discussion Thursday morning.

After the reading of the Annual Report, the following committees were appointed Committee of Arrangements—Messrs, Allen, Thatcher, Ingalls, and Tappan. Committee on Business, Resolutions, &c.—Messrs, Jocelyn, Walker, Tappan, Brown, Smith, Willey, and Carpenter-

Committee on Nominations—Mesars. Brown, Page, Jocelyn, Todd, and Wiswell.

On motion, it was resolved that a meeting for devotional exercises be held tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock, to continue one hour.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The annual discourse was preached in the First Parish Church, by Rev. Joseph R. Walker, of Mansfield, Ohio, from 1st John iv. 20: If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

THURSDAY, Sept. 30.

A prayer-meeting was held in the Vestry, at 8 o'clock A. M., Rev. David Thurston presiding. At 9 o'clock the Association came to order, Hon. William Jackson President, in the chair. Prayer by Rev. Stephen Thurston.

The thanks of the Association were presented to Mr, Walker for his able discourse, and a copy requested for publication. Letters were read from Rev. Josiah Brewer, Rev. John Boynton, Rev. Kiah Bayley, Rev. Bancroft Fowler, Hon. Amasa Walker, and Hon. William Jay; which, on motion, were ordered to be published. The Committee on Business reported resolutions, which were very fully discussed, and the following adopted:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That mission churches which receive any sin into the Christian communon, by so doing sanctify that sin in the eyes of the heathen, and strengthen its power in the churches at home.

Resolved, That whenever a church, or a religious organization, is induced to tolerate and patronize sin, in order to gain an influence by which ultimately to destroy it, she has fallen into the most fatal snare of the adversary; and in the end, instead of removing the sin, is sure herself to be brought into sympathy with it, and to labor in its defense.

Resolved. That to oppose sin in one set of relations while we do not in another for example, to oppose intemperance while we do not oppose slavery, or to pray against oppression while we vote for it—is to strike down Christian principle, to deaden conscience, and, in the end, to undermine and destroy Christian character.

Resolved, That Christians should labor and pray earnestly, and give liberally, not only for the cause of free missions in heathen lands, but also to build up and sustain evangelical churches in the destitute portions of our own country that will exclude slaveholders from their fellowship, and in all other ways practically honor the gospel.

Resolved, That as the "American Reform Tract and Book Society" covers a large and important field upon which other societies have refused to enter, we view it as an instrumentality well adapted to the propagation of a pure Christianity to the abolition of all the strongholds of vice and wrong, and to the elevation of all classes of human beings; and that we welcome this institution as a valuable aid to free missions, cordially recommending it to the liberal patronage of all who desire the conversion and salvation of the world.

Resolved, That the grateful thanks of the Association are due to God for his care of the missionaries under its direction, in preserving their lives, and granting them so much success, and for the bestowment of so many mercies upon all departments of the Society.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the missionaries and teachers of the Association in their arduous labors, and that we will remember them continually at the throne of grace.

Resolved, That on the prevalence of sound anti-slavery sentiment in the nation depends, under God, the success of the Christian enterprise in which we are engaged.

Resolved, That in view of the desire of so many well-qualified persons to engage in the service of the Association as missionaries and teachers, and the many new and interesting fields that are opening and calling for aid, we will use increased efforts to sustain and increase our missions, if the requisite means be furnished; and that strenuous exertions be used to raise for the service of the Association, the present year, the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

Resolved, That anti-slavery Christians throughout the country, especially ministers of the gospel, be earnestly requested to extend a knowledge of the history and claims of the Association, establish auxiliary societies, male and female, increase the circulation of the monthly paper, and in all other suitable ways exert themselves to increase the funds and usefulness of the Association.

Resolved, That the Home Missionary department deserves increased attention, particularly with regard to the great number of foreigners, especially Germans, who are flocking to this country; and that efforts be made to enlighten and interest them in the principles of our Government and of this Association.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be authorized and encouraged to establish a mission in California, to labor among the Chinese, Japanese, and other immigrants who are rapidly swelling the population of that new and important State.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be given to the Committee of Arrangements; to the First Religious Society, for the use of its Church and Vestry; to the Choir for their services; and to those inhabitants of Bangor who extended their hospitality to the members of the Association.

Resolved, That the Association duly appreciates the arduous labors of the Corresponding Secretary, which have been highly acceptable; that we lament the illness that occasioned his absence from the Annual Meeting, and earnestly desire his speedy restoration to health.

The above resolutions were discussed by Messrs. Jocelyn, Rankin, Thurston Walker, Parker, Marshall, Brewer, Wiswell, Tappan, and Brown, and finally passed with great unanimity.

Rev. Mr. Blakeslee, missionary to the foreign population in California, made an interesting statement relative to his field of labor.

On motion, resolved, that the Report of the Corresponding Secretary be published under the direction of the Executive Committee.

The Committee on the relations between Auxiliaries and the Parent Society made a report, by Mr. Walker, Chairman, as follows:

The Committee appointed at the last Annual Meeting "to consider and report upon the proper relations to be sustained between the Parent Society and the Aux-

After many personal interviews between members of the Committee and the officers of the Parent Board, at New-York, and after correspondence and interchange of views with each other, five of the six members of the Committee agree in the following particulars concerning the subject submitted to their consideration:

1. That the work of Foreign and that of Home Missions should be vigorously prosecuted as two distinct departments of effort by the Parent Society.

2. That a Secretary for Home Missions should be appointed, who should act coördinately with the Secretary for Foreign Missions, each occupying himself with the appropriate business of his own particular department. Navertheless, in all cases where cooperation in counsel or labor would subserve the interests of econogy, facilitate the accomplishment of business, or give efficiency to any work in which they could jointly engage, the Secretaries may interchange labors and counsel, and cooperate with each other.

3. It should be the endeavor of the Association, as far as possible, to have the work on the foreign and home fields presented to the churches separately, and by separate sets of agents, at least once a year. The direction of the whole work to be under the supervision of one Board, which shall, through their Secretaries, make a joint report to the Annual Meeting of the Society.

4. It shall be the duty of the Parent Society to encourage the formation of Aux-

4. It shall be the duty of the Parent Society to encourage the formation of Auxiliary Societies in different States, or in regions of the Union comprising several States. All auxiliaries shall, if they request it, have the direction of missionaries laboring on their own field; shall appoint and locate their own missionaries; collect and disburse their own finds, and transmit any surplus to the Parent Society.

5. When an auxiliary cannot, by diligent effort, collect upon their own field funds sufficient to sustain the missionary work within their limits, they shall give due notice of their wants to the Parent Board, which shall use diligent effort to aid them, and when they have the necessary funds, shall apprise the auxiliary of their readiness to aid them to the extent required; and on the receipt of such information, the auxiliary shall have the privilege of drawing upon the Parent Treasury for an amount sufficient to cover the deficit accruing in the work prosecuted under their care.

6. In cases where it shall be deemed wise by Auxiliary Societies to send out of their respective fields to collect funds, the Parent Society may, if they think the effort a desirable one, certify the credentials of such agents; but the Parent Society shall have no further direction of the labors of such agents, excepting that it shall have power to guard against the multiplication of agencies upon the same field.

7. It shall be the duty of the Parent Society to prosecute Home Missionary effort, especially at the South, and in new States or Territories where there is danger that slavery and slaveholding churches may be extended; and so far as the churches are accessible, to have the cause of free missions, the necessity of our organization, and the impress importance of an efficient support of our operations, researched though. the immense importance of an efficient support of our operations, presented throughout the whole land.

8. The Auxiliary Societies shall report to the Parent Society annually, in season to have the statistics and important features of their operations embodied in the Annual Report of the Parent Board.

Mr. Walker read also a letter from Rev. J. Cable, a member of the Committee dissenting from the report of the majority.

The report read by Mr. Walker was then adopted. The Committee on Nominations made a report, which was adopted, as follows:

THE Executive Committee, in presenting their Sixth Annual Report, regret that the illness of the Corresponding Secretary prevents his attendance at the annual meeting. The Report, commenced by him, has been completed by the Treasurer, who will present it on behalf of the Committee.

The labors of the Committee, the agents and missionaries of the Association, have been greatly blessed; and although some of the missionaries have suffered severely from disease, no death has, so far as the Committee have learned, occurred among them, and the aggregate number has been largely increased. The Committee believe that entire harmony has prevailed in all departments of the Association and in the missions; and that the officers, missionaries, teachers, and agents feel, more than ever, their weighty responsibilities, and a solemn determination to prosecute the work committed to them with unabated zeal, relying on the continued guidance of the Holy Spirit.

The Auditor's Report on the Annual Account of the Treasurer, just read, shows that the total amount of receipts for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1852, was $30,826.29, while the disbursements amounted to $30,233.54.

The funds, though falling short of last year's receipts, have, in consequence of their more economical application, resulting from increased experience on the part of both missionaries and Committee, been productive of greater results.

The following summary embraces the statistics of our

MENDI MISSION.

KAW-MENDI, WEST AFRICA.

Missionaries.—Rev. George Thompson, Rev. J. C. Teppt, Rev. F. L. Arnold, J. S. Brooks, Sawuel Gray, Miss Harnan Morr, Mrs. Arnold, and Miss Sarak Kingor.

"Under oppositement and aboutle sell.—Rev." Morris Opposite, Doctor T. C. Cole, D. W. Burton, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Oppositement and aboutle as Manala McGuire, Miss Louisa Saxton, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Oppositement and Miss Many B. Addrich.

"Only Jane Winvers, and Miss Many B. Addrich."

This mission has labored under serious embarrassment, and its operations have been retarded through a great portion of the year, by the severe illness of many of its members. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold and Mr. Brooks, by the advice of the mission, and acting under the direction of physicians, returned to the United States in May last; since which, Mr. Tefft and Mr. Gray have both been seriously ill. It has, therefore, been found impossible to commence the new stations that had been authorized by the Executive Committee, as the brethren and sisters often found themselves unable to perform the work needed to be done at Kaw-Mendi. This hindrance seemed to be peculiarly discouraging, as they confidently hoped that the opening of those new stations would not only increase the influence of the mission, and multiply their facilities for reaching the hearts of the heathen, but also tend to improve the health and increase the strength of the missionary company. They were comforted, however, in the remembrance that they were in the hands of Him who had made to them so many rich and precious promises in his holy Word, with the assurance "that all things work together for good to them that love God."

Schools.—No material change has taken place in the schools since our last report. The girls' school is under the charge of Sarah Kinson, (Mar-gru.) the scholars of which are reported as making very encouraging progress. A portion of the year Mr. Brooks devoted himself to the care of the schools, teaching in them himself. To the more advanced scholars, such as they wished to prepare for teachers, he gave two hours' extra instruction every day, with special reference to qualifying them for that work. He was very sinxious to try the effect of taking four or six of the most advanced of them, and commencing a new station at Tecongo, that he might there have time to train them more thoroughly, accustom them to teaching and interpreting, and educate them to more systematic habits of usefulness. If a suitable teacher could have been found for Kaw-Mendi, and his own health had remained sufficient, this plan would have been carried into effect. One of these scholars had secured his confidence to so great an extent, that Mr. Brooks would have been willing to undertake the duties of a new station with him alone.

The brethren of the mission are very anxious that the schools should be well sustained, with an abundant supply of thoroughly competent teachers. They regard the education of the youth, under evangelical influences, as under God the only hope of Africa; and think that Christian teachers can do more for the salvation of that people than ministers who should neglect this instrumentality. The power of God we know can reach the hearts of the middle aged and aged of that people; but it is more in accordance with the economy of His grace to convert those who have not long been "accustomed to do evil."

New Stations.—The places in which our missionaries had been invited to establish schools are yet unoccupied, and Tecongo and Mobungo remain as inviting as ever. There is some doubt about the expediency of occupying Tissana, although Braw, its chief, is anxious to have them do so, and will give up the town to the misionaries and the Sierra Leone people. But he is emphatically a war chief, and has built and fortified a new town for war purposes. The Boompehs, his people, are a wild, warlike race, who are represented as delighting more in war than in peace.

Of the Chief of Mobungo, Mr. Tefft, after visiting him, thus speaks;

"Bea-Bungo treated me with much friendship, and cheerfully showed me all that was to be seen around Mobungo. I spoke to the people there, and he sat on his mat and turned the word' (translated) for me. I cannot but hope that he loves God. It was an affecting sight to see this king humbly hearing the gospel himself, and in turn telling the people of its glories. He said to me: 'I have begged for a teacher and prayed for a missionary. When your missionary teacher was here, my children (the people or children of his town) were learning book and God palayer. All trade was stopped upon the Sabbath, and the day was quietly spent by the traders and my people in listening to the gospel. But now my boys no learn, the traders again carry on their business on the Sabbath, and all I can do is to every day beg God to keep me, and send missionaries to tell me more about Him.'"

Mobungo and Tecongo are regarded as peculiarly healthful locations.

Toomohoo.—This place is about six days' walk from the Mendi Mission, and four from Gallinas. It is the residence of Kindi, (an uncle of Kinna,) one of the most wealthy and powerful chiefs in all that part of Africa, who will welcome the establishment of a mission among his people. While on a visit there, Mr. Brooks thus wrote to the mission:

"My mind has been more and more drawn to this place, and I have indulged a desire to remain, that I may test the healthfulness of the region, and the practicability of establishing missions here. The only objection to this step now before me is its difficulty of access; but this is weakened by the thought of the Gallinas or the Kittam. By either of these routes the overland passage will be much lessened. I have just been informed by one well acquainted with the route to Gallinas, that the journey can be performed in four days. The Kittam route is one half day shorter than this. Allow me here to state some of the reasons which move me to ask your approval of my tarrying here through the next rains. Besides those mentioned above, they are: The effect of the suppression of the slave-trade at Gallinas is such, that the gospel never can be more easily introduced than at the present time. The inhabitants are forced to look for support to other means than the slavetrade. Some are watching the changes going on to see what the future will develop favorable to their situation. Others are inquiring, What shall we do? The very circumstances in which they are situated seem to send forth to every Christian the cry more loud and clear than that from any other place now in my mind, 'Come over and help us.' I feel that with these changes the gospel and schools should be introduced. The approbation of my brethren is all that is wanting to make me fully feel it my duty to stay."

Mr. Tefft describes another town on the Big Boom, one half larger than Kaw-Mendi. It is entirely removed from the influence of high water, with no swamps or low lands near, and has six or eight towns within three miles of it. This he regards as one of the most promising locations in Western Africa. The Sierra Leone travellers consider it the pleasantest place on the Boom. They regard it so favorably that they have talked of uniting, to erect there large permanent buildings for the general use of the Boom traders, and make it a place of resort for health. The people are believed to be all favorable to the opening of schools.

An influential chief of Gallinas wrote to Mr. Tefft a pressing letter, urging the mission to establish a school there at once; saying that all war was done, and they wanted white men to come and teach their children.

Encouragements.—Although there have been so many discouragements, arising chiefly from the inability of the missionaries to labor, yet they say they have frequent occasion to thank God and take courage. In an early part of the year, Mr. Arnold wrote:

"We have every reason to believe that some among our children and colonists have been brought into the fold of God. Since we have been here I have baptized four adults and one infant. Several others wished baptism, but we thought it best to postpone it for a short time. There are many signs of good. I think there are some members of the church that are really seeking for holiness of heart, and there seems to be a general interest manifested among the school children. Oh! I wish I was able to devote my whole time to the spiritual interests of this dear people; but I trust I shall be enabled to say, 'The will of the Lord be done,' for we know He does all things wisely."

Mr. Tefft wrote, in December last:

"We cannot but hope that there is a silent but steady work going on in the hearts of our people and school children. One boy, the son of a king, sa'd, with deep emotion, a few days since in prayer-meeting, that when he called to mind what the Lord had done for the people of Mendi, in sending teachers and missionaries to tell them of the Saviour, and raising us up when we had seemed to be so near death, he felt that they could not be sufficiently thankful; and for one, he had no desire to be a trader, and use his education to make money; but if it was the will of God, he wished to be a minister, that he too might tell his countrymen of the sinner's friend, even Jesus Christ! He has good talents, and is among the first of all our

Again, after preaching on the Sabbath, he wrote:

"I felt that the Lord was with us. There were more of the Mendi people from the interior present than have ever been present on any former occasion. After I got home, my heart was cheered by one of our church members coming to me, and on my asking what she wished she said: 'Me come to thank you for your word to-day; it do me plenty good. Me want to love God all the time. My heart felt good. Pray for me, that I may always be good.'"

At a later date he says:

"The people all around us are beginning to wish to adopt 'white man's fashions' in houses, clothes, furniture, &c. This we look upon as a favorable omen. To supply these desires they will become more industrious, and industry will surely make an opening for the gospel. The desire to educate their children seems also to be increasing in all directions. If we had the teachers who could be depended upon, I have no doubt that we could open six or eight schools at once to good advantage."

War .- At the commencement of the year there were rumors of war, that threatened to overrun the whole country. The latest letters received represent the country as comparatively quiet. There had been some slight skirmishes, but there was nothing feared as likely to prevent the missionaries from establishing themselves any where they chose.

Reinforcement .- It has been stated that a large company are nearly ready to embark for this field of labor. They will go instructed to establish new stations immediately after their arrival, in the most promising locations as to health that present themselves. The Executive Committee consider it a special cause of gratitude to God, that one of this number is a thoroughly read physician, and has had some years' successful practice in a country subject to malarious diseases. A great want of our mission, and one from which it has always suffered, will thus be supplied.

Buildings.—The iron house sent out at the commencement of this year has been erected on substantial pillars of stone, six feet high, and surrounded with a verandah, which contributes both to its strength and comfort. The missionary company going out this fall will take with them the prepared materials for at least two wooden houses, adapted in their structure to that climate, and all ready for erection in a few days after their arrival.

The Executive Committee, after making the amplest arrangement in their power for the health of their missionaries in the selection of locations, the preparation of buildings, providing medical and other supplies, would commend them to God, in whose service they go forth, and urgently ask for them the prayers of God's people that His blessing may accompany them.

JAMAICA MISSION.

ISLAND OF JAMAICA, W. L.

One Mission, Six Stations, One Out-station.

BRAINERD Misionaries, REV. A. M. RICHARDSON, MRS. RICHARDSON. Teacher, ADDISH MOFFAT. Missionaries, Rev. L. THOMPSON, MRS. THOMPSON. Teacher, MISS SARAW BLAKELY

GOLDEN VALE. Missionaries, Rev. A. D. Olds, Mus. Olds. Under appointment, yet in this country, Mus. Mary Hows. Total, 19.

This Mission has been enlarged and strengthened during the present year, by the opening of the new station at Golden Vale, and the addition of the following Missionaries and Assistant Missionaries: Rev. P. M. Way and his wife, Mr. Addison Moffat, Miss Sarah Blakely, Miss Maria Hicks, and the return of Miss Mary Dean to the mission.

During the year under review, the people of Jamaica have suffered greatly from the general prevalence of the small-pox all over the island. The missionaries have been called from their ordinary labors to attend upon the sick, and to use preventive measures against the spread of the disease. There was one case in the family of Mr. Richardson, at Brainerd, and one in Mr. Thomson's family, at Eliot, neither of which proved fatal. At some of the stations it became necessary to suspend the schools. Another evil, under which Jamaica has suffered, has been a great scarcity of provisions. Many parents could not send their children to school because they could not give them the food necessary to strengthen them for a walk of from two to four miles. This scarcity has resulted in part from the neglect of the people to plant at the proper time, consequent upon the prevalence of the cholera during the previous year. The people were panic-stricken, and gave up in despair, until their supply of provisions was nearly exhausted. A severe storm that passed over the island last winter increased the evil.

Some of the missionaries report an alarming increase of intemperance, resulting from the bad advice given by physicians in prescribing the use of alcoholic drinks as a preventive of cholera. These evils have retarded somewhat the progress of religion, and increased the labor of our missionaries; yet many of them make very encouraging reports.

Brainerd.—This is the largest and oldest of the stations connected with the Jamaica Mission. It was commenced in 1839, and a church was organized there in 1841. At the close of the missionary year last reported, the station had just been placed under the care of Mr. Richardson, the present pastor of the church, and was beginning to recover itself from the terrible moral evils that had swept over it like a desolating storm, during the whole of the preceding year. The congregations on the Sabbath were becoming large, the Sabbath-school was filling up, some backslidden professors were confessing their sins and giving promise of amendment, and the general aspects of the station gave pleasing indication that the Spirit of the Lord was again graciously at work among the people. These favorable indications have been continued, and the promises of good held out for the encouragement of faithful labor have been, like all God's promises, more than abundantly fulfilled. The church has received a large increase during the year, and at the close of it exhibits evidence of true spiritual prosperity. In January, of this year, Mr. R. wrote, that for some time past there had been manifest tokens of the presence of the Spirit of God among the people:

"His influences have distilled, softly and silently, like evening dew, upon the hearts of numbers. Although it has been but a still, small voice, yet we trust it has been heard and heeded by some who were ready to perish. Our Subhath-congregations have been large, and the people have been solemn and attentive listeners to the preaching of the Word. A church meeting for conference and prayer, and a meeting of inquirers for conversation and instruction, have constituted our weekly religious exercises. The average attendance upon the inquiry-class has been about fifty, several of whom give good evidence of having truly submitted their hearts to God; others are evidently in an interested, anxious state of mind.

"Within the last four or five months, twenty-three individuals have been admitted to this church, mostly on profession of their faith. A large proportion of them are heads of families. Three or four of the most intelligent, promising young men in the congregation, are among the number."

A very encouraging feature in the work of grace, then going on, was the increase of feeling during the illness of the pastor, and his consequent absence of seven weeks from the pulpit. Of this he thus speaks:

"I learn from the deacons that there has been some increase of interest in the church of late. Since I have been laid aside, they are waking up to a clearer sense of their individual responsibility. They begin to feel that they have a work to do, and that they cannot depend upon 'minister' to do all. The meetings have been well attended on the Sabbath since they have been without preaching. Indeed, they have been much better sustained than they are in most churches at home, at such times, so far as I have been acquainted. Brother Beardslee, who supplied the pulpit one Sabbath, remarked that he had never seen a larger congregation gathered here on any ordinary occasion, and that there was a larger proportion of young people in it than in any other congregation with which he was acquainted on the island.

"Our Sabbath-school and Bible-class are quite interesting, and number about one hundred and forty members."

At that time, for want of a suitable teacher, there was no school at Brainerd. The people had voluntarily raised a subscription of nearly $100 to sustain one, and were anxiously, almost impatiently, looking to the Executive Committee for a properly qualified person to commence it. By the accession of Mr. Moffat to the mission, this want has since been supplied. At the time of making the annual statement of the mission, the school had been in operation six weeks. Every Monday morning there had been an increase of its numbers, and there were then more than one hundred names on the list. An assistant teacher was greatly needed.

In his review of the year, Mr. Richardson says:

"If we should say that the past year has been one of arduous, exhausting toil that the trials, anxieties and discouragements connected with our work have been many and great, we should only affirm what is doubtless true of every year's experience in the life of every faithful missionary. And yet we feel that 'it is good to be kere;' for we believe that God has placed us here, and that He has a work for us to do, in laboring for the elevation and salvation of this long-abused, degraded people. The circumstances under which we entered on our work were peculiarly painful and trying. The people here had lost all confidence in those who had been for some years their spiritual teachers and guides. They had proved themselves, if not blind guides, even worse—false teachers, inculcating the most pernicious errors in doctrine, and encouraging, by precept and example, the worst practices. As might have been expected, division and alienation of feeling among the members of the church had followed, and numbers were led away from God and duty, while the blighting, soul-destroying influence of such an unhappy state of things upon the minds of the unconverted may be better imagined than described. As a legitimate result, licentiousness has greatly increased, and several of the church have fallen into the snare, and have been excommunicated. The work of purging the church from these abominations has been a sad and trying one; but the great majority of the members have stood by their minister, and acted with promptness and decision, and the happy influence of faithful discipline impartially administered is already apparent. All have confessed their sin, and some show signs of true penitence. The position of the church on this subject is clearly defined, and, to some extent, a healthful public sentiment has been created. But those who have never lived where slavery has given a loose rein to the demon of lust, can form no adequate conception of the awful prevalence of impurity, in all its Protean forms, among the people of this island. The leprosy of moral pollution has blighted almost all that should be virtuous, lovely, and of good report in society. The marriage of a truly virtuous couple is an event of very rare occurrence. To stay the progress of this giant evil, and apply the principles of the gospel as the only effectual remedy, must be a prominent object of every faithful missionary's labors here.

"But while there has been much in the experience of the past year to try our faith, tokens for good have not been wholly denied us. On the contrary, there have been many developments of such a character as to inspire hope and cheer us on in our work. Our Sabbath congregations have been uniformly large, and the preaching of the Word has been listened to with marked attention and interest. A large number who had gone off and attached themselves to a native chapel in this vicinity, during the confusion here, have since returned. The Sabbath-school, which had been almost entirely broken up, is now numerously attended, and in a highly prosperous state, and there have been several hopeful conversions among the young people connected with it. During the year the division and dissension engendered in the church have been mostly healed, and general harmony and good feeling now prevail among the members. On the subject of temperauce there has been manifest progress during the past few months. All who stand connected with the church were once pledged teetotallers; but during the prevalence of the cholers, they were advised by physicians to make use of brandy and other alcoholic stimuli as a protection (?) against that terrible disease. The result was just what might have been anticipated. In many instances their former drinking habits regained the ascendency. Recently, however, the cause has received a fresh, and, we trust, permanent impulse. Several who had relapsed into their former habits have confessed their sin and promised reformation, and the church as a body have renewed their pledge.

"But it is the hope and belief that these external indications of progress are the ground fruit of an internal section." Spring the start of the records that genuine fruit of an internal work of God's Spirit upon the hearts of the people that affords us the strongest encouragement. Although we cannot report any remarkable awakening among our people during the past year, yet we have good reason to believe that the Holy Spirit's influences have been silently operating upon many hearts. There has been no time for several months when there were not a goodly number in the congregation who seemed truly anxious to be taught the way of life and salvation, and almost every week has furnished some new cases of awakening. No communion season has passed without several additions to the church by profession. Our plan has been to have the candidates under weekly instruction for several months previous to their public examination before the church, which usually takes place three or four weeks before the time for their admission. In this way an opportunity is afforded for testing their religious knowledge and experience, as well as their daily life. Nor will it be thought strange that rigid and repeated as well as their daily life. Nor will it be thought strange that rigid and repeated examinations should often reveal such a state of heart or life as renders it necessary to refuse the application.

"One young man, of more than ordinary intelligence and promise, who was hopefully converted last fall, is now engaged as an assistant in the school at Mount

Patience, and is also prosecuting his studies with the intention of preparing himself for more extensive usefulness. I must not omit to mention that we feel greatly encouraged by the recent opening (or reopening) of so large a school at this station, and the general interest manifested by all classes in its success and prosecutive.

"Aided (in part) by funds from the Society at home, the buildings on the station have all been painted and repaired. A new iron roof has been put upon the Mt. Patience house, and the chapel has been partially ceiled overhead in order to render it more comfortable, as the radiation of heat from the iron roofing, on a clear day, was very oppressive. The following statistics will help you to form a correct idea of our situation and prospects:

"Only about one fourth of the amount subscribed for the school has been actually paid, as the year did not commence until June, and the whole was not due until the expiration of six months. Sickness and the great scarcity of food have very much lessened the amount of the church's contributions the past year; but they have done better than many churches at home, I believe. I will not say they have done what they could."

Eliot.—This station, which suffered so severely from the ravages of the cholera during the preceding year, has been most mercifully spared from that fatal disease, the small pox, that has made such dreadful havoc in most parts of the island of Jamaica during the present year. With the single exception of a little girl in Mr. Thompson's family, no member of his church or congregation has been attacked with it.

Concerning the spiritual state of the station, Mr. Thompson says:

"Our Sabbath congregations continue about the same in number as last year. There is a growing interest among our people on the subject of vital godliness, and an increasing feeling that God requires a right state of the heart, and not merely an outside show. There is a decided improvement in their social, intellectual and moral condition, and the better informed among them are becoming much more enterprising.

"We have every reason to believe that God has been, and still is, favoring us with the precious influences of his Spirit, without which all other blessings would be of little value, and all our labors fruitless. It is God who has given the increase, and to Him be all the praise. During the year there have been fifteen persons received into church fellowship—all except one by profession.

"Six have been excommunicated from the church, and one suspended, for offenses connected with licentiousness, which is yet the crying sin of the land. I am happy, however, in being able to say that most of those who were received into the church during the previous year are still holding on their way. Most earnestly do we desire a return of the renewing influences of the Holy Spirit.

Soon after the commencement of the year the school at Eliot was suspended, consequent upon the death of Mr. Campbell, its former teacher. Mrs. Thompson commenced teaching about the middle of October, and continued to do so until the arrival of Miss Blakely, who taught five weeks previous to the August vacation. After this short experience Miss B. writes:

"I have not the least cause for discouragement in relation to their advancement in science; indeed I entertain high hopes in relation to their intellectual culture. Would that I had reason to be as sanguine in respect to their moral culture! My hope is in God, that He will turn their hearts to Him, and give them a tender conscience."

Union.—The missionary in charge of this station sustains the office of a pastor to the churches and congregations at Hermitage, Chesterfield and Devon-Pen. The people comprising the congregation have nearly all removed their residences from the first named place, in consequence of their inability to procure land. Mr. Wolcott continues, however, to preach there every alternate Sabbath, to a congregation not much diminished in number, although most of the people have to walk from two to five miles. Chesterfield is regarded as the proper centre of labor and of influence at this station. Devon-Pen is an out-station of Union.

Soon after the commencement of the present year, Mr. Rennie, the teacher at Devon-Pen, was dismissed from the service of the mission, for reasons seriously affecting his moral character. In January, Mr. Charles B. Venning, formerly a teacher at Brainerd, was appointed to the same office at Devon-Pen, since which the school has been more prosperous than ever before. The severe sickness of Mr. Venning, from which he is just recovering, has prevented him from making the usual statistical report of the school. The prevalence of the measles, the small-pox, and the kine-pox, had, for a short time, considerably interfered with the regular attendance of the children. Mr. Venning officiates at Devon-Pen the Sabbath that Mr. W. spends at Hermitage.

The school at Chesterfield is now under the charge of Miss Dean, formerly the teacher at Oberlin. At the time of making our last Annual Report Miss Dean was in this country, having been compelled to leave the mission on account of ill-health. She has recently returned to Jamaica, much invigorated, and with strong hope of being able to continue there.

In his annual statement Mr. Wolcott says:

"The desire of our heart seems to linger, but there is some prospect of better things. I think we have gained a decided advantage, and hope we shall be able to retain it. The completion of our new house, the presence, labor and influence of our excellent teacher, give us some ground to hope. Only three persons have been received into church membership at Hermitage during the year. One woman has been excommunicated for theft and other improprieties, and two persons have been under discipline, but they now manifest penitence and reformation.

"The influences at Devon-Pen at the commencement of the year were very unfavorable, but the appointment of Mr. Venning restored confidence, and there now seems to be a better state of things than at any previous time since I joined the mission. Several persons have lately presented themselves as subjects of religious interest, and may soon be received into church fellowship.

"To the people of my charge the year past has been one of mingled afflictions and mercies. Sickness has been uncommonly prevalent, especially in the forms already mentioned, and the small-pox is still among us. Many have died. Three sisters of the church have been called away within about five weeks. Our spiritual health, too, has come far short of "perfect soundness." But, on the other hand, the earth has brought forth its accustomed increase, and still promises to yield an abundant recompense to the laborer; and we too are yet permitted to enjoy and to do. The way is preparing for a more bountiful harvest in spiritual things. Our people seem to take new courage, and we are evidently gaining the confidence of these second as

"But after all, I am often disposed to inquire: What good am I doing! What good is any body doing! Of what use the expenditure of so much money, talent, life, to so little purpose! Must not our friends get discouraged in the same labors continually repeated, and increasingly demanded! But, then, remove us; cause our labors, insignificant as they are, to cease; and the whole catalogue of gross abominations, whose fruit is present wretchedness and eternal despair, rolls its dark night over this otherwise comparatively redeemed and happy people. For after all the poverty, the ignorance, the vileness, the degradation that exists, there is much of good, much that is worth laboring for. There are souls to be born and nourished to everlasting life, and why regard the cost! How much does it cost to sustain the body, yet the cost must be constantly repeated. How much is done to support hospitals for the unfortunate poor, and shall we grudge doing for those whom Satan has robbed of all spiritual good!

"The receipts of the station have been: For support of minister, $38.91; church and station purposes, $28.36; school do., $16.50; school house, $53.94; total, $137.71; besides much that has been done in the shape of day's work."

Oberlin.—The removal of Mr. Olds from this station, to commence a new one at Golden Vale, and the absence of Miss Dean, left it nearly destitute of regular missionary labor for the first eight months of the year. In November last, Rev. P. M. Way, then pastor of a church at Albany, N. Y., received his appointment as a missionary for Jamaica. With the consent of the Executive Committee he remained at Albany during the whiter, for the purpose of completing a regular course of studies at the Medical College there, from which he has since graduated. He sailed from this country the last of March, and arrived at Kingston, Jamaica, April 24. In June, Mr. Way wrote:

"I find the people much in advance of what I anticipated. The seed sown has taken root. There are some well-instructed and well established Christians. The youth also give evidence of moral and intellectual training. But, on the other hand, there are some who act as though they believed it were a virtue to deceive God and man. We have also a terrible rum influence against us. There are twelve rum shops within three miles of this station! We were obliged, soon after my arrival, to expel one member for engaging in the rum traffic. Many churches, both ministers and members, sustain its use. These are dreadful influences to contend against... The influence of this church is working good, and I believe will ultimately correct the evil which has crept into some churches around us. Our congregations and Sabbath-schools are increasing, and every thing looks encouraging. Our trust is in God."

At that time several of the schools connected with the mission were closed, for want of teachers. Mr. Way was greatly affected at seeing so many children neglected, and, contrary to the advice of the mission, resolved to commence a school himself at Oberlin. He makes the following earnest appeal for help:

"Where are the pious young men and women who are ardently praying that some door of usefulness may be open to them! Where are the churches to which these pious, devout Christians belong? Will they not raise a few handred dollars each for teachers, and send them to Jamaica? The amount of good which might be accomplished by their devoting only a few years to teaching, eternity alone can disclose."

Miss Hicks commenced teaching there, in June, a school of thirty-two scholars.

Her first impressions only have been communicated. She finds teaching there much more difficult and laborious than at home, but not more so than she had anticipated.

Providence.—This station, formerly attached to Oberlin, is now under the special care of Mr. Hall. In August, 1851, Mr. Olds and Mr. Hall formed a church at Brandon Hill, a short distance from Providence, of which the people requested Mr. Hall to become the pastor. He preaches there each alternate Sabbath, at so early an hour that he returns to Providence to preach at the regular hour for service. Mrs. Hall taught the school at Providence during a part of the year, and was succeeded by Charles Sims, a native of the island, who had been for some time previous in the family of Mr. Olds. The scarcity of provisions, resulting from causes already referred to, was so great that he closed the school in May, expecting to recommence in September.

"During the past year," the report says, "we have enjoyed no special outpouring of the Holy Spirit; yet on the part of some there has been a constant freshness of soul, and growth in grace. Our prayer and general conference meetings have usually been well attended. We can see a general progress among the people. Some reforms are slowly doing their work. As the people become enlightened on important subjects, we see some of them taking correct and decided ground. But I cannot say so of all, for some hold back. Either they do not see the truth, or they will not obey it. I fear they love darkness because their deeds are evil."

The church at this station now numbers forty-two members. Six have been received during the year. One has been removed by death, and one has been cut off.

The people attached to these congregations pledged about $100 for the support of the institutions of the gospel among them. Owing to providential circumstances, explained elsewhere, this has not all been paid.

Mr. Hall points out some of the hindrances to the progress of the gospel in Jamaica. Among those that are peculiar is the fact that almost every one is religious after his sort, whatever may be his character. Few can be met with who do not profess to be serving God, yet multitudes of such are living in gross violation of every Divine command. The multitude of little chapels to which such persons may be attached increases this evil, and subjects those who would go out into the highway, and compel men to come in, to the charge of proselyting. Mr. Hall says:

"A gospel that promises men eternal life, while it leaves them in drunkenness and fornication, is surely 'another gospel.' Ministers dying of delirium tremens, and ministers baptizing and receiving to the communion of the church those whom they know to be drunkards and fornicators, are occurrences with which one may become acquainted in Jamaica."

Mr. H. gives full credit to the fact that in some of the chapels by which he is surrounded God'is worshipped in sincerity and truth, and the people truly benefited.

In view of the judgments that are abroad in the land, Mr. Hall says:

"I suppose the masses were never more hardened than at the present time. If they are ever brought to understand and embrace the gospel, it must be by protracted and persevering labor." . . .

"The night grows darker. The waves of drunkenness, and licentiousness, and death roll higher and higher, and are sweeping off multitudes on all sides, and it sometimes seems as though they would carry all before them. Yet the reasons for becoming discouraged and retiring from the field are also reasons for toiling on. If the gospel can save the world, it can redeem Jamaica. We need faith. We need the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Satan seems to triumph now; but 'when the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him?"

Golden Vale,-This is a new station, opened by Mr. Olds in September, 1851. Copious extracts from Mr. Olds' letters have been published in the American Missionary during the year. His annual statement bears date July 19, 1852. In it he

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"We have first (we hope with joyful and grateful hearts) to acknowledge the good hand of God upon us in our persons and family, and upon the people with whom we have labored. Although for months we have been surrounded by the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noonday, yet it has not entered our dwelling. It has indeed come nigh to us, but God has thus far thrown around us the 'everlasting arms,' and shielded us from the ravages of the destroyer. The report of my labors with this people commences with about the middle of September, 1851. As I have informed you in previous communications, we found them in great darkness respecting the way of salvation through Christ. Their imperfect knowledge of Christianity is so commingled with gross superstition, that one almost feels that it were better for them not to know any thing of it. And yet I hope some of them, through the glimmerings of light that reach their eyes, discern savingly gospel truth.

"Our congregations, during some of the first months we were here, were not large, but varied from one hundred to two hundred; but were on the whole, gradually increasing, until our place of worship was too strait for us, when we commenced fitting up the house which the proprietor of the property kindly gives us the use of, It is a substantial stone building well roofed with slate. Our chapel-room will comfortably seat three hundred, and in good weather it is generally well filled. Our seats hitherto have been but temporary ones, but we are now well advanced in supplying permanent seats. The pulpit also is nearly completed. All this is done with the trifling expense to the Society of about $40.

"There now appears to be every prospect of there being a large and permanent congregation at this place."

Mr. Olds' congregations, like those at the other stations, have been greatly affected by the prevailing disease. It is estimated that not less than a thousand cases have occurred within five or six miles of his station. The report continues:

"It would seem as though the people, while groaning under their chastisements, would bethink themselves, and turn to God; but, alas! many of them, I fear, are becoming hardened in their sins. Divers of them, when they get well, seem to flatter themselves that, now they have passed all danger, they may return to their pleasures and live for this world. Pray for us, that these afflictions may be same-tified to the spiritual and eternal good of this people.

"Although we meet with many discouragements, there are yet many interesting features in this field of labor. I have already, in other communications, spoken of the interest I felt in my out-stations, eight in number, where I preach on week days to little congregations, varying from thirty to sixty. That interest still continues. For the present, however, our meetings are suspended at several of the outposts, on account of the prevalence of the small-pox. Often in these little assemblies, when Christ and his claims are held up before the mind, the silent tear may be seen stealing down the cheek, giving rise to the hope that the Word is not preached in vain; although, alas I the people are governed so much by mere feeling, that a present good impression is liable to pass away. I often think that many of them do really purpose to lead different, if not new, lives. But they are so excitable, and have so few fixed principles to guide them, that as soon as they go out from under the sound that the sound when the first extraction tribus them that the sound is the sound when the first extraction tribus them. of the gospel, when the first gust of temptation strikes them, they fall. Those that have really embraced the gospel (I hope there are a few such) are but babes in Christ. They need constant care and nourishment; and it must be the 'simple milk.'

"At present I see no flattering encouragements to hold out before you, except this: We are in the midst of an ignorant, needy, and degraded people, for whom Christ died, and in behalf of whom we have the promise of God that we 'shall reap if we faint not.' And we believe the Word of God standeth sure, and that that Word, spoken in faith and love, will not be in vain, and that ere long we shall see the fruit of our labors. Our Sunday-school is, we think, an interesting one. The attendance is from one hundred to one hundred and fifty. But we much need more teachers. We have no teacher, except from our own family. We also have a catechetical exercise after sermon in the afternoon, which is attended by almost the entire congregation. This exercise I rank among our most profitable ones. Its chief design is to get the great doctrines of Christianity before the minds of the people in as plain and simple a manner as possible; and hence the best opportunities are given to come in contact with some of their superstitions, which I hope are beginning to yield under the repeated impressions of gospel truth.

"I have as yet made no effort to collect from the people, except for the chapel, for which small contributions have been made.

"A school was opened here in October last, and has been continued up to last week, with the exception of the Christmas vacation. For the last few months the attendance has been from twenty-five to thirty per day."

There are some things connected with the history of Jamaica and its missions, for the last two years, that remind us of the providential dealings of God with the Hebrew nation, when he brought them out from their slavery to the Egyptians. With a high hand and a strong arm he led them forth by the hands of his own divinely selected agents. For a time-a short time-they walked according to his commandments, and with gratitude of heart thanked him for his favors. But they rebelled against him, and many of their teachers corrupted his Word, and by precept and example taught the people to err. God visited them with afflictions, judgment followed judgment, and they were led through the wilderness forty years, until all the men that came out of Egypt had died, without entering the promised land. We will not attempt to trace the parallel. It would be presumption in us to say that God, after having broken the yoke of the oppressor, required a whole generation in which to relieve a race from the abominations and impurities engendered by slavery, and prepare them for the enjoyment of a rational liberty. There is, however, enough of similarity in the case to justify the attention given by our missionaries to the youth of Jamaica, that they may be trained to avoid the evil examples of their oppressors and those who have suffered under them.

The brethren of this mission indulge the hope that their labors there may enure to the benefit of poor plundered Africa. They suggest that Jamaica may be the most favorable door through which to enter that continent; that missionaries first acclimated to the climate of the island would be better prepared to labor in Africa than any that could be sent out from this country. They also hope to raise up in their mission-schools well-educated and pious men, natives of that tropical climatewhom the Lord will make use of in regenerating the land of their ancestors. Thus far our missionaries find too much to do in Jamaica, and become too much attached to their work, to consent to a transfer, without a more manifest indication of God's will than any they have yet seen; but we do hope, with ardent longings and many prayers, that some under their training may yet be found prepared of God to go to Africa, and plant the standard of the cross in that region and shadow of death.

More missionary help, especially that of teachers, is needed at this mission, and our brethren send to us their imploring cry. English Friends have made a donation of five pounds to each of the schools, but more teachers and larger donations are still wanted, and the brethren look to the Executive Committee for a supply. We present their appeal to the members of the Association:

"And now, dear brethren, allow us to ask briefly, What shall we do! Shall we go forward, half doing what we undertake, or do but a small work when we might as well do a large one? Shall we lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes, and move onward and upward as Providence opens the way, or shall we stand still? We say, God willing, we will not stand still. We have greatly desired of all not square to be as little burdensome to the Association as possible. We have purposed to make our mission an economical one, but the time appears to have come when the way is fully open for us greatly to increase our labors, especially in providing schools. This will involve a larger expenditure for the mission. . . . What say you! We will not be individually extravagant; we will observe the strictest economy; but may we not say,—and that, too, with your approbation and support,—'We will enlarge our borders' 1"?

FISHER, MRS. LAFPERTY, MRS. CARVER, and MRS. LEONARD.

DR. WILLIAM LEWIS and MRS. Lewis, in consequence of the feeble health of the latter, have not yet been able to return to their sintion, but remain at Belle Prairie.

Mr. and Mrs. Kinney are on their way to join the station at Cass Lake. Total, 21.

Mr. SMITH, Mr. and Mrs. Carvine, Mrs. Leonard, and Mrs. Lappeary have joined the missionaries since the commencement of the year.

Red Lake Station.—This is the oldest station connected with this mission, and the state of things there is highly encouraging. The band among whom it is located have made more improvement than any other in that region of country. Mr. Spencer, who lately visited this station, says: "It is gratifying to behold the continued and increasing attention of the people to agricultural pursuits. The crops look remarkably well."

The church established here has now in it seven native members, all of whom are reported as giving good evidence of piety. It has, during the year, lost one of its members, who died March 1st. For some weeks her mind was in great darkness and thus she apparently died. She revived, however, for a season, and expressed the utmost confidence that the Lord had forgiven and prepared her for His holy dwelling place. After this she remarked frequently that she was ready and-willing for her summons. Her last end was peace. One Indian, who was excommunicated from the church about six years since, has been, with another backslider, hopefully reclaimed, and they now give good evidence of piety.

Mr. Bardwell gives the following interesting account of an aged member of the

"The old grandmother, whom I baptized two years ago, is still living. She is nearly blind, but, so far as I can learn, is 'walking in all the ordinances of the Lord blameless.' She is the most faithful and constant attendant on the means of grace in the whole band. She often comes without any one to lead her, feeling her way with her staff, and crawling upon her hands and knees on a log across the river to get to meeting. Such is her love for the Saviour, and her anxiety to hear the truths of the gospel, that she is invariably here on the Sabbath. Last spring, her daughter, with whom she lives, went away several miles to make sugar. The old woman was obliged to go with her; but it was a great grief to her to be so far away from the mission that she could not attend meeting. A desperate effort was made to get her to join her heathen relatives in the medicine dance while she was away. They thought that if she was only away from the watch-care of the missionaries a little while, they might succeed; but she stood firm, and resisted all their temptations. They finally gave it up, and concluded that she was truly converted. She was overjoyed to get back again under the wing of the mission."

A late letter from the mission says of her: "Old Dorcas is yet alive, but so feeble and blind that she cannot come to meeting any more; but she tries to keep the Sabbath, and to unite with her fellow Christians in worship, by kneeling down in the lodge for prayer, whenever she hears the bell ring for religious meeting."

There was a manual labor boarding-school commenced at Red Lake last fall, which now numbers twelve, and more are to be received this fall. For $25, with a little aid from Government, a child can be supported in it for a year. Mr. Bardwell has obtained pledges for the support of eleven children for five years or more. He says:

"I think this a very important movement, and should be glad to carry it into operation at each station. If children can be taken under the entire control of the mission, and subjected to a healthful discipline, it will be much easier to mould their characters aright than when they remain with their parents. If they depend upon them for food, they are very irregular in their attendance. When their food is exhausted, they are obliged to remove for a time to some other place where they can fish and hunt, and will be absent from one to six months, and by the time the children can enter school again they have forgotten nearly all they had learned. By this process they become discouraged, and much of the labor of the missionary is lost."

The mission regard it as much wiser to educate the children in the Indian country, where the teachers can be elevating the mass of the people at the same time, than to bring them out among the whites to be educated. They say:

"Where the latter course is pursued, the mass of the people remain in iguorance and degradation; and when their children are educated and return to their homes, they have no companionship with their former friends, nor their friends with them. Every influence is calculated to drag them down. I have never known an unconverted white man, however well educated, to withstand that influence for any considerable length of time, and we cannot reasonably expect nativeste do so. If they are educated among their own people, and in the mean time properly trained to labor, the school will naturally have an influence upon the mass, and any improvement made will be more likely to be permanent."

Great suffering from hunger is anticipated in the Indian country during the coming winter. It is said that the water has not been so high within the recollection of the oldest Indian as in the present season, and that probably no rice will be gathered this year. From this scarcity it is hoped the Red Lake band will be exempt. The mission letter says:

"The Indians are cultivating more land than any other band in this part of the country. Their crops look well. It is quite cheering to see how much improvement they have made this spring. Some have enlarged their gardens to twice their former size, and the band generally have done twice the usual amount of labor. We trust there are better days at hand. There is a steady increase of interest manifested, and they begin to see the necessity of cultivating the soil for a living."

Lucy, a converted Chippewa young woman, is an assistant at this station. She has been six years in the mission, and is sister to Hannah, who died at Oberlin. She is now in her twentieth year, and is a good interpreter, a valuable helper, and decided Christian.

Cass Lake.—Mr. Barnard and wife have been almost alone at this station during the greater part of the year. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher removed from here to aid in opening a new station contemplated on Red Lake, and Mr. Spees came into the States for the improvement of his health. Mr. Barnard has got his printing press in operation, purchased by funds contributed mostly by Sunday-schools, and has printed in Ojibue a little book of one hundred and four pages, which he thinks will be of great advantage to missionaries learning the language. The many demands on his time have prevented him doing much in this way.

No statistical report of the mission has been received. The school was suspended for the want of a teacher. February 5th, Mr. Barnard reported the hopeful conversion of a young Indian who had been a short time a member of his family.

The station at Lake Winnepeg has been relinquished. Soon after its establishment, in 1850, it was found that there were in the band settled there some who were willing to annoy the mission all in their power, by pilfering from them, and in one or two instances by killing their cattle.

The chiefs promised to restrain these evil-minded ones, but they were either unable or unwilling to do so. When Mr. Bardwell was there, in 1851, he met the Indians in council, and it was hoped that the measures then adopted would prevent farther depredation; but instead of this, things waxed worse and worse, until nothing was safe. The Indians freely confessed that all were united in the thing, and their only plea was, that inasmuch as some among them would steal at any rate, the odium of which all must share alike, they concluded that all also might as well partake of the benefit.

In communicating the decision of the mission to relinquish their efforts at Lake Winnepeg, Mr. Spencer writes:

"Do you ask, in view of these apparently disastrous results, if we regret having gone thither? By no means. Why should we! We felt, and still believe, that the Lord first put it into our hearts, and that he has been with us even to the end. Having done what we could, our mission is closed. They have had the gospel faithfully preached to them, and at the great day of final account our skirts will be clear of their blood. But who can tell what will then appear as the result! Who can tell but that the seed may yet spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God! That much good has been accomplished in various ways, we are well assured."

Wabashing.—At the recommendation of Mr. Bardwell, the mission were authorized to open a new station among a band of Indians at Wabashing, on the opposite side of Red Lake, and about fifteen miles from our mission. The Indians in council agreed to give to the mission as much land as was wanted for cultivation, a place to get timber for building and firewood, and a place to cut hay, get water, and catch fish, and to secure to the missionaries all the rights that any of the Indians had. They promised also to restrain their children, and not allow them to steal; and to assist the missionaries in putting up their buildings.

In consequence of the sickness of Mr. Fisher and his wife, the establishment of this station has been delayed, and it is doubtful whether the brethren will be able to complete their buildings so as to commence operations there this fall Mr. Coe and Mr. Carver had been over to assist the Indians in ploughing their lands.

Mr. and Mrs. Tanner, who were connected with the station at Lake Winnepeg at the time of its relinquishment, have since been laboring at Pembina, a settlement on the extreme northern boundary of the United States territories. Mr. Barnard has been strongly urged to establish himself there, and is inclined to do so, so soon as his present place can be supplied. He says:

"There is a large field opening west of us in the region of Lord Selkirk's settlement, where brother Tanner is now laboring among the halt-breeds and Indians. According to his testimony and that of Rev. Mr. Black, Presbyterian minister of the settlement, much good might be done there, could this field be taken soon. The accounts from these brethren are very similar to those given by the brethren in Africa. Roman Catholics are anxious to hear the pure gospel, and want their children to be trained in a Protestant school. They literally follow brother Tanner around from house to house, and gather in crowds to hear the words of life, notwithstanding the anathemas of their priest. From all we can learn we are strongly of opinion that something ought to be done, and that speedily. . . . In speaking of this field, I do not wish to be understood to say or think that there are no obstacles in the way of the gospel. Satan will dispute every inch of his territory."

He adds, that the brethren at Red Lake agree with him in his estimate of the importance of this field, and of the expediency of immediately occupying it. He will probably remove there.

Post-offices have been established at Red Lake and Cass Lake, and Messrs.
Wright and Barnard are appointed postmasters.

One of our missionaries has often been asked whether the Indians ever ate human flesh. He relates the following facts:

"There is an old Indian woman and one of her daughters here now on a visit, who, with her husband, son-in-law, and daughter, killed and ate fifteen persons last winter, not many days' march from this place. What makes the act more horrible is the fact that most of the persons eaten were her own children and grandchildren, and that it was done when they could get fish to eat, and therefore were not in a state of starvation. The report is that the old man and one of the sons, who were engaged in this cannibalism, have been recently killed by other Indians, to prevent their going still farther in this work. The surviving daughter, who helped to eat a sister and her children, and all her own children, has threatened to eat some of those who killed her father. That daughter is here. She and her mother have been to our house to-day."

CANADA MISSIONS.

The amount received for these missions during the past year is $605.58, and the expenditure $1,441.14.

Since the date of our last report, Rev. E. E. Kirkland has received an appointment as missionary at New-Canaan, C. W., and Miss Lyon as teacher at the same place. Miss Shadd has received an appointment as a teacher at Windsor, C. W.; and Rev. D. Hotchkiss was dismissed, at his own request, last June.

Mr. Wilson reports that a large part of his time, and much of the time of his wife and her sister, has been devoted to administering to the temporal and spiritual necessities of fugitives from the United States. He agrees in part with the intelligent and philanthropic ministers and agents who have strongly recommended a discontinuance of the practice of sending clothing from the States for the supply of fugitives and others, but states that so far as his district is concerned, the "winter calls for aid are numerous, and some of them very affecting," and he has frequent opportunities of aiding the poor and suffering by distributing among them wood, breadment, flour, bedding, and articles of clothing. He says:

"Occasion for the bestowal of charity upon them in any form has greatly diminished. We think it best that fugitives should be well clothed and cared for during their transition state from slavery to freedom, and then, with but few exceptions, be left to rely on their own energies and take care of themselves.

"I succeeded, a few months ago, in organizing 'the Refugee Slaves' Friend Society of St. Catharine's,' which embraces many of the most respectable citizens of the place. Though of but recent organization, it promises much good. For the relief of suffering we think it right to depend more on local charity, and less on aid from abroad, as the giver and receiver are mutually blessed.

"During the month of July twelve colored persons, of both sexes and all ages, formerly slaves, were brought here by a slaveholder from North Carolina, and committed to my care till they could be permanently settled. Their master died about a year ago, and set them free by will, and left considerable property for their benefit. Their prospects are encouraging. Some twelve or fourteen colored people arrived here a few days ago."

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT.

He has labored as an assistant preacher at St. Catharine's, where there has been a revival of religion the past winter, and a number of souls, chiefly in the African Methodist Society-forty, as is thought-have been hopefully converted to God. Mrs Wilson and her sister, the latter giving her services gratuitously, have taught a school during the past year with encouraging success.

Mr. Hotchkiss, instead of confining his labor to Amherstburg and vicinity, as in previous years, was instructed to visit several places where he could gather congregations to listen to his instructions, to which he preached frequently, in turn. During a portion of the year his daughter taught a small school in the neighborhood of Amherstburg. His health becoming impaired in consequence of his arduous labors and many discouragements, he solicited a dismission, which the Executive Committee granted.

Mr. Kirkland was appointed at the commencement of the year. He had already spent several years in Canada, at Dawn Mills, Queen's Bush, and New-Canaanlaboring with Mr. and Mrs. Brooks, and nearly all the missionaries in Canada, after leaving the Mission Institute in Illinois, where he had been a fellow-student with Mr. George Thompson, of the Mendi Mission. In describing his field of labor, Mr. Kirkland says:

"In three or four townships in this vicinity there are as many thousand colored people. This is, without doubt, the best part of Canada for the fugitive. There are many of them scattered among the white people, renting or leasing farms, and working as hired men. In several places in these townships so many are in one neighborhood that a school of from twenty to fifty could be gathered; and in two or three places as many as seventy scholars can be obtained within a convenient distance. There are four or five schools, in two of which there are colored teachers sustained by the people. I think that more than one half, and perhaps three fourths of the children of these townships do not attend school. There is certainly a call for schools, and I am in hopes some plan may be devised to get a larger number in op-

In a short letter he writes as follows:

"There has not been as bright a prospect of usefulness for years past as at present. Some of the prejudices that existed appear to be giving way, and new doors are opening for the preaching of the gospel. Our settlement is rapidly enlarging, some of the settlers fresh from the land of bondage. A large number have come from slavery recently; I think as large as during the same time any previous year.

"The Fugitive Slave Law appears to be a dead letter in its operation, judging from the number who get safe to Canada. The abolitionists, by their kindness during their flight, have secured to a great extent their confidence. This prepares them to receive the gospel from the missionaries, when they get to this asylum of the oppressed; and were it not for the counteracting influence of aspiring leaders who prejudice their minds, much good might be done.

"The fugitives are evidently progressing in intelligence and in means of acquiring The lugitives are evidently progressing in intelligence and in means of acquiring a livelihood. There is comparatively little suffering among them. The demand for schools is increasing. I think there is no way that so permanent a good can be accomplished among this people as to pour light and knowledge into the minds of the rising generation. There is a call for several efficient teachers, the coming winter, in this region. Our school in this place is prospering, and we expect an increase in numbers the coming winter. numbers the coming winter. The Lord sparing my life and health, I hope to accomplish more the year to come than in any year since I came into this part of the field. We know of teachers who are willing to come to Canada, if they can be sus-

During the past year Miss Mary A. Teall has derived her support principally from this Association, and has labored with her sister. Miss Susan Teall, in its service. They teach a school that was commenced by Miss Coburn, afterwards Mrs. BrooksThis school is composed of white and colored scholars. Up to the summer of 1850 they were all colored children, with two or three exceptions. As the colored people began to move away, in order to obtain lands at a cheaper rate, the number of colored scholars diminished, and their places were supplied by the children of white settlers, most of whom are as needy as the colored. It is obviously for the advantage of both white and colored that they should be taught in the same schools, and Miss Teall says, "I feel just as much in the path of duty in laboring for the children of the destitute white settlers as for the children of the colored." She adds: "During the winter of 1850-51, our school numbered eighty scholars, thirty of whom were colored children; and during the summer of 1851 there were forty-two scholars. of whom only eleven were colored. The last winter we have had forty-three, of whom seventeen were colored."

Miss Teall, writing for her sister and herself, gives a very gratifying report of their labors and their success, and we take pleasure in extracting the following par-

"In connection with the school, I commenced a Sabbath school in February, 1849, and have continued it ever since, both summer and winter. Sometimes it has numbered between one and two hundred; in the winters generally about sixty, some-times more. In it much good has been done, we humbly trust. Much seriousness has been manifested, and between twenty and thirty of the scholars have professed a change of heart. Some parents, and in some cases whole families, have entered the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour; in all, more than forty have joined the church. There are others who we have reason to believe have passed from death unto life, who have not made a public profession of their faith.

"We have also a female prayer-meeting every week, in which we trust much good has been done.

Since I came here, more than two hundred have learned to read; many have learned some of the common branches, and some, all of those usually studied in common schools. Some children, whose parents have removed to a great distance in the interior, have travelled a hundred miles back to me, through the forest, to get books and clothes. In some cases I have been under the painful necessity of sending them empty away, having nothing to give.

"Besides the care and responsibility of the schools, meetings, visiting the sick, &c., I have taken in little girls to board (who could not otherwise get in school) more or less for two years. Last winter our family numbered ten. The parents pay as far as they are able, some in part and some the whole; but most of them we have boarded gratuitously, trusting in the Lord. The timely assistance rendered by my sister, since her appointment, has kept me from sinking under the work which I had undertaken to do. Perhaps I erred in undertaking so much, for our Master requires no more of us than we are able to bear. But when I read the words of our blessed Saviour, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature,' I feel to wish that this body was made of iron, and these nerves of steel, and that I could have the privilege of wearing them out in the vineyard of the Lord.

"Some of my friends have asked why I wished to remain in Canada. My answer has been, 'There I have suffered most, and there I have enjoyed most;' and I have said, 'There let me die.' Yet I trust that I am prepared to say, 'Not my will, but thine be done,' O God. If my work is done here, and the Lord calls elsewhere, I can now say, 'Here, Lord, am I; send me.' When I first entered this field I said I was willing to be any thing, to do any thing, or to go any where for Christ's sake.

Though I understand more fully than ever the meaning of those important words, yet I can still adopt them as the language of my heart.

"It is my wish now to secure my place, enlarge the house, repair the schoolhouse, and make the station a permanent one. To do this will require funds. If our friends will lend us a helping hand this year and next, I think after that the Mt. Pleasant Mission School will become self-sustaining, and be an honor to society, and a blessing to the world."

Miss Shadd is a colored teacher. She had taught in New-York and elsewhere and was recommended by intelligent colored ministers in that city as an experienced and successful teacher. Her reports have been full and satisfactory. She says:

"The children make encouraging progress in the every-day school, and in the Sabbath-school there is a large attendance. In both schools we labor disadvantageously, from a want of books. Bibles and other suitable books are needed. The parents have purchased a few. I am not really in favor of begging any thing for the people, for I think they might procure a sufficient supply of books for both schools. Though poor, they are by no means utterly destitute, as some interested persons untruly represent. But, like the parents of Sunday-school scholars in other places, they do not appreciate the necessity of an adequate supply of books, or keep up with the progress of the age. Books are sent here for schools by benevolent persons, but I have not been able to obtain any of them.

"My engagement with the Association is for one year. My desire is to labor here many years, if it be God's will, provided the opposition of malicious persons does not drive me away. There is prejudice and misrepresentation even among those who should sympathize with and aid me.

"At this time (July 20th) the number belonging to the school is thirty. The average attendance for some time past has been twenty-two. The children love the school, yet they are often detained from it by their parents, who are absent at work, &c. So far as I can learn, there is no abatement of interest on the part of parents or children. In addition to the usual routine of grammar, geography, &c., I have instructed a few of the first class in history and botany.

"The school has been open to all needy children, without regard to complexion, from its commencement. We have scholars of all complexions, from pure African to true Caucasian.

"Our Sabbath-school and Bible-class are flourishing. Recent misrepresentations in relation to the school have called forth an expression of gratitude to your Association, and of confidence in me, from the people here, both hearty and general, in the form of resolutions, calculated, it is thought, to promote the cause of missions and education in this quarter."

There has been a large increase of the colored population of Canada during the last year, and its importance as a field of missionary labor is manifested. New applications for appointments will be laid before the Executive Committee at its next

The missionary in Canada, finds many whom he labors to bless who regard his efforts with great disfavor. There is a class of ignorant preachers, and self-constituted collecting agents, who, to retain their own influence, are laboring, some of them avowedly, to drive every white missionary from the colony. The influence of this class of men is very extensive, and that their efforts to obtain the entire possession of the field have not been successful is not owing to their want of energy. Although these things are discouraging, they should not abate our warm interest in behalf of the people. The follower of Christ should graduate his labors by the wants of a people, rather than the rewards they render. It is gratifying to know that there are many men of piety and intelligence in Canada who fully appreciate the labors of our missionaries, and cooperate heartily with them.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

MAKAWAO, EAST MAUL-Missionaries, Rev. J. S. GREEN and MRS. GREEN.

WE have not received any statistical report of Mr. Green's labors, and the condition of his charge, but his letters during the year have been numerous, and the following facts have been gleaned from them:

It will be twenty-five years on the 3d of November next, since Mr. Green embarked at Boston for the Sandwich Islands as a missionary, under the care of the American Board. For the last six years he has been connected with our Association, having, previously to the formation of our Society, withdrawn from the patronage of the Board under which he was sent out, hoping, with the blessing of God, to derive his support from the people to whom he ministered. His relation to his church and congregation remained unchanged by his connection with us.

For some years past, the native population of these islands has been diminishing in numbers; this diminution is still, to some extent, going on. In October last Mr. Green gave an account of the examination of schools at Makawao, by the Superintendent of schools, who reported with other statistics fourteen deaths during the quarter, and only six births. We have no means of determining whether this proportion is maintained throughout the year, and in all the islands, but we hope not. Fears are entertained that in process of time the native population may become nearly extinct, and the islands come into the possession of foreigners. Already the American element in that population is becoming so large; that annexation to the United States is freely talked of, and members of our National Senate already pledge themselves to vote against the exclusion of slavery from it. The importance of the islands would not be diminished by such an event, nor would it be less desirable than it now is to sustain men there, who, like our missionary, would faithfully proclaim the whole counsel of God, and warn the people and the rulers against incurring Divine displeasure, by consenting to make merchandise of His people. The apprehension of such an event as possible gives additional strength to the argument in favor of increasing the number of faithful missionaries who "have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons."

Mr. Green says:

"This group must and will be one of great importance, not merely on account of its climate and soil, but on account of its locality. From being at the ends of the earth, this little group is now well nigh in the middle, and must become a stopping-place, an inn for the multitudes of vessels which will hereafter traverse these waters from Asia to the western shores of North America. There can be little doubt that these islands will teem with a busy and thriving population ere many years shall have passed away, provided the right sort of men settle among us, and a good moral tone pervade the nation. Shall we have the right sort of men! We have but few such yet, depend upon it."

At different times through the year, he has requested that additional help be sent him. He says:

"I ought to have a helper or two. . . I have three places where we need preaching every Lord's day. We want men who will be willing to stay, and keep their children here till they die, or till the people become extinct."

In another letter he repeats his desire, and points out a field which a neighboring missionary wanted to place under his care. He proposes to accept the field offered, attach a part of his present field to it, and look to the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association for a pastor for it.

The native population of the island is now estimated at 75,000, and Mr. Green thinks they would already be supplied with a ministry from among the educated children of missionaries there, but for two mistakes into which most of the early missionaries fell. One was sending their children home to the United States for an education, instead of keeping them with a people among whom they should labor, where they could become acquainted with their manners and customs, their degradation and their wants; and where they could enjoy that affectionate intercourse, and the benefit of the godly example of their missionary parents, that would qualify them to be laborers in that part of the Lord's vineyard. The other was in not allewing their children to learn the native language, thus excluding them from all the instrumentalities employed for the conversion and sanctification of the native community. To such an extent has this mistake been carried, that a missionary there assigns as a reason for the removal of his children to this country, "that the children might have the benefit of the regular preaching of the gospel on the Sabbath." There remains yet the necessity of sending missionaries from this country to the Sandwich Ialands.

Mr. Green receives assistance, in some portions of his field, from the labors of David Malo and Daniel II, two native preachers, of whom he speaks very highly.

In relation to the general prosperity of his mission, Mr. Green at one time writes:

"Things with us are in as prosperous a state as could be expected. We have on the one hand evidence of the gracious assistance of Him who is with his people even to the end of the world. Many are coming forward desirous of uniting with the church, and among these are many who have been entangled in the snares of the Papacy. One Mormon came forward at the last meeting of the church. On the other hand, the adherents of the Pope are very busy, and the Mormons I fear will do much hurt. True, they have not done much in my field as yet, as they seem to have plenty of work elsewhere. They will do all in their power to ensuare our people; and will it be wonderful, when so many in England and the United States are duped by such a deceiver as Smith and his disciples, that many of our simple people should be taken by their craft and ruined?"

At another time Mr. Green speaks of having received seven members to his church at Makawao, and afterwards of having propounded many on that Sabbath for communion with the church.

The people of Mr. G.'s charge have been engaged in building a house of worship. During the year previous they had contributed $800 for this purpose, and were expecting to do as much this year, but on account of the great scarcity of money, it was given in the form of building materials, stone, lime, sand, lumber, &c.

The influx of foreigners, and the speculating mania which had exerted so deleterious an influence on the people through the preceding year, have decreased. Many foreigners have already left the islands. The possession of the lands, by purchase, is again within the reach of the people, and Mr. Green is using his influence to have them secure for themselves small homesteads, and cultivate the soil. This he deems of great importance to the welfare of the islands.

The monthly concert of prayer for the downfall of slavery throughout the world is regularly observed by these churches.

As an exhibition of the feeling which a godly missionary, in foreign lands, indulges in view of this great evil of his own nation, we copy his record of one of these occasions:

"Prayer-meeting at an early hour for the enslaved of the United States and other lands. The sympathy of my people in behalf of the oppressed is strong, and I cannot but hope and believe that this Christian sympathy, and the prayers offered by the poor of Hawaii, and the aid afforded in the cause of emancipation, will be graciously acknowledged by the Lord Jesus, as contributing to break the oppressor's cruel yoke from off the neck of the down-trodden in Christian lands.

"" Down-trodden in Christian lands!" How exceedingly grieved and ashamed am I to use this expression in speaking to my people, the lately degraded and oppressed Hawaians; and yet how affectingly true, particularly as applied to the United States, my own dear native land; a land so boastful of its civil and religious freedom; a land of light, of Bibles, and schools, and churches, and revivals, and benevolent institutions of almost every name. And yet, oh! the unparalleled inconsistency, and the unutterable meanness, with well high every sixth man and woman a slaye! a chattel!

the whole nation, so to speak, on the neck of prostrate slaves! A nation of freemen, escaped themselves from a yoke of bondage, at the price of blood and treasure yet riveting a yoke a thousand times more heavy upon some millions of imbecile men and women, and framing laws to prevent these unhappy creatures from escaping, which involve in shame and peril every man in the community. And this state of things regarded approvingly by multitudes who call themselves the ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ, a part of whose mission was to proclaim 'liberty to the captive.' Well may we cry, 'O Lord, how long, how long!' "I am deeply alarmed when I think of this state of things, and I cannot refrain

"I am deeply alarmed when I think of this state of things, and I cannot refrain from entreating the friends of the Lord Jesus to arouse themselves from their stupor, and cry mightily to God in behalf of the nation. Plead with Him to open the eyes of all, both at the South and North, both rulers and ruled, to the meanness and wickedness of the whole system of domestic slavery, and to affect the hearts of all in such a manner as shall produce speedy repentance and thorough reformation. Who can tell but God may yet turn from His fierce anger and save the land i"

The church at Makawao have manifested their interest in this cause, by sending a donation of about a hundred dollars to the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. Other churches on the islands have also sent liberal donations to the same cause.

That it may not be thought that the missionary, in his zeal for his native country, is unmindful of the evils by which he is surrounded, we copy from the same letter the following resolutions passed at a temperance celebration in his field of labor:

"Resolved, That we tender to our King, Kamehameha III., the sympathies of an affectionate people, congratulating him on his deliverance from a foreign yoke, on the continuance of peace and prosperity in his dominions, and for all that is pleasant in his circumstances and prospects, while we beseech God to save him from sin, and make him a holy and happy ruler.

"3d. As every man must give account of himself to God, rulers and ruled answer, each for himself: therefore,

"Resolved, That we will not follow the evil example of any ruler, but will stand fast by the Word of God, which is given us for our directory, and imitate the holy example of men of every age.

example of men of every age.

"4th. Aware of the distressing fact that our islands are fast depopulating, and that unless the Lord shall graciously interpose, our island home will soon be transferred to other hands, and we, and our children, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to lordly hand-holders; therefore,

"Resolved, That we will awaken without delay to a sense of our danger; that we will cry to God for help; that we will purchase lands and cultivate them; that we will build us better houses and procuse more comforts; that we will seek knowledge from the Word of God and other sources; in a word, that we will do all in our power to become an intelligent, industrious and happy community."

SIAM MISSION.

BANGKOK, SIAM.—Missionaries, REV. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D.; REV. L. B. LANE, M.D. REV. J. SILSBY; MRS. BRADLEY, MRS. LANE, MRS. SILSBY. Total, 6.

During the last year, all the providences of God relative to this mission, and his disposal of their temporal affairs, have been very encouraging. Apparently, all that was hoped at the commencement of the year, from the accession to the throne of a sovereign more enlightened and more liberal in his policy than his predecessor, has been realized. His promises of toleration and encouragement have been fulfilled, and our missionaries have found no obstacle, other than those that are commended to the depraved human heart when fortified by blind superstition, in bringing the gospel of the Son of God to bear upon the minds and consciences of the people of Siam.

It is now more than a year since the King of Siam sent a messenger to Dr. Bradley. inquiring whether it would be practicable for one or more of the ladies connected with the Protestant missions to instruct a class of young princesses of the palace in the English language. The question being brought before a meeting of the three missions, the following resolution was passed:

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"Resolved, That we think it advisable, so far as is consistent with our other duties as missionaries, to comply with the King's request for a female teacher to instruct the ladies of the royal palace in the English language, and that the subject be now referred to the ladies to make such arrangements as they think proper.

An arrangement was subsequently made to have one lady from each of the three missions go in rotation to the palace, to perform this service. The time spent daily in teaching is about three hours. This duty, though arduous is not regarded as being aside from their appropriate calling. In entering the palace, they do not lay aside their character as Christian missionaries. By precept and example they endeavor to impart spiritual instruction to those with whom they are thus providentially brought into contact; and they hope for the blessing of God upon their labors. An incidental advantage resulting from the opening of that class is the assurance given to the people, that the King is favorably disposed toward the missionaries. The public mind is thus in a manner prepared to inquire after and receive the instruction they communicate.

Change of Location.—The brethren of the mission have long been desirous of changing their location to some other part of the city. Their reasons were briefly these: 1. The rent they were paying for their land was extravagant. They thought they might save one half of it. 2. The river was gradually encroaching upon them, and would soon render some of their buildings unsafe. 3. The place was inconveniently small for the buildings they needed. 4. Their children were then exposed to influences likely to operate very unfavorably upon them. And lastly, comparing the expenses of remaining with those of a removal and the erection of new buildings, they found there would be a considerable pecuniary saving in taking the latter step. All their negotiations for the purpose of obtaining the place they had selected failed, and feeling they had done what they could they quietly awaited the developments of Divine Providence. At this juncture of affairs, one of our missionaries was called into the palace, and he took that occasion to petition the King's interference, to secure for them a new and more desirable location. The next day an officer of the government sent for the brethren to hear the answer of the King. More was given them than they had asked. Instead of securing for them the rental of the place for which they had petitioned, the King had given orders to purchase for them that which they had first sought for, and secured it to them for less than half the rent they had previously been paying. A subsequent mission letter says:

"We obtained possession of the place on the 23d ult., (Feb.,) when we gave and received all the usual writings of agreement and promise, engaging on our part to pay an annual rent of 320 ticals, ($192.) and the Prime Minister, in behalf of his Majesty the King of Siam, promising that the missionaries of the American Missionary Association shall be allowed to use the premises described in the agreement as they please, and have the undisturbed occupancy of it 'as long as the afore-mentioned'rent shall be paid, and the mission shall conduct itself in accordance with the laws of the country, as it has therefore done."

Since the commencement of the year, the brethren of the mission have largely increased their direct labors for the religious instruction and conversion of the people. Dr. Lane and Professor Silsby have both commenced preaching in the Siamese language. Religious services have been maintained in the mission chapel on the Sabbath, and occasionally during the week; a part of the time by Rev. Mr. Mattoon of the Presbyterian mission, and latterly by Messrs, Lane and Silsby, alternately Dr. Bradley's practice has been to preach twice, and often three times, on the Sabbath, to such audiences as he could collect in the courts, or in the priests' rooms in one of three temples within eight or ten minutes' walk of the mission premises; one of which contains five hundred priests of Buddh. He has also preached to several large assemblies within the palace walls. These occasions were important, chiefly from the fact that his audiences were composed of persons collected there from many parts of the kingdom.

Dr. Lane has engaged largely in itinerant labors, in which he spends a portion of each day, leaving home early in the morning, in his cance, traversing some of the innumerable canals leading out of the river, and stopping for conversation and the distribution of books, at the wats or temples and the bans (small villages) scattered all along their banks. Amidst much that was discouraging, he found many things to cheer him in his labors and inspire him with hope. The tendency of the gospel to purify the heart seemed sometimes to be understood. Said one man to him. "I suppose this new religion is true. I have long thought that the religion that should make the heart clean is the true religion." Often, however, very often, was he driven to his closet almost in despair, there with strong crying and prayers, to petition God for his help, and thus to gain strength for another day's labor. Professor Silsby has also engaged in somewhat similar labor.

Present indications are that Siam is emphatically open to the preaching of the gospel, as open as any nation can be until there begins to be a turning to the Lord on the part of its rulers. The encouraging aspects are thus presented:

"1st. The reigning sovereigns of Siam have within the last year publicly declared, at home and abroad, that their subjects shall have freedom to follow the dictates of their own consciences in all religious matters. 2d. They have granted much more freedom to missionaries than they formerly had, allowing them larger places of abode, and the privilege of travelling and preaching with perfect freedom wherever they please within their realm. 3d. They have done much to break down the barriers that have heretofore kept the numerous families of the princes, nobles and lords aloof from missionary influence. This they have done by inviting our wives to teach within the sacred inclosures of the royal palace, and by doing away with the old custom of requiring Europeans and Americans, when they approach them, to crouch and sit down afar off on a lower platform than themselves. 4th. They have caused much more respect to be manifested and felt towards missionaries than has before been known in Siam. 5th. All in authority, as well as the common people, feel themselves to be perfectly free in their intercourse with us, and are to an encouraging extent disposed to avail themselves of the advantages of this freedom, and hence visit us very much more than they did a year ago. 6th. It is to me, and I think I may say to all the missionaries now on the field, very evident that the preaching of the gospel in Siam is doing a great work in preparing the way of the Lord."

A reform is going on among the Buddhists themselves. The new school, of which His Majesty is the leader, are breaking away from the profound atheism of their system, and contending for the reality of the existence of a living, intelligent, almighty, and all-wise Creator and Preserver of all things, to whom alone supreme devotion is due. Whether this is, as the missionaries believe, a doctrine foreign to Buddhism and introduced by the gospel light which has for twenty years been shining in that land; or whether, as the priests contend, it is an original doctrine of that superstition, now anew brought forward after the sleep of ages; it must be regarded as a favorable preparation for the promulgation of that clearer light developed in the gospel. The school holding and teaching this doctrine is now in the ascendant, and the doctrine is so generally received that the denial of it is regarded among the Siamese themselves as an evidence of the grossest ignorance.

Applications for Christian tracts at the mission premises have been increasing throughout the year, and the mission have used the sum appropriated for that purpose in printing portions of the New Testament and histories drawn from the Old. They have felt themselves straitened for want of more means to be used in this way, being often compelled to deny applicants when they had the utmost confidence that the books sought for would be carefully and candidly read. In view of these circumstances one of our missionaries writes:

"At this moment the fountain of my feelings is all broken up. I have been sitting for an hour in silent contemplation. The thought that most distresses me is, why is this great people permitted to go to death with none to tell them of the way of life! Why is it! The Church have long been praying, 'O Lord, prepare thy way among the heathen.' God has prepared the way here. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few, and these are not well equipped. As I go about from place to place putting forth efforts, as best I can, for the salvation of this people, I am forced to deny many an one a book, who might profitably receive one. A Gospel can be prepared here for distribution for the sum of four cents, yes, for less than that, and now I have not fifty copies of any Gospel at hand. It is about an hour since I wrote the last sentence, and within that time more than fifty persons (an uncommon thing) have come upon my verandah and begged for a single book. Many of them asked for the secred Word, but I could not spare any for them. Twenty-five dollars will print and bind more than six hundred copies of either of the Gospels, and how many, how many thousands of professed Christians could add $25 to their present contribution, and yet not exercise the self-denial and exertion they demand of their missionaries. And how many churches could add to their monthly contributions fifty per cent, and yet live better than they do now."

Siam is open for the proclamation of the gospel. Our missionaries go up and down through the land, every where preaching Christ, without let or hindrance; but they are few and feeble, and the work is great before them. One of them says:

"There are many populous towns in this kingdom, at which, we think, missionaries ought to be located. As, for example, the old city, some sixty miles north of this place; Pétchabúri, one huddred miles southwest; Mékl'long, some seventy miles west; Ratpri, some distance up the Mékl'long river; and Bangpasoï, some fifty miles east, upon the gulf; and other places might be mentioned, at each of which two or more missionaries could find abundant opportunities to expend all the labor they could put forth. And in this city, with a population variously estimated from 250,000 to 500 000, how inadequate would be our force, if we numbered ten times as many as we do."

Another adda:

"Oh that we had many more laborers in this field! It is open on all sides, and almost every department of usefulness is lifting up its cry for help from Christian lands. If there were now on the ground two men, with their wives, impressed with the conviction that God calls them to the educational department of missionary labor, I see no reason to doubt that they would find their way opened to lay the foundation of an academy that would ere long exert a powerful and happy influence in this kingdom. For aught that I can see, preachers of the gospel may now go and form stations any where within it and its tributaries. But a few months since, this would not have been permitted. Oh, how important it is that the Church of Christ should now promptly enter the doors the Lord has opened! But the fact is, we have now in the field only seven male and six female missionaries for the two millions of the Simmese; only one man and, his wife for the million of the Chinese; and no one for the two hundred thousand Laos in Siam Proper, and the millions who have become tributary to Siam. We have no one for the great people of the Cambodians; no one for the many thousands of peculiarly accessible Peguans; and no one for the many thousands of the Malays and Cochin-Chinese, Karens, &c., all of whom are either subjects or tributaries of this government. Oh, when will the people of God become as wise in their generations as the men of the world?"

Although our missionaries regard Siam as thus open to their labors, they are far from regarding the hindrances to the gospel as all removed. The government is a despotism, making many exactions from the people for the support of Buddhism, and constraining its subjects to a service inconsistent with Christian duty. The gospel could not, therefore, have extensive triumphs without coming into conflict with its claims, and exciting its opposition. One of our missionaries, in allusion to these things, sava:

"You, who know how tenaciously the slaveholder of America clings to his means of wealth, may readily conceive of some of the difficulties that may yet interpose in the way of a gospel that insists on the great law of reciprocity between men—that makes no compromise with oppressors, but demands that the oppressed be let go free."

The missionaries are not yet able to report results of their labors in the conversion of souls. They say:

"We are greatly tried and distressed by this fact, but not discouraged. Our hopes are laid up in God. Our confidence is that he will, ere long, reveal his great power and mercy in saving these miserable Buddhists. Our circumstances call loudly upon us to walk more closely with God, so that we may, in his infinite mercy and condescension, be allowed to take hold of his almighty arm, with the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous man, which availeth much. Let not the hands of our friends hang down, in their efforts to sustains us by their prayers; for let them be assured by the promise of our common Lord and Master, that, in due time, they and we shall all reap, if we faint not. And what shall that harvest, be?"

But they are not discouraged. Though they feel that the gospel has a great work to do in Siam, they also feel that, under God, it is fully adequate to the task and that the time has fully come for its extensive application. Two of these mission families had, at the date of their latest letters, been less than two years in Siam, yet they say they can see that "The gospel is working a gradual yet perceptible change upon the minds of many of this people; and although we would carefuly avoid statements that might excite hopes not warranted by facts, yet we do meet with numbers who seem convinced that the religion of Jesus is true. This fact seems to be an earnest of what will come, when the Church shall bring all her tithes into the store-house, and prove him therewith, if the Lord will not pour out a blessing."

The Executive Committee are strongly inclined to accede to the wishes of their missionaries, and strengthen their operations in Siam. The providence of God has gone before them; in answer to prayer he has removed many obstacles out of the way of our missionaries, and invites them onward in their work. If the Son of God is more powerful than Guadama, if the religion of Christ is better adapted to the wants of man than the superstitions of Buddh, and it would be blasphemy to doubt it, Christianity must triumph, and Siam will yield her quota to the blood-washed throng that shall swell the Redeemer's praise.

Mr. Fee, of Keutucky, has maintained his position with indomitable Christian courage, and with unusual prudence and sound judgment. From his letters we gather the following information and reflections;

"Oh that I had some brother in the ministry here with whom I could sympathize and who would help me! I am pressed beyond measure, yet not 'cast down." Satan, with his emissaries, is busy. Lies are reported and published against me.

Obstacles are placed in my way, and in that of all my friends. Even some of the slaves, like the Israelites of old, complain of me as making their condition worse They are made to believe this by their masters and their pro-slavery allies."

"An elder in the Presbyterian (O. S.) church sold one of his slaves last Saturday—a sprightly boy, with good habits, about eighteen years of age, born and brought up in his own house. The boy would ride his master's horses nights, which is a common practice among slaves, and was trying to make some money to buy, as he said, a new coat. His master attempted to conquer him by severe whipping, and finally sold him to a regular negro trader, who handcuffed and took him away. I have had a talk with the elder since; he pleads the Bible in defense.

"Another elder in the same church took one of his slaves a few Sabbaths since, and lodged him in jail, some five or six miles distant, and after a few days sold him. Another elder in the same church has sold several slaves. No notice is taken of these things. Yet Old School Presbyterians of the South are represented in the North as not separating families, but as treating them quite patriarchally. The church of which these members and clders are a part, have a minister who has or recently had a slave. This minister, of course, says nothing officially about this traffic in the bodies and souls of men, nor in private, as I have heard. I know also of Methodists, in both the Northern and Southern divisions of the Church, who buy, hold and sell slaves. I know an instance of a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church selling a slave, not long since; also a preacher in the same Church, who is a rich man, selling another preacher in the same Church, who was a slave, both being in good standing.
"The slaveholding spirit is rising against us at this time, but public sentiment keeps it in check.

"I am thinking strongly of removing from Lewis county to Bracken county. The church there is young, and needs the constant presence of a minister to comfort nurse and defend them. The field is an important one; it has some good material and must be occupied.

"No denomination has better order, and more respectful attention at their meetings, than is witnessed at ours. I go with engagedness from one appointment to the other. At a recent communion season here in Lewis county, seven persons were added, six of them on profession of faith. Dear brother, with the blessing of God, and by great meekness, patience and forbearance, a whole gospel can be preached in the South.

"There is a Sabbath-school in our Free Church in Bracken county, at which thirtysix scholars attended the first day, and there has been an increase ever since. Two of the classes are of colored persons. We have four young men in that church and school of fair promise. In the church in Lewis county are two brothers of deep and tender piety; one expects to devote himself to the ministry.

"We have the frame up for our new house of worship in Lewis county, to supply the place of the one burnt. One young man made a subscription of $25, and is working it out at fifty cents a day. Some others are doing well. We are 'working it up,' and living upon daily food—going as far as we have means or help, and then stop.

"Prayer and conference meetings are kept up every other Sabbath in both churches; a weekly prayer-meeting is held in the church in Lewis county. The congregations are regularly and slowly on the increase. The anti-slavery influence over the people is one striking evidence of the good effects of our efforts; this is noticed by all. We encounter no violence, and meet with no disturbance now. Our colporteur and all the members of our churches enter the houses even of slaveholders as freely as most other people, uttering their sentiments and circulating anti-slavery documents; these are of great utility. I went last Saturday and Sabbath into an adjoining county, Fleming, where I had two appointments, and preached twice to congregations I had never before visited. Through the labors of some friends, the book entitled 'Anti-Slavery Manual.' and the pamphlet styled 'Non-fellowship with Slaveholders, had been distributed; several families had read them, were entirely convinced, and are now full abolitionists. They requested me to preach for them. The audiences were nearly a bundred persons; the attention was good, and there was perfect order. The people had been long deluded by false arguments, and only required the truth to open their eyes. The way is daily opening for extended usefulness; of this there is no question. There ought to be an anti-slavery minister in this, and also another in Bracken county. Each could have from three to five appointments.

"During the year the church in Bracken county, and the church in Lewis county, have each erected a good church edifice; neither is yet completed, however. The one in Bracken county is so far finished that it can be used. The one in Lewis county has had less help from abroad, now needs it, and if not furnished we shall not, I fear, have it in such a state that we can use it during winter. Sure I am that it is my duty and that of others to labor in Kentucky. Kind and persevering efforts, with the blessing of God, can and will succeed even in slave States; I am sure of this. The membership, without a dissenting voice, have requested me to continue to labor with them, saying that I can do more than one from abroad. The whole number added to these churches, during the year, has been twenty-six, two by letter and the rest on profession."

"Oh! how much we need here self-sacrificing ministers, who will faithfully preach a pure and whole gospel! Eighteen hundred years of precious time have rolled away since the first promulgation of Christianity, and yet its first principles have now to be preached, enforced, and applied as really as in the days of Christ and the apostles. I said applied. We have these principles in our formularies of doctrine, confessions of faith, disciplines, &c., and our ministers often repeat them; but they do not say, as Nathan did to David, 'Thou art the man.' This is the sin, the specific sin, violating this general principle. Until we have such ministers as Mathan, the people will go on in darkness down to perdition in sin. I said in darkness. There is such a thing as blindness in a people, occasioned by false teaching and long familiarity with evil.

"In the South we need ministers who will not only preach principles, but who will point out the specific sin, and apply the principle. Silence on the part of a minister or church in reference to any sin is construed into assent.

"The American Missionary Association is doing a great good, not merely to the slave, but also to the slaveholder and non-slaveholder, in calling out and sustaining a class of ministers and churches who will not, by sophism, plaster over any sin, nor by silence leave souls in the dark respecting it, but, by an outspoken and consistent fellowship, discover to the people their ain and danger. Such a policy saved the soul of David, and such a policy will yet save many an oppressor, slaveholder and non-slaveholder.

"God will bless such a policy, and the seed that has been sown will yet spring forth, and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God."

COLPORTEUR.

During a part of the last year, Mr. James M. West has been employed as a colporteur in Kentucky, under the direction of Mr. Fee, with especial reference to circulating the Bible among slaves. From the reports of this faithful and discreet man we extract the following facts:

"In two months I distributed 27 Bibles and Testaments to slaves who could read. The owners of the slaves whom I have visited all manifest a willingness, and many appear anxious, to have their slaves read the Word of God. Persons not owning slaves are the first to raise their voice against giving them the Bible, and strongest in their opposition to general freedom. I interrogated but one during a whole month who was unwilling that slaves should have and read the Bible. In July I visited 183 families, distributed a large number of anti-slavery publications, which were generally well received.

"A member of the church said to me, 'If there ever was a man that ought to be hung, John G. Fee is the man.' Another remarked, 'he thought it no sin, and no violation of the law of God, to hold slaves.' Others talked very differently. One brother said, 'Mr. Fee had a great many enemies, and a while ago he thought he would be assassinated, but he had killed them off by pure kindness.' Another, 'No person could believe the Bible, and obey its teachings, and remain a slaveholder. A sister in the church, wife of a minister, said 'that she did not dare to say much in the family on the subject of slavery, but she believed that the hand of God was in the anti-slavery movement, and that these persecuted few would be the agents, in the hands of God, of the speedy redemption of the oppressed of the land.'"

The Executive Committee have just commissioned a missionary laboring in North Carolina. He will minister to at least six feeble churches, whose covenants preclude the admission of slaveholders to their communion. In these churches there is an aggregate of about one hundred and fifty members, enough to support their minister without aid but for the fact that they are of the poorer class, and have been greatly disheartened by recent persecutions. One of these churches was formed by this brother five years since, and, through much tribulation, has endured to this time. Our new missionary is a native of North Carolina, and, though firm and resolute, has a kind spirit, and is unassuming and meek. There is not so much prejudice against him as there would be against a Northern man, and it is hoped he will be permitted to labor unmolested. A clergyman in Ohio, who knows him well, says: "There are hundreds of anti-slavery people in North Carolina to attend his preaching, and, of course, he not unfrequently preaches to pro-slavery men. He is the only man in all that region who has the courage to open his mouth for the dumb. A Northern man cannot labor there. Some false issue would be raised against him, and he would be killed, or driven off immediately." The missionary reports the existence of eleven churches, in four neighboring counties, having an aggregate membership of three hundred and fifty, to whose communion no slaveholder is admitted.

It will be seen, from the foregoing reports, that our missionaries and colporteurs in slave States are performing a highly useful work. In a judicious, kind, and Christian spirit, they are fearlessly disseminating truth, and especially anti-slavery religious truth, and their labors are evidently attended with the blessing of God, as we may expect such labors always will be, if conducted in a right spirit. If the funds of the Association permitted, the Committee believe that they could not be more usefully employed than in sustaining similar efforts in every county in each of the slave States where it is possible to pursue this work of benevolence. Especially should the States bordering upon free States be furnished with a free gospel. The attention of all who value the religious or political interests of the country is earnestly invited to this important subject. The demand for such efforts is increasing, as will be seen from the following extracts of a letter from Western Virginia to a member of the Executive Committee:

"Believing that you feel a sympathy for those who are destitute of the ordinary means of grace, and that you are willing to assist such, so far as it is in your power, I write to acquaint you with the moral desolation that exists in this region, and to solicit your aid in trying to effect a favorable change. There is a Methodist meeting, generally every fourth Sabath, about six miles from here; but lasting impressions can seldom be made where religious instruction is given but once a month."

The writer then speaks of another meeting, appointed at the same intervals, though less regularly held, the instruction at which he thus describes:

"Their whole aim in preaching seems to be to convince the people that God must convert sinners, and that the sinner has nothing to do but to wait till God converts him. They say nothing about the invitations of the geopel, or its warnings to flee from the wrath to come. It appears to me that the people would be about as well off without any preaching as to hear only that which they hear from these men.

"The object of my writing is to request you to use your influence with the American Missionary Association, to induce them to send a colporteur to reside among the inhabitants of this vicinity, and scatter tracts, converse and pray with the people at their homes, assist in Sabbath-school instruction, and conduct religious meetings on the Sabbath. If such a man can be sent and sustained here, I feel confident great good would result. A Congregationalist would be preferred."

Rev. Mr. Henseler is laboring among the Germans in Williamsburgh, N. Y.

NEW-MEXICO.

Our missionary, Mr. Kephart, has continued to reside at Santa Fé since the last Annual Report. His communications have been frequent. From them we glean the following facts:

Tracts in the Spanish language against Popery have been put in circulation. The priests destroy all they can get hold of, but the people will read the tracts, and they will accomplish their appropriate work. Spanish Protestant missionaries are much needed here, and will be wherever the political influence of this country is or may be extended. They could find much more ready access to the people than missionaries who speak only the English language.

"In December, the Governor transmitted to the Legislature a series of resolutions from the Legislature of New-Hampshire, commendatory and laudatory of the Compromise Measures' of the Congress of the United States. The Legislature here responded to those resolutions by a similar set, highly commending the 'Compromise,' declaring New-Mexico satisfied with it, and pledging the people to use all their endeavors to carry it out within her borders. These resolutions, be assured, do not express the voice of New-Mexico, and are, therefore, the base imposition of aspiring demagogues, for the purpose of ingratiating themselves with the General Government."

During the past winter Mr. Kephart was absent for a short time from New-Mexico. After his return he wrote as follows:

"Things look dark as midnight around us. We are next to a state of anarchy. Rumors of an insurrectionary spirit are rife. What will be the result it is impossible to tell. I have not time now to write at length of the state of the Territory, and the miserable—almost insane—policy of our officials. I need hardly say that these things have greatly increased the embarrassments of missionaries here."

Mr. Kephart wrote, April 29th, as follows:

"There are, and will be, as it appears to me, some very inviting fields of operation opened among the several tribes of Indians, which should be occupied at once by our Society, or some other. At Fort Atkinson, on the Arkansas river, there is a military post, where there should be also a missionary station. A missionary, or several missionaries, at this post, could find access to the Pawnees, the Kinwas, the Arrapahoes, the Chians, and perhaps even a portion of Camanches. Transportation to this point could be had at all seasons, by the numerous trains going to Santa Fé, and at perhaps one half the cost of transportation to this city, the post being the half-way point between Santa Fé and Independence, Mo. I talked with the commanding officer at Fort Atkinson upon this subject recently, as well as Lieut, H—, of that place. I think they would heartily welcome a missionary there. The tribes of Indians above siluded to are powerful and numerous, and the Kiawas and Arrapahoes, as well as the Chians, have always been very friendly with Americans.

pahoes, as well as the Chians, have always been very friendly with Americans.

"Fort Defiance, in the Navajo country, presents, in my estimation, a most important and promising field of missionary labor. I certainly know of no more interesting tribe of Indians than the Navajoes. In point of scientific skill, they are in advance of any of the native population of this Territory. They now profess a strong desire to cultivate peaceful relations with our nation, and have sent in to the agent for a supply of agricultural implements. They are the best farmers in the Territory—Americans, of course, excepted. The paymaster of this military department leaves this city this morning for Fort Defiance. He has just left my room, and I took the opportunity, while he was with me, of broaching the subject of a missionary station at that post. He thinks, with me, that such a station should by all means be planted there, and that immediately. The commander of Fort Defiance, I am informed, is a Presbyterian, and would doubtless feel interested in the work. I may add, in relation to a station at this point, that it would necessarily be attended with considerable cost, arising from the distance to which transportations would have to be made from the States.

"At the Copper Mine, or Fort Webster, on the Gila, there should be another station to operate upon the southern Apaches.

"A new military post will be opened in the Utah country this summer, which will afford another most important stand-point for misssionary labor, and should be occupied at once. The agent for that region would give his hearty support and coöperation to any missionary who might take that field.

"These are all important fields of missionary labor, and should at once be taken up. If Protestants do not enter in and take possession immediately, there is no doubt but that they will be occupied by Catholic priests; and the facility with which Romanism always accommodates itself to the habits, feelings, and customs of a people, giving them the outward form instead of the inner new birth, will give them a great advantage, and throw many obstacles in the way of future operations.

"It is not essential in those fields, as here, that a missionary should understand the Spanish language, though that would be an advantage to him, as in almost all the tribes there are more or less who can talk that language. But if he did not understand it, his want of that facility would not be so serious a drawback upon him as to one laboring among the Mexicans and Puebloa. He could begin to work from the foundation upward, from the start. I hope our Association will give these matters a serious and careful consideration."

The whole number of home missionaries who have received aid directly from the treasury of the Association during any portion of the past year is thirty one. The expenditures for Home Missions by the Association and its auxiliary, the Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association, exclusive of those for New-Mexico, and including those for Canada, have been $10,186.60. Included in this sum is an appropriation to the "Canada Missionary Society" of $100; an appropriation to the "Northwestern Home Missionary Association" of $500, beyond the receipts from that Society; and appropriations to the "Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association," beyond the receipts from that institution, of $1000.

It is well to consider the claims our Western fellow-citizens have upon Eastern Christians. Much has been said, on other occasions, about the rapidly increasing population of that portion of our country; its moral and religious destitution; the importance of pre-occupying the ground by Christian teachers, seminaries of learning, and houses of worship. We have been told that it is in the moral world as it is in the physical: a small comparative setting in of seed-wheat may be the means of insuring a plentiful harvest; that in this connection the truth of the maxim is obvious, "Prevention is better than cure;" and that the salvation of the nation, so to speak, depends, under God, on very prompt, generous, and unsparing efforts, with men and money, to occupy the vast Western fields and prairies in the name of the Lord, before they are seized as conquests of Satan. The truth of these suggestions should be felt by the friends of the Association in all their importance. Let us send religious teachers of the right stamp to all the unoccupied places of the Far West, and sustain them in maintaining public worship, Sabbath and week-day schools, and in cultivating the moral territory for the Lord, agreeably to principles we have avowed, which we believe to be of priceless value, and agreeable to the mind of Christ. Let us aid our bretbren at the West in all judicious efforts to do good, remembering that we thus aid in promoting the true welfare of our common country and our common Christianity.

In the last Annual Report the subject of Home Missions was urgently presented for the deliberate and serious consideration of the Association. Fully persuaded of the truth of what was there stated, and more than ever impressed with the very high importance due to this subject, the Committee are constrained to urge upon the Association, and all who are friendly to the propagation of a free gospel, the necessity of strengthening and liberally sustaining this department of labor. In new settlements, where youthful congregations are forming continually, it is not only important that an evangelical gospel, with Sabbath-school instruction, should be promptly and adequately supported, under the pastoral care and instruction of pious, well-educated and energetic men, but that special care should be taken that the seed thus early sown should be unmixed with hurtful error, either in theology or in respect to practical godliness. Humanity should be cherished and inculcated as an essential part of Christianity; and the great claims of Christian benevolence, in all its varied departments, should find not only a welcome in the heart of him who is set over the new congregation, but likewise a consistent and strenuous advocacy. Far better is it to incorporate such principles and insure such practices in the foundation of a new religious society, than to endeaver to rectify or extirpate what is erroneous or evil after a church has obtained some growth; as sin once cherished strengthens itself, and the difficulty of removing it becomes greater; and it is well to consider that if our infant churches be trained to hold connection with the many slaveholding churches of our land until advanced to maturity, they will not then think the exclusion of slaveholders a duty, and will hardly believe it is then demanded of them to form separate, distinct organizations. It behooves anti-slavery Christians, therefore, to see to it that every new settlement is supplied with a minister who, in addition to vital godliness, shall be fixed in his anti-slavery principles and practices; a man who will have no fellowship with slaveholders or their abettors who will set his face like a flint against the sin of caste, and train up his people to vindicate the claims of humanity, in all suitable ways, without hesitation or fear.

When it is considered that some of the leading institutions of the land, so far from affording direct aid to the cause of freedom, virtually throw much of their influence into the opposite scale; that, notwithstanding the powerful agency they exert in extending the gospel, they sanction slaveholding by continuing to sustain missionaries who preside over churches where slaveholding, with its concomitant atrocities, such as buying and selling human beings, is not considered a disciplinary offense, and where slaveholders are fellowshipped as consistent Christians; surely it is required of every friend of missions, who has become enlightened with regard to the nature of slavery and the value of an anti-slavery gospel, to refuse aid to such missionary societies, while they extend a liberal aid to an Association whose missionaries do not, in any way, bow the knee to the Moloch of Slavery, and will not preach to any church that will not allow their minister to exhibit the sinfulness of slaveholding, and to exercise discipline with regard to persistent slaveholders.*

^{*} It should be understood by anti-slavery Christians, as well as all other persons, that in cases where the sin of slavery is not faithfully reproved by those who preach to slaveholders, be they Indian or white masters, that they will naturally consider slaveholding consistent with the Principles of Christianity. What a dread responsibility, then, devolves upon missionaries who preach such an emasculated gospel, which is "another gospel," and upon societies that commission and sustain them! Is it said, missionary societies ought not to interfere with the independent action of churches? We answer, they can and ought to refrain from sustaining missionaries who will

We are bound, by every motive of duty, to prosecute energetically, systematically and wisely, the great work of Home Missions. Our only hope, under God, for the successful propagation of a pure gospel, for the purification of the Church from slaveholding, for the emancipation of the slave, for the elevation of the emancipated, for the vindication of the gospel, and for future ability to labor for the conversion of the world, lies in a conscientious, faithful, persevering and prayerful devotedness to building up churches at home on the foundation of righteousness, the equality of man before the divine law and in the sight of the great Lawgiver; the disfellowshipping of sinners against God and criminals against man, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corper-stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a hely temple in the Lord."

AUXILIARIES AND OTHER FRIENDLY BODIES.

[From our auxiliary, "The Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association," we have not received any report. They acknowledge to have received, the past year, $5,296 39. After deducting expenses, the balance of funds received by them has been appropriated in the home field. It is expected that the Committee on Home Missions, appointed at the last annual meeting, to consider and report upon the proper relations to be sustained between the parent Society and its auxiliaries will make a report at this meeting, and that hereafter such relations, fixed by a vote of the Association, will be well understood, and be found, on experience, the best that could be devised for larmonious action and the most efficient usefulness of all concerned.]

The Annual Report of the "Penobscot County Missionary Association" (Maine) has not reached the Committee. This Society has been considered one of the most efficient, as it is one of the oldest, of our auxiliaries.

At a Convention held in Cincinnati, Ohio, December 17th and 18th, of brethren of different religious denominations, friendly to this Association, an organization was formed, with the title of the "American Reform Tract and Book Society," the object of which is to promulgate the doctrines of the Reformation, to point out the application of the principles of Christianity to every known sin, to show the sufficiency and adaptation of these principles to remove all the evils of the world, and bring in a form of society that will accord with the gospel of Christ. The known fruits of iniquity—the gains of the oppressor—are to be rejected from its treasury; and the use of the press is the means by which it will mainly seek to effect its praiseworthy purposes.

We make an extract or two from the address to the public accompanying the minutes of the Convention:

"Let us consider the actual condition of those who are striving to separate the churches from slavery, and all other known and tangible sin. What influences are agreed against them, and what means have they now for disseminating and defending their principles? There is the American Tract Society, sending forth monthly 200,000 copies of its paper, besides its countless pages of tracts, and volumes of books; there is the Presbyterian Board of Publication, doing a similar work; and there is the Methodist Book Concern showering the land with newspapers, tracts, not inculcate a full gospel, and exercise gospel discipline; and if they refuse, the churches should withhold from them "the supplies," while they bestow them freely on missionary associations that appoint only such missionaries as do preach fully and faithfully the gospel—a whole gospel—and exercise proper discipline with regard to all offenders in the churches to which they minister.

books, and magazines; add to these the myriad issues of the American Sunday-school Union, filling the shelves of our Sabbath-school libraries, and in the hands of our children every where; and consider that these millions of teachers, pervading all society, are the defenders of slavery, either by direct teaching or by reising to place it on the catalogue of sins; and we behold an amount of influence arrayed in defense of the slave power, against which every effort will prove unavailing, unless supported by the counter power of the press. This, however, is not all. Christian reformers, while they seek eventually the overthrow of slavery, are also deeply interested in purifying the Church from a connection with any known sin, and are convinced that no movement can be successful which is not based upon a foundation broader and deeper than a specific attack upon the system of slavery alone. They are equally certain that no sin can be repudiated by a Christian people while the Christian Church shelters it in her bosom; for the plain reason, that the morality of the world will never rise higher than the standard of the Church.

"It becomes, then, essential to the overthrow of slavery, or the removal of any other sin, that it be cast out of the churches; and if the churches refuse to put the evil away, after due admonition and remonstrance, that Christian fellowship and communion should be withheld from them, as a means of reproof and discipline.

"Yet it is a well-known fact, that not only do all the powerful bodies which have been named, with their immense array of means for influencing the public thought, oppose this only possible method of reform, but the almost entire strength of the religious weekly press is thrown in the same scale, not even excepting some professedly anti-slavery.

"But if, in the exhibition of the practical bearings of Christianity, the principle of expediency becomes the controlling power; if, in teaching the world what this system of religion requires of man as an individual, and in his social and civil relations, things are omitted which are essential to holiness and justice, then the system of Jesus gives place to another gospel, and the world is led fatally astray.

"Now, inasmuch as we suppose it to be a well known and admitted fact, that some of the large organizations, which are most extensively influencing the public mind, do refuse all mention of sins which, like slaveholding, are strongly intrenched in the public favor; that passages have been stricken from books in obedience to the demands of the slave power; that other books have been altered so as to admit doctrines offensive to some, and history itself has been falsified to spare the feelings of a sect, it is believed by thousands that the interests of religion and liberty are unsafe in such hands, and that other instrumentalities ought at once to be provided, that the public mind may be brought under the influence of the untrammelled utterance of the gospel."

A new missionary society was formed by a Convention held at Chicago, Illinois July 7th and 8th, called the "Northwestern Home Missionary Association," the object of which is to sustain evangelical missionaries in the destitute portions of the West, and to aid feeble churches in supporting the institutions of the gospel. "Any person of evangelical sentiments, who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes annually to the funds of the Society may become a member."

Various religious conventions have been held in different States, composed of Christian ministers and laymen, of various denominations, to consider their duty in the present exigences of the country and the Church, and to take such measures as might be thought proper in the premises. In the resolutions passed by these bodies, the heinous guilt of American slaveholding, its contrariety to the Scriptures, to the principles of our government, the rights of man, and the prosperity of the Church and nation, have been set forth in strong, indignant, and appropriate language. Also, the importance of Christians treating slaveholders, whether church members or ministers, as persons not in good standing, of treating ecclesiastical bodies who tolerate slaveholding in their churches, and refuse to listen to the voice of remonstrance, as unworthy of fraternal correspondence. Likewise, the obligation resting upon the great religious societies of the land to do something for the slaves, to refuse countenancing slaveholding in churches gathered or presided over by missionaries, or the admission of slaveholders into churches, and allowing them to remain undisciplined.

It is gratifying to know that this Association is not composed of Christians of one denomination merely, and that it embraces members of different religious sects, all united in feelings of abhorrence against slavery, and anxious to relieve the Church of Christ from its odious, inhuman, and unchristian contamination. It seems desirable that all Christians who agree in sentiment on the momentous subject of American slavery, and its direful effects upon the temporal and spiritual condition of both bond and free, should keep themselves separate from all alliance or fellowship with those who welcome to their communion the slaveholder, without rebuke or discipline, and be united in friendly, effective, and consistent cooperation in cleansing the Church frem all defiling participation in the great iniquity, and in bringing about the abolition of a system so destructive to the souls of men and so dishonoring to the religion of Christ. Most sincerely and heartily would the members of this Association unite in counsel, prayer and labors with evangelical Christians of every denomination, with reference to this great subject.

The Committee have had under consideration the subject of sending a missionary to labor among the Chinese, Japanese, and other foreigners, who are flooking to California. It is reported that since January 1st, 1852, twenty-nine vessels, conveying 7,537 Chinese emigrapts, have been dispatched from Hong Kong, Macao, and Whampoa. On the 27th March, the vessels yet to sail numbered thirty-one, to convey 9,270 passengers. Considerable numbers of Japanese and Persians have also found their way to California. These people are in general active, intelligent and enterprising. Many-off them understand mechanical tradea. Recent accounts tate that the tide of emigration from foreign countries to California has greatly increased. As has been said, the Lord, instead of suggesting to Christians to go to these heathen countries, as heretofore, to be instrumental in the conversion of the natives, seems to be bringing the heathen to our shores that they may learn the arts of civilization, become acquainted with our institutions, and, by Christian culture and the converting power of the Holy Spirit, be brought into the kingdom of Christ.

Application has been made to the Committee by a pious, intelligent, well-educated and highly recommended minister of the gospel for an appointment as a missionary to California. The Committee have invited him to attend the annual meeting and only wait to know the views of the Association on the subject before taking definitive action in the premises. Shall not the Association have a part in the glorious work of evangelizing California? Will not the anti-slavery Christians who have heretofore patronized the Association, manifest, by still greater liberality, the value they place upon missionary efforts in general, and especially their sense of the importance of this new and inviting field?

The encroachments of the slave power have been signally manifested in the enactment of the Fugitive Slave Bill, and the debauched state of the public mind has been shown in the support it has received in the free States. It would have been sufficiently lamentable had this support been derived merely from unprincipled politicians; but when it is seen that ministers of the gospel, and also laymen of professed piety, vie with the notoriously wicked in attempts to enforce a most cruel, inhuman, and unchristian Act, the true followers of the Saviour must necessarily lament such evidences of corruption in the ministry and Church, while they perceive more than before the importance of sustaining an Association whose missionaries, amidst such degeneracy, fearlessly advocate both tables of the Law. It is hoped that all who oppose this Bill, or refuse to obey its provisions, will feel it a pleasure and a duty to administer to the wants of panting fugitives in their laudable efforts to escape from bondage and taste the sweets of liberty.

During the past year several gentlemen of influence have published an Address to the Anti-Slavery Christians of the United States, recommending the AMERICAN AND FOREIGN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY to their cordial and liberal support, as one important means of rescuing the Church and nation from disgrace, and averting the wrath of God from a guilty people. Engaged, as is that Society, in similar labors with this, in correcting a vicious public sentiment, and in inculcating just and Christian principles of conduct, the Committee rejoice in its efforts, and in the favor with which they have been received by men who set a just value upon all that is excellent in the political and religious institutions of the country. The friends of this Association are greatly indebted to the Society named for enlightening the public mind, and awakening the public conscience, and sowing the seed that has sprung up in the form of associations for the rectification of what is anti-christian in the ministry and the Church. The results of such labors show the importance of extending the influence of the Society, and supporting all judicious exertions to diffuse light on the anti-slavery question.

It is of great importance also that the friends of this Association have right views and corresponding action respecting their duty as church members, members of professedly religious and benevolent institutions, and members of political parties. In all these relations they should maintain involably Christian principles, and observe undeviatingly elevated and consistent Christian conduct. If they follow a multitude to do evil, if they adopt principles of worldly expediency, if they make a compromise with those who in principle or conduct act contrary to established rules of right, they pull down with one hand what they attempt to build up with the other, and are virtually enemies instead of friends of an uncorrupt gospel. The Commit tee believe that no countenance or support should be given by the members of this Association to ecclesiastical or political associations whose avowed principles or usual conduct are opposed to the principles they have avowed, and which they profess to regard and extend; and that all the means they have for the promotion of religious and benevolent purposes should be given to associations whose principles and conduct they confide in and approve.

The Committee believe that the members of the Association should attend and sustain monthly concerts of prayer where due attention is paid to anti-slavery, temperance, and other reformatory societies, and never countenance by their attendance or contribution concerts where these topics are denied a place. Concerts of prayer for the down-trodden and oppressed must be acceptable to Him who came "to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." They keep alive right feeling in Christians, and prompt to right action; and the Committee hope they will be regularly sustained wherever the usual monthly concerts are so conducted that anti-slavery Christians are debarred from entire freedom in vindicating the claims of the oppressed, and praying for the overthrow of slavery.

It cannot be expected that either the anti-slavery cause or the cause of Free Missions will be prospered unless their friends and advocates rely upon Divine aid, and earnestly supplicate the smiles and guidance of the Redeemer, while they rain up their children with right views and feelings toward the wronged slave and abused free people of color. The importance of inculcating anti-slavery sentiments and corresponding action wherever Providence may place them, must be seen and felt by every Christian who believes that the fashionable and prevailing sentiment on these subjects is at variance with the gospel, and consequently offensive to its Author.

In addition to the obligations which they owe to their own children and dependents to properly indoctrinate them with righteous principles, and encourage them to correct conduct, the friends of religion and of liberty have a duty to do in regard to the masses of foreigners who throng to these abores. Many of them, the German immigrants especially, come to this country with strong aspirations for liberty, and would, if properly enlightened with respect to the condition of things here, refuse all alliance with ecclesiastical or political bodies that betray the cause of holy freedom. It appears to develve upon this Association to take measures to communicate to them evangelical instruction, connected with consistent and just views of our Constitution and laws, and the situation and rights of our oppressed fellow citizens. By thus enlightening them we secure a mighty moral and political influence, and attach to us a large body of men who might otherwise become the enemies instead of the friends of pure Christianity and consistent republicanism. The German churches and the German presses in this country should, if possible, be gained to the cause of liberty, free missions, and primitive Christianity.

The Association would be derelict from duty if it overlooked the condition and wants of the free people of color throughout the country, inasmuch as the spirit of caste, that obstructs and almost overwhelms them, is countenanced by churches as well as by the world. Our Saviour, when on earth, directed his sympathics and labors toward those who were most needy; and were he now on earth, tabernacling in the flesh, it cannot be reasonably doubted that he would exhibit the same feelings on the subject of caste that he manifested respecting the contempt shown by the Jews toward the Samaritans; and that he would sympathize with, instruct and relieve, as equal before the law and the gospel, those who are now treated as an inferior race, not only in the walks of life, but in temples dedicated to the worship of God. If we believe that the Son of God would thus act, let us obey his divine command, and go and do likewise.

Allusion has already been made to the obligation resting upon the friends of free missions to contribute liberally, according to their means, to sustain the operations of the Association, and all kindred efforts to promote the welfare of our fellowmen, and build up the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is earnestly hoped that the friends of the principles adopted and advocated by the Association will view, as in the light of eternity, the solemn obligations resting upon them, and with an open hand and ready purse, inquire, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Among the supporters of free missions, there are not a few to whom God has intrusted property to be finally disposed of by them in their last will, During their lives they have devoted themselves largely to business and the accumulation of property, and have given to this, their favorite cause, less than they sometimes wished, under the plea that they were doing business for the Lord, and would thereby be enabled eventually to cast much more largely into his treasury. When making preparations for the close of life, this plea ceases to be of avail, and then most emphatically are they called upon to remember that they are but stewards for God of property accumulated for him, and for the avowed purpose of promoting the interest of his kingdom. The only way then left for them to aid in the fulfilment of the Saviour's last command, is by giving freely of their substance, thus constituting others their agents in its accomplishment. Upon all such the Executive Committee would urge with Christian earnestness, the claims of the Ass .-

ciation to be largely provided for. They are entreated to inquire how much it will please their Lord and Master that they should give to his cause, and to consider the paramount claims of this Association, which, while it preaches the gospel, salvation by faith in Christ, labors also for the breaking of every yoke, the delivery of the captive, the opening of the prison of them that are bound.

The Executive Committee would recommend special attention to this subject, as a means of promoting the best interests of Christ's kingdom. Much may be done if the agents and members of this Association will request their friends and neighbors to remember its interests when they sit down to distribute their property in view of the judgment.

LIFE MEMBERS.—By the payment of thirty dollars, any person of evangelical sentiments, who professes faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and who is not a slave-holder, nor living in the practice of known immorality, may be made a Life Member of the Association. The whole number of Life Members is now six hundred and fifty-two. One hundred and eighty-three have been added during the year.

The Committee feel greatly encouraged in their labor, and if adequately sustained by the professed friends of the Association, will press forward towards its enlargement. In the providence of God new foreign fields are opening before them; persons of both sexes, who bring good recommendations, are offering themselves for missionaries and teachers in greater number than ever before, and the applications for aid from well-qualified ministers and feeble churches that should be sustained in the home field, are continually increasing.

If the pecuniary means shall be supplied, they can strengthen existing missions, establish new ones, enlist large numbers of devoted men and women for the foreign field, and sustain at home many devoted ministers and feeble churches now languishing for a support, who prefer the Association to any others. The Committee cannot but hope that the friends of the Association, by their increasing liberality, will enable them thus to enlarge their work, multiply the number of their missionaries, preach the gospel to many now destitute, and, with the Divine blessing, win many souls to Christ.

The Association owes its origin to the heart-rending emotions experienced by many friends of Christ and his Church, and of their country, in view of the existence and direful effects of American slavery. Our time-honored missionary institutions were affected by this great plague. The discussions that took place in consequence throughout the country gave conservative men reason to fear that ere long, if a reformation were not effected, these institutions would be shaken to their foundations. For a time their leading friends seemed so far affected by public sentiment as to justify the belief that a reformation was near at hand. Some preliminary steps of reform indeed were taken; but the combined influence of active politicians in Church and State soon produced so powerful a reaction, that slavery has apparently obtained a secure throne, both in legislative halls and in ecclesiastical assemblies.

The largest missionary organizations of our land may now meet, deliberate and disperse without an allusion being made to this question; nay, their friends exultingly estimate the spirituality of their anniversaries to be in proportion to the silence observed on this topic. Some of these organizations appear to have attained that bad elevation from which, in their efforts to give the gospel to the far-distant heathen, they can slide clear over the heads of three millions of their oppressed and perishing countrymen, without a word of sympathy in their behalf, or a single note of remonstrance and rebuke for the oppressor in their midst.

In view of this alarming state of things, we feel called upon, more than ever, to reaffirm the principles of our Association, and to dedicate to their promulgation and defense our best energies and our largest means, with an unwavering trust and entire reliance on Him who will fulfil his gracious promises on behalf of the enslaved of his Church. Anti-slavery Christians have a special call to engage more heartily than ever in this labor of love and humanity. Surely it cannot be imputed to us as arrogance when we say, in simple recognition of Divine guidance, that a candid examination will draw from all enlightened Christians an acknowledgment that our principles are correct, even though they may have doubted the expediency of embodying them in a distinct organization. It is believed that a large majority of all the ministers who are sustained by the friends of Home Missionary Societies, and all who are worthy of being thus sustained, believe that slaveholding is a sin which ought to be repented of: that all missionary work should be so carried on as to discourage it: that persistent slaveholders give most fearful evidence that their hearts are not prepared for the communion of saints, and that the welfare of their souls and the purity of Christ's Church require that they should be excluded from membership until they manifest both repentance and restitution. We wish to be able to say to all such missionaries, Enlist in the cause you approve, and you shall be sustained. Do we not owe it to such men, to give them the opportunity of preaching a full gospel without being censured or cramped, and of adopting measures their consciences approve for the purification of the churches and the glory of God?

Let it be our constant prayer that the path of duty may be plain before us; that we may have wisdom that is profitable to direct; that our souls may be enlarged in view of the condition of our fellow-men; and that the momentous work to which we are called by the providence of God may be so conducted as to result in the salvation of many souls, and that our humble services may thus redound to the honor of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Letters addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.

BEDFORD, 15th September, 1852.

REV. AND DEAR SIR :- I have been favored with your letter inviting me to attend the annual meeting of the American Missionary Association at Bangor on the 29th inst. Did circumstances permit, it would give me great pleasure to accept the

The missionary spirit is the spirit of Christianity, and it is impossible that any faithful disciple of our Lord should be indifferent to the extension of his kingdom upon earth. We may differ as to the most expedient means to be used, but not as to the importance of the end to be attained. But your Society has at the present moment claims upon Christians, distinct from the ordinary obligation of publishing the glad tidings of salvation. In the reckless competition of unprincipled politicians for Southern votes, it has been deemed by common consent convenient to stifle, as for as possible, all Christian sympathy for the alave, and to represent the moral feelings of our nature which rise in indignant rebellion against the most execrable oppression, and against the requirements of an accursed law, which, in defiance and contempt of the precepts of the Divine Redeemer, aim at making us active agents in deeds of violence, cruelty, and injustice, as PARJUDICES TO RE CONQUEED. To the scandal of our holy religion, certain of our clergy, chiefly pastors of rich, fashionable city congregations, have become the auxiliaries of these politicians, and have labored to show the Divine sanction of slavery, and the duty of catching fugitives from bondage, thus virtually contending that the common Father of us all, infinite in mercy and justice as He is in wisdom and power, abrogates all his injunctions of brotherly kindness, and all his denunciations against oppression and injustice, so far as relates to the treatment of three millions of our countrymen, held as beasts of burthen, by no other title than force, by a few rich and powerful individuals. These reverend gentlemen, by the odious and revolting character with which they thus invest Christianity, are, in my opinion, the most efficient apostles of infidelity to be found in our country. Yet these men are actively engaged in our various missionary societies; and while looking with indifference, if not complacency, on the misery and degradation of vast multitudes in their own land not colored like themselves, are asking contributions to send the gospel to the ends of the earth, where, should it be preached by slaveholding and slave-catching missionaries, it will add but little to the virtue and happiness of their converts.

Your Society, on the contrary, hold the gospel to be, as it is indeed and in truth, a gospel of love, of justice, of mercy, to men of all conditions and of all complexions, and as such you promulgate it at home and abroad. I bid you God speed and ininjustice, so far as relates to the treatment of three millions of our countrymen, and as such you promulgate it at home and abroad. I bid you God speed, and invoke His blessings on your labors. Yours, respectfully, WILLIAM JAY.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Sept. 28, 1852.

DEAR SIR :- Though in the midst of one of my terms, it was only yesterday that I decided duty would not permit me to be present at the annual meeting of the Society. This I regret the more, as it will be held in the place of my temporary residence, near the scene of a few months' missionary experience among the poor Indians at Old Town, above Bangor, and among those who, for several years, were helpers of my missionary operations in Smyrna. I have only time to express my continued interest in the objects of the American Missionary Association, and my prayer that the presence of God may be with you in all your deliberations, and that new zeal and wisdom and success may attend all your future doings.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel,

JOSIAH BREWER.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 23, 1852.

DEAR SIA:—Your circular came to this office during my absence on a journey, from which I returned only the latter part of last week. It would give me great pleasure to attend the anticipated meeting, could I do it consistently with the duty which I owe to my family and to my fellow-men. But having been absent for nearly six weeks, on a long and somewhat expensive journey, I can hardly reconcile it with a sense of duty to enter upon another so soon, however gratifying it might be to my feelings. And still it requires a considerable degree of self-denial to make up my mind not to go. I wish very much to visit Bangor, where I spent seven years very pleasantly in connection with the Theological Seminary in that place, and where I should doubtless meet a considerable number of esteemed friends. And what in my mind is of paramount importance, I should rejoice in the opportunity to throw whatever of influence I may possess in favor of free missions and the anti-slavery cause, which I consider the cause of truth and righteousness, how much severe it may be opposed and derided by this pro-slavery community. I hope you will have a pleasant and profitable meeting, and that it will be the means of giving a new impulse to the great and good cause.

With cordial respects to your associates in office, I am your friend and brother,

B. FOWLER.

NORTH BROOKFIELD, Sept. 19, 1852.

DEAR Sin:—Your circular is at hand, inviting me to attend the meeting at Bangor. I would certainly do so, but that I have a public engagement for that very day in this State.

Hereafter, however, if informed of your annual meeting, I shall endeavor to attend as I feel a great interest in the Society, and think it ought to be well sustained.

Very truly yours,

AMASA WALKER.

EAST HARDWICK, V.t., September 18, 1852.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to your circular of the 1st inst., I would observe, that in days that have gone by, I have often met smiling faces and sparkling eyes at Bangor, when called there to attend missionary meetings, or to transact business respecting the beloved institution there located. The Lord bless the city and the school of the prophets!

With all my heart I sympathize with you in your meeting, and should meet you with pleasure; but I am a recluse, and all my physical and mental powers cry out with one voice, Stop; let us rest. God's will be done! Blessed be his name, there remaineth a rest for his people.

How Christians, men or women, can hold their peace, and seem to give countenance to slavery, I know not. It is one of those unaccountables which I lay over for another day. With rum devils, or slaveholding devils, be they big or little, I wish to have no connection. If others will do so, they must do it on their own Darkness looms up from the vasty deep, and is rolling over the Church and the nations; but there are bright spots above the horizon, that shoot out streams of light, sure index of approaching day. Faith, hold on and hold out! Lo! He who cometh from Edom with garments died in the blood of his enemies, has met them on the field of battle and gained the victory. Who then is on the Lord's side! If the powers of darkness are so dieposed, let them prepare and take the field as soon as they please. The sooner they wake up all their men of war and come down to battle, the better. They may make war with the Lamb, but the Lamb shall overcome them, for He is Lord of lords and King of kings; and they that are with him are "called, and chosen, and faithful." No rummies or slaveholders with the Lamb! Who will follow the Lamb and share his triumphs? With such a leader, there is no ground to fear, and there "should be none faint-hearted in the camp of Israel. Come, Lord Jesus, and added to thy many crowns accept one more, the crown of all the earth."

I have labored with brethren who have fallen asleep in Jesus, in laying many of the foundations in Maine on which others are now building. May I request all such builders to take heed how they build, and see that they use not hay, wood and stubble, but gold, silver, and precious stones. Jesus Christ is the only sure foundation. May all the religious and benevolent institutions of Maine rest upon and be vitally connected with that foundation. And may the blessing of the God of heaven rest upon the State, and prosper all her efforts to establish good laws, and to direct others how to stay the old rum dragon. Good laws must be sustained; but let judges and rulers know that there is One higher than they. A puny worm in arms against Omnipotence!

From the plains of Moab I send my cordial salutations to all the brethren. I must soon pass over Jordan, and hope, through rich grace, to go in and possess the good land. I leave you on the battle-field, harnessed and prepared for action. Fear not the proud sons of Anak; but go forward in the name of the mighty God of Jacob. Our God will come, and he will not tarry. May He, who is wonderful in counsel as well as mighty in power, meet with you, give you one heart and one mind, guide your deliberations, and bless all your labors. Ethiopia shall stretch out her hands unto God, and a pure offering shall be brought unto the Lord of Hosts from beyond the rivers thereof. Even so! Amen.

Wiscasser, September 25, 1852.

-: DEAR SIR :- I received the circular of the Secretary of the American Missionary Association, and it would afford me much pleasure to meet with the friends of the Redeemer and of his oppressed people on that occasion; but as circumstances are, I have felt that it would be rendering the missionary cause more essential aid for me to send you, as Treasurer of the Association, the amount of my travelling expenses, and you will accordingly find inclosed five dollars. I wish it were in my power to make the sum many times greater. I had felt, for a considerable time previous to the existence of this Association, some organization of the kind to be a moral necessity; and I have watched with deep interest, and I hope with a degree of thankfulness, its steady and healthy growth to its present position in the sympathies and affections of so many Christians and philanthropists in our land. Well may it be regarded as a gem of God's own unfolding—as the matured fruit of his ripening providence. I had always been a patron, according to my narrow means, of the American Board, and do not now, uniformly, withhold my mite when occasional contributions are made in its behalf by the church with which I am connected; so that it is with no feeling of hostility to that body, that I hail the rise and progress of this new Missionary Society, But while I rejoice in all the good which the Board has accomplished, I mourn with thousands of its former patrons its present position in relation to slavery, for the countenance it is giving to this overshadowing sin of the nation, by withholding its testimony against it, and by sustaining slaveholding churches; and I have little expectation that its course will be changed until an outward pressure shall compel to it; and I should judge that many who have been looking and pleading for a favorable and speedy change, will feel, since the last meeting of the Board at Troy, that it is boping against hope, and will now come to the aid of this Association, and so increase its efficiency, that, while it is sending out a pure gospel to bless the world, it may exert a powerful remedial influence upon the American Board; and my prayer is, that between these two organizations there may be soon no other antagonism than that of provoking to love and good works.

May the God of the oppressed bless you, my dear sir, and all the officers and friends of the American Messionary Association, with health and long life, and with abundance of his own peace. Very respectfully yours,

JOHN BOTNTON.

1 John iv. 20.

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen!"

AFTER brief preliminary remarks, I shall endeavor to develop and illustrate the principles contained in this passage, and then apply them as tests of character and duty in the missionary work.

The utterances of love by the other disciples become almost manifestations of love in John. With him the sacrifice of Christ is the manifestation of Divine love for us, and the producing cause of Divine love in us. Truth is light, but Love is life with John—it is divine life—nay more, it is the only divine life: "for he that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love." We may know of God in the precept, but we can know him in experience and in spirit only by that love which is produced by faith in Christ, and which purifies the heart.

John's faith, like Paul's, appropriates Christ, not only in his death, but likewise in his life. With them faith works by love, and love works by labor. Says the apostle to the Gentiles, "For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that HE died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them and rose again." Says John, "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him; but whose keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him; he that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk as he walked." So in the immediate contexts: "We love him because he first loved us;" and, "This commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also."

In the exposition and application of this passage, we will notice first the principle, with the reason annexed, as stated in the text: "If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

2. Notice in several particulars the spirit and the practice which love to God and man, in Christ, will develop in the lives of believers.

3. We will apply the specific truth of the passage to missionary organizations, and to the duty of promoting free missions in particular.

1. Assent to the character of God and the obligation of the Divine law, in the abstract, is a different thing from faith in God and in his law revealed in their relations to us.

There are many who will assent to a correct statement of the character of God, and to a correct exhibition of his law. But there is a vital difference between knowing of God, in the abstract idea, and knowing him in his living developed character; between knowing him in speculation and in experience; between faith in God in a creed, and faith in God in Christ. The existence of a true knowledge of God in Christ does not imply the absence of a knowledge of God in the dogmatic or creed form. An intellectual apprehension of truth is a prerequisite to its impression upon our moral nature; but intellectual apprehension and assent alone produce neither love to God nor good will to men. The history of the Church in all ages furnishes manifold and mournful illustrations of the truth of this statement.

The Jews had, in most respects, an accurate conception of the character of God. They knew, in a speculative sense, "whom they worshipped." Their rabbis, or doctors of divinity, taught the fundamental principles of the law of God; and yet their conduct was not conformed to the law, and their hearts were opposed to the true character of that God in whom they professed to believe, and in whom, as an abstract idea, they did believe. We need not to inquire now concerning the constructions and traditions by which they made void the law, while at the same time they professed to reverence and obey it. Jesus constantly affirmed of them, what their conduct exhibited, (although few men in that age would recognize the fact,) that they were those who, professing to love and obey God whom they had not seen, yet hated their fellow-men whom they had seen.

The incarnation of God in Christ proved that men may know the abstract idea of the true God, while they are absolutely hostile to that same God acting upon them and enjoining the duties which his character and his law requires. The Godhead was embodied in Christ, and through him the holy attributes of the Divine nature came into actual contact with the minds of the Jews. Christ was God acting, and requiring men to act in their proper relations, and discharge their proper duties. The same character revealed in their Scriptures—the same conduct which the Divine law requires, was exhibited in the life-action of Jesus Christ. The unseen God, in whose Word they professed to believe, became concrete, as the WORD among the Jews. He stood in their midst. His holy attributes acted upon them. His Divine nature spoke to them. He required nothing more of them than what they taught the law required all men to do-to worship God with a true heart, and obey, in life, the Divine law, which required that they should do unto others as they would have others do unto them.

But mark the result when God in Christ approached, and required them to do what reason and the law of God taught them they ought to do. He took their own words as to the character of God. He took their own definition as to the requirements of the Divine law. All he did in this respect was to require that they should, without regard to human opinions and prejudices, worship God in faith and humility, and do, not in word, but in spirit and in life, the things which the Divine law required.

Now, in whatever sense the Jews knew God, it is certain that they did not love him living and acting in relation to them. If they had loved the true character of the unseen God, they would have rejoiced in spirit when the conception which they loved was embodied, and approached them in Christ. If they had loved the true law, they would have rejoiced and obeyed when it was illustrated and enforced. In the person of Jesus, God and the law lived and acted in relation to them, and required them to live and act for truth and against sin. But these men, professing to know and obey God, met Jesus with contradiction-with contempt-with persecution unto death. So the Redeemer said they would requite his followers, and so they did requite them. "If," said the Saviour, "they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, much more them of his household." As it was in the days of Christ, so it is now, and so it will be until truth triumphs over all the evils in the Church and in the world : men will perceive the truth and assent to it, while they, at the same time, will reject its applications, and resist those who enjoin obedience to its spirit and its precepts.

The Jews, in the days of Christ's manifestation, reverenced the prophets, and built sepulchres over the ashes of the faithful men whom their fathers had slain. The truth uttered in past ages, and uttered to other men, they recognized as sacred and obligatory. But the men of their own age, who manifested the spirit of the prophets, and rebuked the same sins in themselves which had been denounced in their fathers-those men who embodied the principles of the old prophets, they persecuted to death. Well did Jesus say of those tomb-builders, that they in spirit allowed the deeds of their fathers, and that when he should send them prophets and apostles to reprove them for their sins, they would slay them as their fathers had slain the older prophets.

So it is in every age. There are those who will assent to truth in the abstract, while they reject it in life and action. They worship it in the past, but repudiate it in the present. I am no politician, and I make the reference only for conscience' sake, and to illustrate my subject : Suppose Gen. Washington could live again under some other name; suppose Thomas Jefferson were manifested in this age of the Republic in the person of some other man; and suppose they should utter the sentiments now that they uttered while they lived. Washington said, in a letter to Thomas Morris: "There is not a man living who wishes more sincerely than I do to see a plan adopted for the abolition of slavery: this can be accomplished only by legislative authority; and this, as far as my suffrage will go, shall not be wanting." Washington desired the abolition of slavery, and proposed to vote for its accomplishment, and when he died, emancipated all the slaves over whom he had any legal control. Jefferson, in his "Notes on Virginia," after setting forth the effects of slavery as most baneful, both upon the slave and his master, and upon the Republic, said: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, and that his justice cannot sleep for ever."-" When the tears of the slaves shall have involved heaven itself in darkness, doubtless a God of justice will awaken to their distress." Now, what I want to say is this-and I appeal to the knowledge and the conscience of you all whether I speak the truth: If Washington and Jefferson were now living, under other names, and if they uttered the same sentiments now which they uttered then, they would be maligned and persecuted by men of the present generation who yet profess to honor their principles. They could receive neither nomination nor appointment to any office connected with the government of that country whose Declaration of Independence the one wrote and the other maintained. Men now build their tombs and laud their characters; but if they were alive in this age to maintain their principles against the sentiments of this degenerate generation, many of these unprincipled tomb-builders would discard and persecute them.

"I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say." The principle, I think, is apparent. If we profess to love God all truth, while, at the same time, we refuse to espouse the truth, and reject those who require us to practise it, we deceive ourselves and others; and the day of judgment will disclose that we possess the same character, and belong to the same class, with the men reproved in the days of Christ. On this ground Jesus condemned the Pharisees of his own day, and will condemn the Pharisees of all ages in the last day. He said to them, "Ye have neither heard the Father's voice at any time, nor seen his shape, and ye have not his word abiding in you; for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not."—
"I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you."

A second development of this principle, and one which brings us directly to the particular truth contained in the text, is—that he that does not love man does not love God. John says to professed believers, in the text, "If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar."

This statement is unspeakably important in our times. We will put it in the affirmative form, and endeavor to exhibit its application to Christian character and duty.

Notice the foundation principles upon which this statement rests. John assumes that Christ was the true God and eternal life; that while "no man had seen God at any time, the only-begotton Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Christ was both God and man to John; not a mixed nature, as a certain Doctor of Divinity has recently taught, but distinctively, as we believe, God and man. In him God was manifested as he is, and man was manifested as he should be. Our race had lost the knowledge of the true man, as certainly, and as hopelessly, as they had lost the knowledge of the true God. By faith in Christ, we believe both in the true God and the true man at the same time. He, therefore, who loves Christ, loves both God and man, in him. Faith in Christ works by love to man as he should be, and love to Christ works by labor to make man what he should be

Now if we love the true humanity in Christ, we shall love it every where. Humanity in Christ is generic. It is the second Adam—the impersonation of man as God created him—the true soul, faculties and susceptibilities of the being, MAN.

God and Man being thus united in Christ, it is not possible to love God in Christ without loving man at the same time. He, therefore, who says, I love God, and hateth his brother, is a liar. For his brother that he hath seen is, in his nature, although marred in faculties, a living type of the humanity of Jesus, whom he hath not seen. The true humanity is a finite moral image of the infinite God. In kind, but not in degree, the moral nature of the Divine and human are the same. He, therefore, who loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, can neither love the true God, nor the true man in Christ, whom he hath not seen.

2. Having thus set forth the principles declared in the text, we shall now proceed, briefly, to show what fruits true love to Christ will develop in the lives of believers.

No one doubts that love to Christ is the true motive power of the gospel. This is assented to by all Christians, and by all benevolent societies, that aim to enlighten and save men. At the recent meeting of the American Board at Troy, love to Christ, as a first and essential motive in the missionary work, was especially insisted upon, by the able preacher for the present year. We assume, then, that the motive power in all true gospel effort is love to Jesus. But in this age, as in all other ages, we fear many deceive themselves concerning the qualities and the development of love to Christ in the soul. We shall now endeavor to point out some of its Scriptural and unfailing characteristics.

(a.) Love to Christ produces labor to make others like Christ. The character of Jesus is the standard to which the believer aspires, and to which he will labor to bring others. In its bearing upon efforts to evangelize the world, this influence of Christian love is worthy of marked consideration. It is love to Christ that makes HIM the model to which Christians endeavor to elevate others. There are various classes of philanthropists, some out of the churches and some in them, who no doubt are sincerely endeavoring to benefit their fellow-men. Now, whatever character is the model of excellence with any class of men, they will endeavor to mould others into that model. Love will necessarily produce this effect. If we love those for whom we labor, we will labor that they may be like those whom we love. A man whose ideal of excellence is some distinguished politician in Church or State will desire, most of all, that his son, or those he loves best, should be like that model. A man whose model is a successful merchant, will seek for his son the same qualifications. So every one will seek to conform others to the model of character which they love best, and which is to them within the limit of attainment. So there are ideal conditions in which men seek the happiness of society. Some would have all in communities, seeking their chief good in equal worldly condition. Other philanthropists seek the highest good of men in some new arrangement of the social economy. The standards of the best human condition are as various among philanthropists now who are not believers in Christ, as they were in the days of the Grecian sages, of whom Varro says, they sought the "greatest good" in one hundred and fifty different conditions. Men who have not supreme love for Christ do not realize the fact, that after all earthly evils are removed the greatest good of humanity is not yet attained. We admit that

> "Tis noble to maintain the right, To aid the weak against the strong, To stand with angels in the fight . Of love and truth against the wrong."

But while Christians may well admire philanthropy in its temporal aspects, and grieve often to see it misdirected, they know that happiness is subjective, not objective. It depends not on external things, but on an internal condition of the soul. You might raise a suffering mendicant to the highest social position, while his happiness would be less and his influence worse. Man's highest good consists in that state of mind in which his actions are prompted by love. To bring men into the condition of love, so that they will act in accordance with the law of love, is to accomplish the greatest good of humanity. Now, Jesus Christ is the model of this condition both in CHARACTER and in action; hence, love to Christ is the only impulse that both moves and guides the soul in right action for the good of men.

Do we then discard the efforts of those who, without faith in Christ, labor for the good of men? By no means; we neither discard nor discredit such efforts. One of the highest instincts of living beings is sympathy with the wronged and the suffering. Even in the orders of creation below man the cry of distress will arouse creatures of the same species and bring them to the rescue of the suffering one. The philanthropist who obeys the highest instinct of our nature, and rallies to the rescue of the wronged, is a prince compared with those who, while they profess to love Christ, deny by their conduct both the higher instincts of humanity and the holier instincts of divine love in the soul. Love of the true Christ gives divine life to the natural instinct, and guides to the attainment of the highest good of men.

(b.) I will notice a second characteristic development of love to Christ. It leads those who possess it to oppose every thing which injures man. True Christians love man for the sake of his nature—his true nature as revealed in Christ. It is the love of humanity-not the love of some single attribute or condition of humanity. The love of humanity in itself considered-not one race or class of the human family. An individual who loves man, as man, will oppose every thing that degrades his character, abates his happiness, or impairs his rights. A Christian father loves his son. That son is beset by several evils. One man aims to make him intemperate; the father will oppose him. Another aims to make him a slave; the father will oppose him. Another endeavors to keep him in ignorance; the father will oppose him. And the opposition of the father will be strong in proportion to the evil inflicted on his child. This is the very nature of love. A father who loves his child cannot do otherwise than oppose every thing that injures that child in person or in spirit. And not only this, but he will do so in regard to all his children. If he feels thus towards one and not towards others, he has lost the instincts of a father's heart. If he is very hostile to one influence that would injure his son, while he is willing he should be injured by some other evil, he is a monster and not a father. It is the nature and development of love to oppose every thing that injures loved objects. So with love to Christ. Humanity is loved in Christ as a nature. The Christian will therefore oppose every thing that mars the attributes or defiles the susceptibilities of that nature. A man who has love to Christ in his heart cannot be opposed to war while he tolerates slavery. He cannot be opposed to slavery while he tolerates intemperance. He cannot seek to promote man's spiritual interests while he is willing he should suffer temporal injuries. Such a perverted character is never formed under the influence of the love of Christ. The Rabbies and Pharisees, who sought heaven from selfish motives, and who labored to promote spiritual ends as a sect opposed to the Sadducees, could love certain classes of men, while they neglected or hated others; and such men can do so in every age. But he that loves the true man in Christ Jesus, will, in its measure, oppose every thing that injures the interests or the character of any human being. Although the image is marred by sin, yet every man bears the nature of the humanity which the Christian loves in Christ Jesus.

One thing further under this division of the subject: Love to Christ will not only oppose, but it will cast out the transgressor that is injuring others, and that refuses to be reclaimed. If a mother has a family of daughters, and one of them become vicious, when the defection is discovered she will reprove her erring child, and require immediate repentance and a return to virtue. If that daughter will not be reclaimed, but continues in vice, while at the same time she is influencing her sisters to crime, that mother, while she sorrows and prays for her unworthy child, will remove her from the family. She would do this because she loved virtue, and because she loved her other children. If she treated that daughter as she did the virtuous children in the family, if she overlooked the influence the sinning one was exercising to corrupt the others, such a mother would be an apostate from virtue, and regardless of parental obligation.

To such action the love of Christ prompts the Christian. When sin is in the church—sin, which perverts the truth of the gospel, and corrupts the hearts of professing Christians—the love of Christ will expel it; or, if this is not attainable, it will separate Christians from the contagion. Such is the nature of Christian love. It produces effort to remove all evil from men, or to remove them from the evil. Wherever true love to Christ exists, this is one of its certain developments.

(c.) Love to man as exhibited in Christ leads Christians to labor first and most for those who most need sympathy and effort. This is so plain a characteristic of divine love in the soul, that we are sometimes astonished that men should profess to be Christians who do not discover in themselves this element of Christian character. But we need not be astonished. The human heart is deceitful and selfish. To approve the right, and to suppose ourselves in the right, while love of self or of sect, instead of love to man, prompts our efforts, is a delusion not less common now than it was in the they of Christ. To correct this state of self-deception, the Saviour presented truth in more strating forms, and repeated it more frequently, than he has done in relation to any other evil to which the human soul is subject.

When the disciples of John came, in their master's name, to inquire whether Jesus were the Messiah, He replied, Go and tell John that I bestow temporal benefits first on those who are the most needy—the poor, the sick, the blind; and so I do spiritually—"the poor have the gospel preached unto them." John knew the marks of the Messiah. The answer settled the question.

A Jew professing to love God, and who assented to the sum of the Divine law, asked Jesus, "Who is my neighbor?" In answer, we have the striking parable of the man who fell among thieves. Some who professed to teach the prevailing religion in its most stringent forms, passed by the helpless sufferer; while relief was granted by one whom the Pharisees of those days supposed to be an alien from true faith, and who was not probably so orthodox in theory as themselves. Yet Christ approved the conduct of this man as neighbor to the one in need, and commanded the inquirer to go and do likewise.

Superadded, we have the parables of the lost sheep and the lost piece of money. The true shepherd will leave the ninety and nine who are in less danger, and free from suffering, and go to succor the one who is exposed to the wolf and other beasts of prey. The import of this teaching cannot be doubted. That alone is true love to Christ which proproduces labor first and most for those who need most.

Suppose a mother has a family of children: She loves all her offspring alike; but one is suffering and in danger, and needs her assistance more than others. What will that mother do? Will she stop and minister to the others, while she neglects the suffering one? Not if she has a mother's heart. A mother will leave those who need her care less, and go to succor and befriend the more needy. You know she will! Love can do nothing else. If we have the love of Christ for man in our hearts, the moment one class needs labor and sympathy more than another, Christian love directs effort to that class of men more than to the less needy. This is the nature of love, both human and Divine. It is exemplified and illustrated in the life of the Son of God, and by all the apostles and evangelists and martyrs of the primitive Church. The voice of inspiration, and the influence of the Divine Spirit in the heart, teach this doctrine. Its truth is beyond all controversy. Those, therefore, who profess to labor for the less needy, while they neglect those in more need, are recreant both to human and Divine love. With the true Christian, love rises and urges in proportion to the wrongs and helplessness of men. Such you know is the love of Christ. It needs not to be argued with the Christian heart. Jesus left the bosom of the Father, he left the adoring presence of angel spirits, and came to seek and to save those who were lost. We were slaves to the world and the devil, and he gave himself to crucifixion for us. And when on earth, those who needed most were those whom he first and most befriended. "Beginning at Jerusalem."

The Saviour of sinners identifies himself with the destitute and wronged and suffering ones of our race, and receives benefits conferred upon them as being conferred upon his own person. And blessed are they who shall stand when Christ shall say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." But woe be to those who pass by the degraded and wronged, to those who say, Lord! Lord! while they are destitute of the love of Christ for his little ones! Upon such the fearful and final sentence is pronounced: "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me: depart."

May God, by his Holy Spirit, grant us that love of Christ which will save us from such a doom.

APPLICATION.

It may be said truly that these principles apply equally to all Christian effort, and to all benevolent enterprises; and in this connection we are asked, why then do we not expend our efforts through the older missionary organizations, instead of forming new ones to labor for the accomplishment of the same ends? The question is apposite, and I shall endeavor to answer.

It is incumbent upon us to give reasons for our efforts to some who inquire. Many feel, as we think all should, that it is not only the privilege but the duty of all Christian people to send their money through any organization they may choose; and that they should examine and send their aid through that society which is established upon principles most in accordance with the gospel. The older societies being in existence, the formation of others does imply that many Christian people think their principles are in some respects defective, or new ones would not be established. With me this is true; and it is due to every one who has any interest in the missionary work, that an answer should be given why we deem it the duty of Christians, while they hear and respect other missionary organizations, to contribute their funds through free missionary societies.

The reasons for the free missionary organizations lie in the principle and action of the older Boards,

The American Board receives slaveholders into mission churches. They propagate a Christianity which, in the eyes of all men who know their principles, recognizes slaveholding as consistent with the gospel of Jesus Christ. They send misssonaries to the Indians. They find there two classes of heathen, the red man and the black; often about the same in color, and always of about equal intelligence. Now what do the missionaries of the Board do in such circumstances? They recognize those as Christians who enslave others, contrary to all the principles of justice and mercy. The Christianity they establish among the Indians leads them to believe that slavery is in accordance with the principles of the gospel of Christ. The missionaries make the standard by which the Indian who accepts it must judge of the character of Christ, and of their duties to men. The light of nature would teach the Indian that slavery was wrong, while the missionaries by taking it into the church teach them that it is right. This reception of slavery into the mission churches not only corrupts the conscience of the Indians, but it corrupts the conscience of Christians at home. Those who continue to support the old Boards must apologize for or defend the connection of slavery with their missions. If Christians will apologize for slavery in connection with the Church, they will learn to do so in connection with the State. Their conscience will be defiled in regard to the corrupting influences of slavery every where.

Thus it seems to me there can be no doubt about the fact that the missions of the American Board are dishonoring the gospel, and propagating, by the money of the benevolent, a slaveholding Christianity among the Indians. At the same time, they are corrupting the Church at home.

It is due to this influential Society to say that they will not propagate slavery with the gospel in other nations except our own country. In Africa they will not receive a black slaveholder until he emancipates his slaves. This very fact shows that they recognize their principles as wrong, and that the slave power in this country has either intimidated or corrupted them. All further action on the subject, and even all further discussion, is discountenanced and resisted. They publish their approval of the Indian missions as they are, and have rigidly enforced a finality of discussion and action in all meetings of the Board, and speak of their meetings as peaceful and spiritual when this enormous evil in which they are involved is not referred to.

It is sometimes said, by good people who have not attended to the history of this evil as it has strengthened and confirmed itself in the American Board, that the Board will in the end cease to propagate a slaveholding gospel. Such persons do not remember that both the Board and their missionaries have reached a finality upon this subject. Sin does not exhaust itself, but strengthens itself wherever it is tolerated. If the gospel which missionary boards proclaim tolerates it, what can condemn or remove it?

The missionaries where slavery is sanctified by baptizing it into the churches say, "Nor can we ever make it a test of pisty or a condition of admission to the privileges of the church, that a candidate should express a determination not to live and die a slaveholder."

In relation to buying and selling their fellow-beings, and even in relation to the crime of selling children from their parents, the missionaries of the Board do not consider, such crimes, if they should occur, as disciplinable offenses. They say, "In relation to the separation of parents and children, we must first remark that it is one of those things which are not forbidden by express injunction of the Scriptures. It is impossible in our circumstances to make it a general rule, that the separation of parents and children by sale and purchase shall be regarded as a disciplinable offense."

First they say it is one of those things which are not forbidden by express injunction of the Scriptures. How dreadful this is! It is one of the ten commandments: "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbor's." Yet these missionaries teach that a man may not only covet, but take and sell his neighbor's wife and child, and they know no injunction of the Bible against it. Merciful God! what evil sin, cherished, will work in churches and mission boards, and even in the minds of missionaries themselves! Letters have been subsequently drawn from them that mitigate the enormity of this abuse, but nothing that changes their position.

The missionaries say likewise that their doctrine and practice have reached a finality with them as well as with the Board. They write, "We earnestly hope that what we have written may be taken as a final exposition of our sentiments—a defining of our position." They say again, "It may be deemed our duty by some to adopt a train of measures that shall aim in their object directly to countervail the whole system, and in the end undermine the entire fabric which human legislation has framed in regard to slavery. We do not feel that we are required to adopt any such course, nor do we regard this as our work."

Such are the principles upon which the missionary work is conducted by the American Board among the Indians, and by the Home Missionary Board in slave States. We do not hesitate to say that such principles, instead of being the principles of the gospel of Christ, are in direct conflict both with the nature and design of the gospel. We say this here to vindicate ourselves, and to remonstrate with our brethren.

A free missionary society, both for home and foreign missions, is now formed upon what we believe to be gospel principles. That it is right to propagate the gospel without slavery we think none can doubt. That it is right to propagate it with slavery some believe. Each Christian has the opportunity to maintain whichever of the two principles his heart and conscience approve. We state the case as we believe Christ would have us do, and leave the results with God, and the responsibilities with each individual Christian.

We hereby certify that we have examined the accounts of Lewis Tappan, Treasurer of the American Missionary Association, for the year ending 31st August, 1858, with the vouchers, and find the same to be correct, leaving a balance against the Association (after paying all liabilities to that date) of seven thousand seven hundred and forty-one dollars and ninety-three cents.

ANTHONY LANE, Auditing JAS. O. BENNETT, Committee.

MINUTES

SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Association met at Worcester, Mass., September 28th, at 2 o'clock P. M., at the Union Church. Hon. William Jackson, President, in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. John P. Bardwell.

The minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read by the Recording Secretary. Rev. Epaphras Goodman and Rev. Andrew Benton were appointed Assistant Secretaries of the Meeting.

The Treasurer, Lewis Tappan, read his Report of the receipts and expenditures of the Association. On motion, the Report was referred to the Auditors of the last year, Messra. Anthony Lane and James O. Bennett.

The Annual Report of the Executive Committee was then read by the Corresponding Secretary for the Foreign Department, Rev. George Whipple. At intervals during the reading, at the suggestion of the Secretary, Rev. George Thompson, from Africa, and Rev. John P. Bardwell, missionaries, gave brief addresses in relation to the Mendi and Ojibue missions, and the congregation united in singing a part of the missionary hymn,

"From Greenland's fcy mountains."

At the conclusion of the reading, the Report, which embraced both the Foreign and Home Departments, was, on motion, approved, and ordered to be published under the direction of the Executive Committee.

The following committees were then appointed, viz.:

Committee on Arrangements.—Messrs. Brewer, Russell, Whipple, Thatcher, and Paine.

Committee on Business, Resolutions, &c.—Messrs. Fee, Parsons, Jocelyn, Tappan, and Benton.

Committee on Nominations.—Messrs. Jocelyn, Parish, Fowler, Goodman, and Peck.

Rev. John G. Fee, missionary in Kentucky, was invited to address the meeting, to which he responded by giving interesting and important statements of the work in which he and his companions are engaged in Kentucky and North Carolina, in establishing churches which do not fellowship slaveholders, and in preaching a free gospel.

The Association adjourned to meet at the Old South Church, to-morrow, at 9 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The annual discourse was preached in the Union Church, by Rev. Henry E. Peck, of Ohio, from 1 Cor. ix. 22, and Matt. iv. 8-10.

THURSDAY MORNING, September 29.

A meeting for devotional exercises was held at the Old South Church, at 8 o'clock A. M., Rev. Bancroft Fowler presiding.

At 9 o'clock the President took the chair, and the session was opened with prayer by Rev. Andrew Benton.

On motion of Mr. Whipple, a Committee of Enrolment was appointed by the Chair, consisting of Messrs. Bardwell, Parsons, Smith, Peckham, and Russell.

Rev. Lucian Farnham, of Illinois, then addressed the Association. At the close of his marks, the Committee on Business and Resolutions submitted a report, offering a series of thirteen resolutions. The report was accepted, and the resolutions laid upon the table, to be taken up and discussed in their order.

On motion, the first resolution was taken up and discussed by Revs. M. E. Strieby, of Ohio; John G. Fee, of Kentucky; A. Benton and C. B. Boynton, of Ohio; E. Goodman and L. Farnham, of Illinois; A. Alverd and Asaph Rice, of Massachusetts; J. Brewer and Mr. Jones, of Connecticut; S. S. Jocelyn and L. Tappan, of New-York. An amendment by Mr. Brewer, adding after the word caste, "every where and in all its forms," was adopted, and on motion, the resolution was passed as amended.

On the second resolution, the Hon. Amasa Walker, of Massachusetts, addressed the Association, presenting various important considerations in its support, after which it was adopted.

The Association adjourned to meet at 2 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The President called the Association to order at 2 o'clock.

In the temporary absence of the Committee on Resolutions, the President called upon Rev. George Thompson, who entertained the meeting with an interesting account of the Mendi Mission.

The third resolution was read and adopted without discussion.

The fourth resolution was read, and on a question by Rev. B. Fowler, a reply was elicited from Mr. Tappan, and a discussion followed, in which Mesers. Goodman, Boynton, Fee, and Tappan engaged, when the resolution was adopted.

The fifth resolution was read, and without discussion was adopted.

The sixth resolution was read. Dr. Parsons of Maine, addressed the audience in favor of the resolution. Rev. George Allen inquired if he, as a resident of Worcester, though not a member, might address the Association on the resolution. On motion, Mr. Allen was invited to speak. He expressed a friendly feeling—had contributed for some of our missions, but regarded the resolution as too sweeping in its application to other Societies, &c. He was replied to, and a general discussion followed, in which Messrs. Fee, Allen, Tappan, Kilgore, Farnham, and Prof. Peck, participated, when it was adopted.

Resolutions 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, were adopted without discussion.

The thirteenth resolution was read. Rev. Charles F. Martin, of Illinois, under appointment as a missionary to the Copts in Egypt, spoke on the resolution, and gave a brief and interesting account of the Copts, and the mission contemplated, when the resolutions were adopted.

Rev. Seth T. Wolcott, missionary from Jamaica, addressed the meeting, and gave statements of the Jamaica Mission, followed by Mr. Tappan.

The committee on resolutions reported the fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth resolutions.

Remarks were made on the fourteenth resolution by Messrs. Whipple and Jocelyn, when they were adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following are the resolutions, as adopted:

I. Resolved, That we recognize in the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus-Christ the principles upon which the American Missionary Association was founded, namely, that Christianty wages an uncompromising warfare against all forms of sin, public as well as private—social, political, religious, organic; that Christian churches should receive those only who give evidence of being true Christians, excluding those whose indulgence of known sins discredits their religious professions; that, accordingly, slaveholding, caste—every where and in all its forms—polygamy, and the like, should be excluded from Christian churches by the terms of admission or by disciplinary process; that it is a perversion of Christian institutions to receive or retain in church membership those who indulge in such practices, in the hope of their future repentance, or to attempt the reformation of the corrupt churches of the East or elsewhere, by remaining in fellowship with them; and that we believe that so far as Missionary Boards do not adopt and carry out these principles, they cannot expect the Divine blessing.

II. Resolved, That it is a matter of thanksgiving and encouragement that since the agitation of the principles of Free Missions and their promulgation by the Bible Conventions at Syracuse and Albany, which resulted in the establishment of this Association, a change has been steadily taking place among the Christian people of this country, with reference to the management of missions, that will, we doubt not, result in an increased love and patronage of the cause by the churches of this land.

III. Resolved, That this change of sentiment is both manifested and accelerated by the frequent and earnest appeals now making throughout the country, urging Christians to withdraw their support from ecclesiastical and voluntary. Associations that, instead of rebuking oppression, allow the weight of their influence to be cast in its favor; and that it is a matter of congratulation that these appeals are neither powerless nor ineffectual, already resulting in large numbers bursting their ecclesiastical and political bonds, to relieve themselves of the responsibility of sustaining oppression, and using their influence in behalf of Christian freedom.

IV. Resolved, That, while we rejoice in the action taken by several religious denominations against slaveholding, we regret that the influence of so many others is in favor of the infamous practice; and especially do we record our unfeigned sorrow that the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the American Home Missionary Society are deeply implicated in upholding slavery, by sustaining missionaries to gather and preside over churches into which slaveholders are admitted, or dismissed to other churches, as Christians in good and regular standing.

V. Resolved, That it is the obvious duty of every church, every minister, every ecclesiastical body, and especially of every missionary organization, to discountenance American slavery; and that such religious professors, teachers, and organizations as countenance the iniquitous system, or the practice of slaveholding, bring Christianity into disesteem, hinder the conversion of men, and dishonor the name of Christ.

VI. Resolved, That as sacrifices of feeling and interest have been voluntarily and cheerfully made by the friends of freedom in leaving their political parties because they sustain slavery, so, in a higher sense, is it the duty of anti-slavery Christians, even if it leads to the sundering of stronger ties, to leave religious and benevolent organizations implicated in similar moral delinquency; and that if they do not give their cheerful and liberal aid to Associations that carry out, without compromise, the great principles of an anti-slavery gospel, they give evidence that they have more regard for political than religious consistency.

VII. Resolved That we cannot reasonably expect that God will honor the churches of this country as his agents for the conversion of the world, so long as the prevailing sentiment among them is in favor of principles and practices at war with the great truths of Christianity and an enlightened humanity.

VIII. Resolved, That, inasmuch as the conversion of heathen and semi-civilized nations is greatly hindered by the immoral lives and unchristian practices of multitudes who resort to them from nominally Christian countries, it behoves every friend of missions to do all in his power to put an end to customs at home that injure his fellow-men, and prevent them from being fit representatives of a moral and Christian people.

IX. Resolved. That the custom of war, the use of intoxicating drinks, and the practice of slaveholding, by professed Christians in this land, are formidable obstacles to the civilization and conversion of heathen nations; and that no man should be considered an enlightened and true friend of missions who gives the influence of his preceptor example to these unchristian usages.

X Resolved, That the necessities of our countrymen in the new settlements, as well as the constant and large additions to our population by immigration, call loudly for the greatly increased support and extension of Hoxe Missions, upon which the dearest hopes of the present and future generations so greatly depend.

XI. Resolved, That we record our grateful acknowledgments to the Great Head of the Church for his festering care of the missions of the Association the past year, the general health and success of the missionaries, the good that has been effected through their instrumentality, the multiplication of friends, the augmentation of funds, the increasing influence of the Association; and in view of these manifestatations of the Divine favor, we earnestly solicit the prayers and the contributions of the people of God, for the continued and increasing prosperity of the Society.

XII. Resolved, That it being manifest that the redemption of Africa is to be effected by Christianity and Civilisation going hand in hand under the influence and agency of Christian men, all attempts to bring about that great event in any other way must prove disastrous and abortive.

XIII. Resolved, That the action of the Executive Committee, respecting the establishment of a mission among the Copts in Egypt, has the decided approbation of this Annual Meeting; that the Committee be encouraged to increase the missionary force in Africa and wherever the providence of God leads the way; and that we cancestly appeal to the friends of Christian missions to contribute at least seventy-five thousand dollars to the treasury of this Association for its Foreign and Home Departments, the ensuing year.

XIV. Resolved, That as in the providence of God several free churches have been recently organized in some of the slave States, and there are hopeful and increased evidences that other districts in slave States will receive the gospel of Christ, in its manifest opposition to slaveholding, caste, dc., we put furth increased and vigorous efforts to extend the gospel in those districts.

XV. Resolved, That we earnestly recommend to the friends of the Association to make efficient efforts to secure the presentation of its principles and claims to the churches with which they are connected, by the pastors or other agent, for the purpose of producing a deeper interest in the cause of free missions, and of increasing the pecuniary means to carry forward the great work to which God has called

XVI. Resolved, That it is the duty of the religious press, as well as the gospel ministry, to declare the whole counsel of God; and as the old national Societies for the publication of religious tracts and books, and Sabbath-school books, have refused to perform this duty, by excluding from their publications the truth against the American sin of slaveholding. we recognize with gratitude to God the increasing prosperity of the American Reform Tract and Book Society, located at Cincinnai, whose avowed object it is "to apply the principles of Christianity to every known sin, and again recommend it to the hearty cooperation and liberal patronage of the Christian public."

XVII. Resolved, That the Christian Press, edited by Rev. C. B. Boynton, and published at Cincinnati, Ohio, by its open and uncompromising course against the popular immoralities of the age, and its able advocacy of Christian anti-slavery principles and gospel reform, is an efficient instrument for the advancement of the Free Mission cause; and we cordially recommend it as a paper that should be liberally patronized, and circulated in all parts of our country.

XVIII. Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to the Committee of Arrangements of this city, who have, for several weeks past, acted efficiently to promote the interests of this meeting; to the Union and Old South religious societies, for the use of their churches; to their respective choirs for their services; and to those citizens of Worcester who have extended their hospitality to the members and friends of the Association.

The Committee on Nominations reported names for the officers of the Association for the ensuing year. On motion, the report of the Committee was adopted, and the following persons were elected:

It was on motion resolved that the thanks of the Association be presented to Rev. Prof. Peck for his able discourse, and that it be published under the direction of the Executive Committee.

At the conclusion, the Corresponding Secretary for the Foreign Department, addressed the Association on his, and the individual responsibilities of all, and of the Association; solemnly and affectionately exhorting to effort and diligence, in view of the ruin of the world lying in wickedness, the worth of the soul, the love of Christ, and by the brevity and uncertainty of life; when the Association adjourned to meet at the place to be designated by the Executive Committee.

The President called upon Rev. Mr. Brown, of Andover, who offered prayer, and the audience, after uniting in singing the Christian doxology, separated.

In the evening, a large and deeply interested audience listened to statements of the missions, &c., from Rev. Messrs. Whipple, Fee, Thompson and Boynton, connected with religious services of prayer and praise.

AND THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPER

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

In presenting their Seventh Annual Report, the Executive Committee deem the occasion a suitable one to reassert the distinctive features of the Association, and vindicate the necessity of its organization. They feel called upon to do this, as well to answer the inquiries of the faithful stewards of Christ, who would have an intelligent reason for the use they make of the funds or the talents intrusted to them for the up-building of His kingdom, as to meet the honest objections of those who regard as unwise or inimical all who do not, at whatever sacrifice of principle or efficiency it may require, direct all the missionary efforts of given classes of Christians, through one common channel.

The Christian brethren who united in the formation of the American Missionary Association were actuated by no hostility to existing missionary bodies; they freely acknowledged and rejoiced in the good that had been done, and still prayed for their purity and success. They had coöperated with those bodies, to give the gospel to the destitute of our own and foreign lands. Their ears had thus become familiar with the cry of countless multitudes, borne upon every breeze of heaven, and their hearts were pained almost to breaking, with an apprehension of the utter inadequacy of the instrumentalities then made use of for the world's conversion.

The whole Christian world were not supplying the demands of one tenth part of the field already, by Divine Providence, opened to them, while the call from the world at large was for an increase of an hundred or a thousand-fold. They feared, too, that the Church of Christ, and many of the benevolent Societies of the land, were fast palsying the right hand of their power, and incurring the displeasure of a just and holy God, in the welcomed embrace of the foul spirit of slavery, whose influence in their counsels was becoming every day more and more manifest. They had long struggled against the conviction which was gradually forcing itself upon their minds, that they could not longer coöperate with the missionary bodies with which they had loved to labor, and in whose welfare they still felt the liveliest interest, "without bringing on their own consciences the guilt of partnership in the palpable injustice and all the wickedness of slavery."

Upon a careful examination of official publications, they found they had been, for some years past, aiding to sustain forty missionaries in the slaveholding States, who were required to bear credentials acceptable to the ministerial body of their denomination within those States, and whose published reports of ministerial labor, in the aggregate equal to the labor of one man for one hundred and sixty years, contain no record of any effort, direct or indirect, made to secure "liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." No evidence could be obtained that their Executive Board had ever counselled them to regard as proper subjects for discipline, even those who had "sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes."

The Synod of Kentucky had said that cases had occurred in the denomination, which more than all others in the Southern States enjoyed the labors of these missionaries, "where professors of the religion of mercy have torn the mother from her children, and sent her into a merciless and returnless exile; yet acts of discipline have rarely followed such conduct." The Synod of South Carolina and Georgia had said of the victims of this wrong, that "in this Christian republic there are over two millions of human beings in the condition of heathen, and in some respects in a worse condition;" that they would "bear comparison with the heathen in any country in the world;" and that "they have no Bibles to read at their own firesides; no family altars; and when in affliction, sickness, or death, they have no ministers, to address to them the consolations of the gospel, nor to bury them with solemn and appropriate services." For six successive years efforts were made to interest existing missionary organizations in behalf of this class of our fellow-men, who were perishing for lack of knowledge in a land of Bibles; famishing at our very doors for that bread of life that we were laboring to send to the uttermost part of the earth. In the midst of these exertions, it was found that a Society with which nearly every one who ultimately united in forming the American Missionary Association was in some way connected, had missionary churches under its care, and sustained them by its funds, in which persistent slaveholders were freely admitted. For three successive years, the Board was entreated to take a position against receiving into their mission churches slaveholders, who continued such after due instruction and admonition. In the supposed final action that was taken on these memorials in 1845, it was assumed that such slaveholders could give credible evidence of repentance and faith in Christ, and could not scripturally be denied admission to the Church of God. By a direct vote, they refused to say that "in the question of receiving elaveholders to, and retaining them in, the missionary churches, the Board will expect its missionaries and churches to treat slaveholding in the matter of instruction, admonition, and discipline, as they should and would treat drunkenness, gaming, falsehood, bigamy, idolatry, and the like; and that whenever and wherever it shall appear that the missionaries and the churches, in the exercise of their appropriate liberty, do not do so, it will be the duty of this Board, in the exercise of its liberty, to dissolve further connection with them." The memorialists wished the Board to class slaveholding among offenses which, if not forsaken after due instruction and a imonition, should be regarded as disciplinable in God's house. This the Board refused. In justification of their refusal, they say ;

The memorialists asked a fish, they obtained a serpent; they asked an egg, they got a scorpion. The report pleads for the admission of those to the Church who work these abominations, on the ground that they may, notwithstanding, give credible evidence of piety. It intimates that some among the heathen are in fact regenerated by the Holy Spirit before they are freed from all participation in these social and moral evils, and that therefore the master and the slave, the ruler and the subject, may be all gathered in the same fold of Christ; that there, and in this manner, under proper teaching, all may learn the great lesson, (so difficult for partially sanctified men to learn,) that in Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free; but that all are one in Him, and that the master will be prepared to break the bonds of the slave, and the oppressive ruler led to dispense justice to the subject, and the proud Brahmin fraternally to embrace the man of low caste; and each to do it cheerfully, because it is humane and right, and because they are all children of the great household of God.

This position cannot be mistaken. The Prudential Committee elsewhere informs us that all this has been done; that these classes (the slaveholder, the oppressor, the proud Brahmin) have been welcomed as the children of God. In another part of the report, polygamy is classed in the same category with these sins.

The natural and necessary results of the line of policy herein laid down, were even then developed, and could hardly have been unknown to those so confidently urging it. In Southern India, the experiment of admitting caste to mission churches had been tried. Rev. Hollis Read had said of these practices in the English churches in which the experiment had been made;

"They have not, it is feared, in that part of the country, embraced Christianity, but Christianity has been made to embrace them; and instead of imparting her purity and simplicity, as she is wont to do, she has been loaded with the filthy rags of impure rites, and customs, and caste, prejudice and superstition; and she is now exhibited throughout those regions of darkness, more in the form of a ludicrous comedian, than as an angel of light."

In 1834, the Bishop of Calcutta charged the missionaries of his Church that "nothing but the total abolition of all heathen usages connected with this anti-Christian and anti-social system, could save the missiona." He says of them, "an isthmus cast up between Christ and Belial, a bridge left standing for retreat to Paganism, a citadel kept erect within the Christian enclosure for the great Adversary's occupation, is what the gospel cannot tolerate."

In 1845, the missionaries of the American Board in Madura began to find that they must put and keep caste out of their churches, in order to efficiency or safety in their work, and to apprehend that the effort then being made to break up the remains of it among them would rend their churches almost to dissolution; an apprehension which in a subsequent year received an almost literal fulfilment. The venerable Dr. Scudder soon after declared that he "was convinced that they erred at first in granting any toleration to this absurdity; that they ought to have required every candidate for the church to renounce it, and that it is now much more difficult to break it down, and more difficult, too, to establish right principles on the subject, than if they had begun right."

Slaveholding.—For more than a quarter of a century, the experiment of gathering the master and the slave "into the same fold of Christ" had been tried, but the bonds had not been broken, and slavery had increased instead of being diminished, under the influence of Christianity thus exhibited. Eighteen years after the commencement of the experiment in the Choctaw nation, a law was passed prohibiting [&]quot;But slavery is not the only social wrong to be met in the progress of the missionary work, and to which the principles which are adopted in prosecuting that work must probably be applied. There are the castes of India, deeply and inveterately inwrought in the very texture of society, causing to the mass of the people hereditary and deep degradation, leading to the most inhuman and contemptuous feelings and conduct in social life, and presenting most formidable barriers to every species of improvement. There are also the unrestrained exactions, made in the form of revenue, or of military or other service, connected with a species of feudalism, prevailing in many unenlightened communities, which are most unrightenes to individuals and families. There are also those various forms and degrees of oppression, whether of law or usage, prevailing under the arbitrary governments which bear sway over the larger part of the earth's surface."

any missionary or preacher from teaching slaves how to read, to write, or to sing, in meeting-houses or schools, or in any open place, without the consent of the owner; or allowing them to sit at table with him, under penalty of being compelled to leave the nation for ever; and after the experiment had progressed a few years longer, the slave was restricted in the possession of property, and hindrances were placed in the way of his emancipation.

The results are sufficiently appalling. Surely Christian men may be excused from any further participation in them.

This report was considered final. No advance from its positions was to be hoped for. What should the memorialists then do? Their convictions were deliberately formed, and unalterable. Further coöperation with bodies thus involved with these offenses was impossible. In such circumstances and with such convictions, they must either cease to coöperate in the work of spreading the gospel, or they must withdraw and undertake it by themselves in their own way. To maintain a nominal connection with institutions to which they could contribute nothing, and to attend meetings from year to year for the purpose of agitation and protest, would tend neither to their own growth in grace, nor to the advantage of those whom they had already unsuccessfully attempted to convince.

Between these afternatives they could not hesitate. The command of Christ to go into all the earth and preach the gospel to every creature, they believed to be of perpetual obligation. They could not, if they would, be relieved from this duty; they would not, if they could, be deprived of the privilege. To withdraw from the work would be to deny Christ, retard the progress of his glorious gospel, consign to destruction those whom, by a faithful discharge of their duty, they might hope to save, and bring darkness, if not death, upon their own souls. To enter anew upon the work, under an organization which, in its appropriate field, would tolerate no evil that Christ came to remove, and overlook no being whom he died to save, would, they confidently believed, secure the Divine favor, and preserve for the missionary work the influence and the contributions of thousands, that would otherwise be lost to the cause. The path of duty was plain before them. With grief of heart at parting from Societies which they had long aided and loved, and among whose missionaries were some of the choicest spirits of earth, they determined to go forward, and, at whatever hazard of reputation for wisdom and piety it might require, form a new Missionary Association, from whose fellowship these offenses should be excluded.

The providences of God had prepared the way for the speedy accomplishment of their work. A large number of native Africans, Mendians, had been brought to our shores, and, after a long struggle, been declared free by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Committee through whose agency their freedom had been accomplished, deemed the occasion an imperative one for commencing a missionary station in Africa. They offered to place these Africans, and the four thousand dollars that remained of the money contributed for their defense, in the hands of a Missionary Society, if they could receive the assurance that the fund should be kept separate from any money coming from slaveholders, and that the mission should be conducted on anti-slavery principles. This overture being rejected, the Committee, of necessity, commenced a mission at Kaw-Mendi, West Africa.

A mission had also been commenced among the emancipated people of Jamaica, which was then under the care of a committee in this country; there was another among the Ojibue Indians, under the Western Evangelical Missionary Society, and others among the fugitives in Canada. All these were conducted by gentlemen professing anti-slavery feelings.

A convention for Bible missions met at Albany, September 2 and 3, 1846, at which, after deliberation and prayer, the American Missionary Association was formed, for the purpose of gathering churches in our own and heathen countries, from which the sins of caste, polygamy, slaveholding and the like, should be excluded by the terms of admission, or by disciplinary process. The bodies above named soon after merged themselves in the new Association. Its constitution contains the following articles:

ART. III. Any person of evangelical sentiments,* who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the Society; and by the payment of thirty dollars at any one time, a life member.

ABT. VIII. This Society, in collecting funds, in appointing officers, agents, and missionaries, and in selecting field of labor and conducting the missionary work, will endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery, by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor, or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow-beings as slaves.

The principles of the Association, thus enunciated, the Executive Committee co dently believe are based on eternal truth, and dear to the heart of the Saviour. They have endeavored, therefore, in the discharge of their duties, to make a full exemplification of them, in all their practical bearings; with what real result, in the most important and highest sense, and with what purity of motive, the great judgment-day will reveal. The apparent result, as seen in the report of the last-year's labors, will now be presented.

DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT.

The appointment of Corresponding Secretary of the Home Department, tendered to Rev. Mr. Walker at our last Annual Meeting, the obligations which he owed the church of which he was pastor, compelled him reluctantly to decline. In April last, the Executive Committee filled the vacancy thus made by the appointment of the Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, who accepted the appointment, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office in May. Mr. Harned resigned his post as Agent, and as a member of the Executive Committee, in March.

The Committee have to report the removal by death of one of their foreign missionaries, during the year. Mr. J. W. Briggs, of the Jamaica Mission, died a few days after his arrival at the island, before he had commenced labor at the station to which he was appointed.

By the Treasurer's Report, it will be seen that the contributions to the Association have increased from $30,726 29, last year, to $42,496 20, an increase of more than 33 per cent.

The number of life members, at the date of our last Annual Report, was 658; the number added since, is 211, an increase of 30 per cent on the previous number. The whole number at the close of the year is 864.

^{*} By evangelical sentiments we understand, among others, a belief in the guilty and lost condition of all men without a Saviour; the Supreme Delty, incarnation and atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit; repentance, faith, and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul; and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and salvation of the righteous.

MENDI MISSION.

KAW-MENDI AND TISSANA, WEST AFRICA.

Missionaries.—Rev. Gro. Tuomeson, Rev. J. C. Tepet, Rev. Morris Oppicri, John C. Brooks, Doctof T. G. Cole, Daniel W. Burton, Sander, Gray, Edward Henny Green, (a native teacher), Mrs. Trompson, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Oppicre, Mrs. Green, (Margiu), Miss Hannan More, Mrs. Kamala McGure, Miss Loyra Saxyon, Miss Many B. Aldrich, Miss Jane Winters. Total, 17.

The large company of missionaries under appointment for this mission, at the date of our last Report, all, except Mr. Brooks and Miss Winters, embarked at New-York for Sierra Leone, the 25th of December last, and landed in Africa, February 1, 1858. Mr. Brooks sailed early in October, and reached Freetown, Nov. 17, after an absence from the mission of about seven months. Miss Winters still remains under appointment in this country. Mr. Arnold's health has been such during the year past, that his physicians counsel him not to return to Africa. Acting under their advice, he has asked for the dismissal of himself and his wife from the service of the Association.

Owing to causes beyond the control of the Executive Committee, the sailing of the missionary companies with their supplies was so long delayed last fall, that it was found impossible for them to erect the buildings, the prepared material for which they took with them, at the new stations for which they were designed, before the commencement of the rainy season. This has proved a serious embarrassment to the labors of the missionaries, and prevented them from commencing operations as extensively as they had designed to do in the interior. The accommodations at Kaw-Mendi were not sufficient for so large a company, and a part of their number have labored during a portion of the year, with missionaries of other Societies at Freetown. The older members of the mission, those best acquainted with the state of the country, and the influence of the missions upon its chiefs, fully believe that if they could have reached Africa three months earlier, they could have commenced three new stations in the interior, and have prevented the recent war which has desolated the whole country. Mr. Thompson says he has no doubt that the influence of the mission would have prevented it. As it was, the station at Tissana (Mo-Tappan) was the only one attempted. The newly arrived missionaries have all suffered more or less from sickness during their acclimating season, and some of those who have been longer in Africa, have suffered from the debilitating influence of the climate; yet, through the mercy of God, there has been less sickness among them, in proportion to their number, than in the previous year.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have, however, been called to part with their little son George, five years of age, who died at the mission on the 6th of June, and Mrs. Thompson has been compelled to return to this country for the recovery of her health.

Schools.—The school at Kaw-Mendi has received several additions to its numbers during the year, and made very perceptible and encouraging progress. Several of the scholars give good evidence that they are Christians, and striving to prepare themselves for future usefulness. From some of them the missionaries are now beginning to derive assistance. At one time Mr. Tefft wrote:

"During most of the time I was in town. (Freetown, Sierra Leone.) Mr. Gray and Miss More put William B. Tucker and James R. Anderson, each some thirteen to sixteen years old, into the school, to teach our largest boys. These two boys came here from the ignorance incident to heathenism, just before brother Thompson's arrival, at a time her there was no school. They now speak good English, write, as you know, quite a good hand, are studying arithmetic, geography, grammar, philosophy, &c.; and I can testify, having been their teacher since brother Brooks left, that they seem to get a good idea of what they study. They managed the school with much good order."

Mr. Brooks has also some of the older and more advanced scholars to assist him in the station at Tissana. During the year, several letters from some of these boys have been published in the American Missionary. They have in them some African idioms, and some grammatical errors, but the penmanship and spelling are good, and they are marked with high moral tone and Christian sentiment. One of them wrote:

"My feelings are to serve the Lord, and to be a minister to the poor heathen around us in the interior, because they are destitute of the gospel of the Son of God.

"Give my best compliments to the Committee. Will you be pleased to tell them that I want to go to America, and get an education; and from there to return to Africa, to teach my brethren and sisters the acceptable gospel of Christ. Please give the school-boys and girls' compliments to the Sabbath-school children in America. They thank them very much for their kindness to them in sending clothes for them, and providing food, &c."

Another, writing to Sunday-schools in this country, says:

"Beloved Brether:—Long ago I wrote to you, informing you of the Lord's dealings with me. I have not heard from you, nor you from me, but I am very thankful to God for permitting me to write to you once more, and will be very thankful if my letter should meet you in a state of good health. The Lord has been and is with me still; he hath not forsaken me nor left me to Afric's pernicious ways, but has sent us missionaries to teach us the way to heaven. Brethren, the field is wide, and vast numbers of children as young as we, while we enjoy the privilege of going to school and reading God's holy Word, do not know the Saviour who died for them that they might live. Souls are calling, as it were, upon Christians for relief, to save them before it be too late. We might have been left in the same way, but God in his mercifulness hath, through you, given us the gospel, We thank and pray to God for you, that God may bless you and make you his dear children to do his will, to labor in this part of Africa for the conversion of souls unto God. Oh, pray for our parents, that God may hasten the time when they shall receive the gospel, and have schools and teachers or ministers among them. The Lord bless you.

William B. Tourker.

And another still:

"MENDI MISSION, April 28th, 1853.

"MY DEAR FRIENDS:—I have taken much pains to write these few words to you.
Oh! dear children, when I was writing these words, I did ask the Lord's blessing before I wrote, that 'as we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto m who are of the household of faith.' I believe you have too much sense and honesty to make a profession of religion farther than your heart is really engaged, in order to please your fellow-creatures. Now, my dear friends, let us remember that the 'Lord is on our side, that we will not fear what man can do unto us! For the Lord taketh our part with them that help us; therefore shall we see our desire upon them that hate us. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man; it is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes. Thou hast thrust sore at us that we might fall, but the Lord helped us. The Lord is our strength and song, and is become our salvation. Oh! my dear friends, 'The right hand of the Lord is exalted; the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly.' And I hope you must love the Lord, as I love him. I love the Lord because he hath died on the cross for me; and 'He hath heard my voice and my supplication, and hath inclined His ear unto me; therefore will I call upon Him as long as I live."

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"'The Lord preserveth the simple. I was brought low, and he helped me; for He hath delivered my soul from death, my eyes from tears, and my feet from fall-ing. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living. I believe; therefore have I spoken. I was greatly afflicted. I have said, in my haste, all men are liars. What shall I render unto the Lord for his benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord.' I hope you may send me some books that I may remember you all. This is all I have to say to you all. Let us try to love the Lord; and if you love the Lord as I love Him, when we die, we will meet at the glorious home in heaven. I bid you all farewell.-Your affec-CHARLES G. TUCKER."

Their teachers have hope that they understand and feel what they say.

The little church established at Kaw-Mendi appears to have been favored with the presence of the Spirit during the year. Near the commencement of it, Mr. Tefft wrote:

"We are cheered by full congregations and good attention upon the Sabbath. I now expect to admit four or five to the church at our next communion season. One of them is a boy fourteen or fifteen years old, who came here some ten or twelve months since, a very wicked boy, but now he is perfectly altered, and seems truly to be a new creature. I never saw a more marked change in any one. He is doing very well in his studies. Oh, pray for these lambs of Christ's flock, that they may never go out of his fold; and for me as their present shepherd, that I may be so filled with the Spirit, as to lead them into green pastures, and by the side of still

He soon after reported the admission of three young converts to the church. He gives the following description of them. We unite with him in asking that they may be remembered at the throne of grace.

"1st. Thomas Bennett, a man of some twenty-five or more years of age, I should judge. He was brought up in Sierra Leone, but had never made any pretensions to religion until since he came here. He is now the husband of our Mendi girl, Maria Brown, of Amistad memory, and seems intent on being a thorough Christian, Permit me to say, just here, that Maria, his wife, is a truly valuable woman, and I think we all look upon her as a true Christian. She has been a source of happiness to us. It seems to me that what has been done for her would almost or quite pay for all that was expended for all the Mendi captives. I wish brother Tappan could just step in some day and see Mrs. Bennett (Maria) in her neat, snug home. I think he would exclaim, It is enough! it is enough!

"2d. Joseph Raymond. He is one of our largest and oldest boys; was redeemed by brother Raymond. His family live in the vicinity of Gallinas, that notorious mart for human flesh, about fifty miles south of us. Joseph appears to be an honest, upright, Christian boy. That is saying much for boys brought up as most of ours

"3d. James Tucker. As you see, he has the name of that very notorious slavedealer, who is said in these parts to have shipped more slaves than any other man on the western coast of Africa. James is the third or fourth generation from him, I think. He has lived with Mr. Gray for some months; is in the first class in school, and I think is a boy of much real promise, if he keeps near the Lord. He is naturally a little inclined to be headstrong, but still seems set upon serving the Saviour. I state these peculiarities, that you and others may know how to pray for him.

"4th. James Barnett. This to me is the most interesting case of all. He has been brought up under circumstances little calculated to lead him to be otherwise than bad. He has only been here a little over one year, yet he has made good proficiency in his studies, and although a wild boy when he came here, is now as quiet and docile a boy as any at the mission. But what is the most cheering of all is, that he seems to be a devoted Christian, seeking to know and do the whole will of God. I think I never saw a more decided change even in America, than I see in James Barnett. He is the boy who was bitten so severely as to almost lose his life, by an alligator. He looks upon it as from the Lord. Pray for all the dear lambs of the flock at Kaw-Mendi, that their names may be found written in the Lamb's Book of Life!"

For some time previous, Mr. Tefft had felt confident that the Spirit of the Lord was operating in an unusual way upon the hearts of the people. A sense of His presence had been felt by those attending their meetings, which were remarkably solemn, and pervaded by a melting and subduing spirit.

The following extract, though a long one, shows so distinctly the feelings of the lone missionary, when God permits him to see the fruit of his labor, that we cannot deny it a place in the report of that mission:

"To me, at least, it was a day of real happiness. I had been looking forward to it with fond anticipation for some weeks. The day and night before, I think, were the most rainy I ever saw. During the night I awoke a number of times, and the rain was pouring down in such torrents, that I feared that if we were able to have meeting at all in our leaky, country, bamboo-thatched chapel, we should be obliged to defer the sacrament. But Sabbath morning at last dawned, and with the rising sun the rain ceased, and a goodly number turned out to meeting. It was a good time, and I judged from the earnest manner of listening, that the Lord was giving his truth a lodgment in the hearts of my hearers. All seemed solemn and earnest, as though listening for their lives. After a brief intermission, we again assembled to commemorate the love of that dear Saviour who poured out his life for all, black and white, bond and free! Let me give you a few of the circumstances by which I was surrounded, and perhaps you and your readers may be able to imagine my solemn and impressive thoughts and feelings. Here I was, upon ground a few years since an almost impenetrable bush, inhabited by the leopard, the bush-cat, lizard, ape, boa-constrictor, driver, and other hideous creatures too numerous to mention. Then to have seen ten feet into the mangrove, at almost any point on our river's bank, would have probably been impossible. Now we have a fair, open, charming view for one third of a mile up and down the Little Boom. Again, I was now upon ground which a few years since was within sight and almost within hearing of the slave-factory of 'Old Kaw-Mendi,' upon ground owned by one whose family have shipped more slaves than any other on this western coast; in the very centre of the country where the slave-trade was carried on ten years since with unblushing faces. Then there was no Sabbath, no schools, no church, no morality. Now all is changed; the slave-trade has been driven so far from Kaw-Mendi, that we cannot hear the echo even of the clanking chains with which their limbs are manacled.

"Now, by some at least, the Sabbath is respected; morality is gaining a place in the hearts of the men. We have a people more or less industrious, and the mission and the people under its influence have over one hundred and fifty acres cleared for cultivation, and all either now under cultivation or having been so. We have a school taught by native teachers, and some of our own scholars almost fit to take charge of a school themselves. One of our boys has acted as my interpreter for several Sabbaths, and what most interests me is, that he is able to take his English Bible and read it off in good Mendi with little hesitation. Is not this truly cheering ! In addition to his good abilities, he seems truly pious, and attached to the mission and its work. His family wish him to remain in our employ when he is fitted for a teacher. Again, now there is a little church here, which is truly like a city set on a hill. Its silent influence is being felt-all around, and its rays of light are radiated to a great distance in every direction. Another thought which served much to heighten the interest of the occasion was, that I had the privilege of entering into and reaping the fruit of the godly Raymond and other departed ones, not to say any thing of my truly valuable associates present and absent. With these thoughts in mind, can you doubt that the occasion was really one of thrilling interest ? But when I saw four dear lambs of Christ's flock, as I hoped, standing before me, asking me to introduce them to his earthly fold, oh, it was almost too much! My soul could but say, Bless the Lord, it is enough. They were the first it had been my lot to introduce by profession into the Church militant, either in my native land or here. Oh, what am I, that God should bestow this blessing upon me! This day will ever be one of deep and lasting interest to me. To God be all the praise, honor, and glory of their salvation ["

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The letter next received, reported a still progressing religious interest at the mission. Mr. Tefft wrote: "The Holy Spirit seemed to be present by His sealing influences, and the leaven is still working. Seeing this, I can still hope on, hope ever for these poor heathen children." He thus describes one case of hopeful conversion:

"One of our girls had been more serious than usual for some days, but had not opened her heart to any of us. On the afternoon of the day before I left the mission, while we were at dinner, we heard an unusual noise in the girls' house, and at once sent one of the girls to ask what was the matter. She returned, saying she did not know; Peggy was either laughing or crying, but she could not tell which.

After dinner, brother Brooks went to see her, and found her shouting praise to God. She informed him that she was deeply impressed with her sins, and went into her room to pray; that the more she thought about her sins, the more black and dreadfully wicked they seemed to be. Her convictions were so great that she was almost upon the borders of despair, when she thought of Jesus as her Saviour, and that he had died for her. While these thoughts were passing through her mind, she seemed to get a sight of the Saviour; all her had of sin instantly left her, and she felt that He was hers and she was his. It was in view of her sins forgiven, and the peace of soul that she enjoyed, that she was praising God."

After Mr. Thompson's return to the mission, he resumed the pastoral charge of the church, and speaks of their religious meetings as being of thrilling interest to him. There seems to be much ground to hope that numbers of those who are there gathered into the Church of God, belong to that "chosen generation," that "royal priesthood," that "hely nation" and "peculiar people," who will "show forth the praises of Him who hath called (them) out of darkness into his marvellous light."

State of the Country.-During the whole of the year reported, the country has been suffering under one of the most wide-spread and desolating wars that has been known there since the establishment of our mission. It has somewhat hindered the progress of the work at the mission, and has prevented the opening of some of the stations contemplated. The latest advices from the brethren encourage the hope that it will soon be brought to a close. The leading men in some of the tribes had united in a Purraw, a confederation designed to put a stop to the war; and the Governor of Sierra Leone was using exertions with the same intention, and compelling the chiefs near the coast to enter into treaties of peace. The missionaries have strong hope that if three or four mission stations can be once fairly established among the now hostile tribes, another so general war will be impossible. It was supposed that the infamous slave-trade was at the bottom of this.

New Stations .- Soon after his arrival in Africa, Mr. Brooks wrote that peace was one of the fruits of the gospel, and that we could not rationally hope for it in Africa, until the gospel was given to the people; that he should therefore make an attempt to commence a mission station among some of the people engaged in the then raging war. Holding these views, he took several of the elder scholars of the school at Kaw-Mendi, and made a commencement among the Boompels, one of the most warlike tribes of Western Africa. Its chief, Braw, had desired to have a mission commenced there. He knew something of the character of the gospel preached; that its opposition to his warlike spirit and practices was irreconcilable; that it would be but mockery for him to bring his people to hear the gospel one day, and the next lead them out to war; he therefore sought to make a compromise by giving up his town, Tissana, for the use of the mission, and building a new fortified town at a little distance from it.

Mr. Brooks here prepared temporary accommodations for a station, and commenced a school without delay. He found a wide field of labor open to him, and in the attempt to cultivate all, preached usually in four different towns or villages on the Sabbath, and in one instance in five. This labor is too excessive for one man, in any climate, and it is greatly to be feared that its effect on Mr. Brooks' health may be disastrous. He was assisted in his-school by some of the older scholars. The new station he calls Mo-Tappan, or Tappan town.

Before commencing it, he, either alone, or in company with other members of the mission, visited many of the chiefs, declaring the purpose of the mission to extend its operations, and asking the consent of each to occupy a portion of the territory governed by them, if a suitable location could be found.

With but one exception, his proposals were favorably received, and his requests granted. By a number of chiefs a strong desire was expressed that locations within their territory might be selected. The exception named was of a chief who was supposed to be engaged in efforts to renew the slave-trade in that region-efforts which he knew missionary operations would certainly defeat.

Some of the tribes are almost ready to fight for the privilege of baving a mission among them, and the calls are so numerous, and the ability of the mission to gratify them, with a proper regard to the health of the missionaries, is so small that their hearts sink within them. The providence of God and the Spirit of God. favoring every attempt to proclaim his truth, and making every exhibition of it apparently successful, seem to make their appeals for help almost irresistible. An interesting incident, where the truth once spoken appeared to have an awakening and enlightening influence, is recorded in the September number of the "American Missionary."

The privilege of opening at least two more stations in the interior, one at the Plantains, or on the Sherbro Island, and one at Freetown, and a missionary force to man them, are urgently asked for by the mission company. The arguments urged in favor of each of these localities have great force, and the Executive Committee know not how to deny their request. Under the instructions previously given them, the mission have determined to commence two of these stations.

Some parts of the colony of Sierra Leone afford promising openings for missionary labor. The people there gathered are from almost every part of Africa, and speak its various languages, who might, having first experienced the grace of God themselves, become pioneers and guides to the best portion of the interior. To comply with these various demands will require an increase in the number of missionaries for the work, and a much-enlarged amount of funds. In the providence of God, the laborers are offering themselves, and we cannot doubt that the means for the accomplishment of all that it would be wise to attempt, will be furnished.

Some of the events of the last year have tended to discouragement. When the new missionary company reached Africa, they found a desolating war raging, whose full influence they had not calculated; and being too late in the season to ascend the rivers with the houses that were sent out for them, access to the interior seemed next to impossible, and they were almost ready to conclude that their more pleasant anticipations had been without foundation. Yet, giving their full weight to these temporary embarrassments, the result of the year's labors and observations is encouraging. The largest missionary company we have ever had in Africa has been so preserved through their acclimation, that no adult person has fallen; a result that it is by no means certain we should have been permitted to rejoice in, if the unacclimated had not been providentially prevented from engaging with the ardor that some of them possess. The blessing of God has followed the labors they have been able to put forth; the more powerful chiefs of the country are eager to welcome them among them; the providences of God, and the energies of the colonial government, cooperate with the efforts of the missionaries to secure peace; the Spirit of God seems to have gone before them to prepare some of the places they propose to occupy; the published observations of other laborers on that continent serve to show that white men can live and labor there; that there are in the interior, towards which they are pressing, more civilized, intelligent, and powerful nations and regions of country, not only less inimical than those they now occupy to the health of the white man, but even more healthy than many parts of the United States. The Spirit and providence of God thus becken us onward, and woe will be upon us if we falter in our course.

In order to a proper understanding of the history and present position of the Jamaica mission, we need to know what are the evils of slavery, and what the vices entailed, not only upon its victims, but on every thing that has been subjected to its polluting contact. One of our missionaries, in giving a description of the present moral condition of the people of that island, after speaking of the licentiousness which they received as a legacy from those who denied them the pure joys of holy wedlock, and trampled upon and scourged chastity, as if it were a fiend to be driven out from among men—that enduring legacy which, with its foul, pestilential influence, still blights, like the mildew of death, every thing in society that should be lovely, virtuous, and of good report; and alluding to their intemperance, in which they have followed the example set by the Governor in his palace, the Bishop in his robes, statesmen and judges, lawyers and doctors, planters and overseers, and even professedly Christian ministers; and the deceit and falsehood which oppression and wrong always engender, says:

"It must not be forgotten that we are following in the wake of the accursed system of Slavery—a system that unmakes man, by warring upon his conscience and crushing his spirit, leaving naught but the shattered wrecks of humanity behind it. If we may but gather up some of these floating fragments, from which the image of God is well-nigh effaced, and pilot them safely to that 'better land,' we shall not have labored in vain. But we may hope to do more. The chief fruit of our labors is to be sought in the future rather than in the present."

It should be remembered, too, that there is but a small part of the population yet brought within the reach of the influence of enlightened Christian teachers, while the great mass by whom they are surrounded are but little removed from actual heathenism. We shall then be prepared to rejoice in the hope that a larger proportion of the adults brought out of modern slavery are prepared to enter the holy land than of those led out of the ancient, by the hand of Moses and Aaron.

Brainerd.—In the early part of the year, the church at Brainerd lost two of its most influential members—one by excommunication, the other through death. The first had been of great assistance to Mr. Richardson, from his activity and his knowledge of the affairs of the church. His offense was adultery, committed four years before, but just discovered. Of the other, a deacon in the church, Mr. R. wrote:

"He has fallen-not into the snare of the Devil, but into that

"blessed sleep, From which none ever wake to weep."

He died on the 20th ult, after a short but severe illness of one week. He was smitten down in the prime of life, leaving a wife and six children—mostly of tender years—to mourn their loss. As an office-bearer in the church, he shared largely in the confidence and esteem of its members. His kind and amiable disposition, and consistent, Christian deportment, gained for him the good-will and affection of all. Death came suddenly, but it did not find him unprepared. He stood girded, and waiting for his Master's summons. Two days before his death, he sent for me to visit him; and although quite low and weak, he yet conversed freely and cheerfully.

He said he felt that his work was done; he knew it was a solemn thing to die, and go into eternity, but he felt that God was his Father, and Christ his Saviour. He wished me to bear his dying testimony to the church. 'Tell the brethren, said he, 'that the hope I have cherished and the confidence I have felt in Christ does not fail me now. I know in whom I have put my trust.' . . . The night previous to his death, his soul seemed to receive new light and strength, and he was filled with great joy and peace, and spent most of the time in praising God and exhorting those around him.

I send you this account as an humble testimonial to the value and power of the grace of Christ over a mind once debused by ignorance and degraded by sin. But a few years since, our departed brother was a slave, in bondage of both body and soul. Although about thirty years old at the time emancipation took place, be had since learned to read and write quite well; and his knowledge of the Scriptures, and aptness in quoting and illustrating them, would have put to shame many who have enjoyed better opportunities. It is delightful and encouraging to know that that God who is able, from the very stones of the earth, to raise up children to his praise, can and does raise up from among this sunken people some who shine on earth as illustrious trophies of his grace, and who will shine for ever in heaven, arrayed in the glorious habiliments of the redeemed."

Reviewing the year's labors, Mr. Richardson writes:

"The retrospect of another year of missionary life and labor can hardly be said to be one of unmingled satisfaction and encouragement. Not that it has been a year of peculiar trials and discouragement; but we see so much unaccomplished that we had hoped to accomplish, so many plans for doing good but partially carried into effect; and then to see the opening buds of promise blasted by some fierce gale of temptation, and souls whom we had hoped and longed exceedingly to guide safely to heaven and plant as unfading gems in the Redeemer's crown of glory, borne on the dark currents of sin 'down to the gulf of black despair,' may well fill the heart with sorrow and sadness."

"We are neither surprised nor discouraged at the obstacles that present themselves. We believe that God's grace is sufficient to overcome them all, and gather from among this despised people rich trophies of his saving power. We have not witnessed, during the past year, any special manifestations of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, working upon the hearts of this people; yet there has been a good degree of general interest exhibited, in a full and stated attendance upon the preaching of the Word, and other means of religious instruction. Some in the church have evidently been benefited and quickened in the divine life, while, one by one, a few of the impenitent have hopefully submitted their hearts to Christ."

"In addition to the above, several dollars in money and several weeks' labor have been given by a portion of our people towards the erection of a schoolhouse at Belgar. A frame, 16 × 24 feet, has been put up and covered with a neat, substantial roof. If prospered, we shall have it completed before Christmas, and hope to open a school with the opening year. We feel greatly encouraged by the increase of the people's contributions for religious and educational purposes the past year. It will be seen by a comparison of the above statistics with the last year's report, that the actual amount of money paid in this year is more than double what it was last. I think the people are beginning to feel and bear more cheerfully the burden of responsibility; and there is still room for improvement. The Mount Patience school, under the faithful and judicious management of brother and sister Moffat, has been in a highly prosperous and flourishing condition. The average attendance, for the last three or four months, has been ninety-five—more than double what it was last year. And it is a matter of special gratitude and thankfulness, that health and strength have thus far been granted them, to sustain the increasing weight of care and labor thus pressing upon them.

"Although we cannot raise our Ebenezer in commemoration of any remarkable displays of God's converting grace, yet we are far from being disheartened, or supposing that no good has resulted from our labors. We believe something has been done for the present, and we trust much for the future good of this dear people. And while we feel deeply humbled in view of our unfaithfulness and inefficiency, we would be thankful for sparing mercy and goodness, and thank God and take courage."

Two months before the date of his report, Mr. R. had established special prayermeetings, to be held simultaneously on Tuesday evening of each week, in five different neighborhoods. From twenty to thirty are usually present at each place of meeting. They have already been blessed to the awakening of an increased spirit of prayer among Christians, and in the development of new cases of interest among the impenitent.

School.—The school at Mount Patience (Brainerd station) has been under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Moffat. The statistics concerning it may be found under the general report of all the schools at this mission. In February, Mr. Richardson wrote:

"The school at Mt. Patience is in a highly prosperous condition. The daily attendance exceeds one hundred. I visited the school yesterday, and found one hundred and fifteen present; to-day Brother Moffat informs me there are one hundred and twenty-four scholars in attendance. It would do you good to look in upon such a crowd of children and youth, brought daily under the redeeming influence of faithful training and religious instruction. A couple of gentlemen, who chanced to call while I was in the school, expressed themselves quite surprised and delighted at seeing so many assembled. One of them was a highly-respected magistrate in the parish, the other resided in an adjoining parish. Both gave it as their opinion that the physical and moral regeneration of Jamaica depends, under God, on the education and religious instruction of the rising generation. In this opinion I believe all intelligent Christian men here coincide. Nothing save the furnishing of the people with ample means for education and religious instruction will save them from relapsing into a state of barbarism. I think all our teachers are doing a great and good work. But they need iron frames and the patience of Job! All the schools connected with the mission are in successful operation, and I believe they have never been in so flourishing and prosperous a condition as at present. The number enjoying Sabbath-school instruction at this station is upwards of two hundred."

Eliot. - In a letter from Mr. Thompson, dated January 3, he wrote:

"Last Sabbath was a day of peculiar interest with us at Eliot. It was the first Sabbath of the new year, and our Communion Sabbath. Seven persons were admitted to the church. Of this number, four were received for the first time, the other three had been excommunicated, and were now received anew."

Miss Blakely has removed her connection from this station. On the 22d of December last, she was united in marriage to Mr. Moffat, of Brainerd, and has since taught with him in the school at that station. During a part of the year, Miss Howe has taught at Eliot, but she has now removed to Kingston, and is no longer connected with the mission.

The following is from Mr. Thompson's annual statement:

"There has been comparatively but little sickness among our people during the past year. The small-pox, although it prevailed around us, did not prove fatal except in a few instances. It has now quite passed away from this part of the parish. Small-pox, cholera, and yellow fever, have made terrible havoc among the people of this island. I doubt not more than fifty thousand have fallen victims to these most fearful diseases.

"We are not without tokens of the influence of the Spirit of God among us. Sinners who have been the most hardened, are foresking their evil ways, and inquiring what they shall do to be saved. They are a class of persons who have always attended the means of grace, and are instructed in the doctrines of the Bible and in Christian duty.

"During the last year, sixteen have been received to church fellowship; three have been excommunicated, and three have died. One of these was young, and was the only member of my church who has died of small-pox. Her end was peace. The missionary feels a degree of triumph when one of his flock dies giving good evidence of final acceptance with God. The soul is safe, and the fear that it may fall from its steadfastness is gone. Our Sabbath congregations are increasing. The Sabbath-school is about the same in number. There is an increased interest in the weekly prayer-meetings:"

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Union Station.—Rev. Mr. Wolcott is at present on a visit to this country. He came on the recommendation of the mission, and with the approval of the Executive Committee. He landed in New-York in May, and expects to embark on his return to Jamaica, some time in October. It is now nearly seven years since he joined the mission. In September last, Mr. W. wrote very encouragingly from the mission. He had just baptized, and received to the church at Devon-Pen, four persons, and some others stood propounded for admission at the next communion. The school at Chesterfield under Miss Dean was full of promise. The following is his report:

"Hermitage church was formed July, 1842, composed of pastor and wife, (Mr. and Mrs. Evarta,) and five members. In October, 1845, there were twenty-eight members, besides several belonging to Devon-Pen. Several others had belonged to the church, but had been cut off. There are no records of any additions from October, 1845, till August, 1847, in which year I became pastor of the church. Since August 1, 1847, thirty-five persons have been added, all on profession of faith. Of these, two have been excommunicated, and four have died. In April, 1853, there was in all, fifty members. Four had been received since September, 1852.

"The church at Devon-Pen was formed Angust, 1849, with ten members, since which time, to March, 1858, twenty persons have been added. Three of the latter number have died and two have been excommunicated, leaving in the church twenty-five persons. Six have been received since August, 1852. In both churches, ten added and two excluded. I have not been advised of what has been done since I left. I have kept no record of infant baprisms. All the children of the church receive baptism. I have three regular preuching-places, besides occasional district-meetings. I preach at Hermitage on one Sabbath, and at Chesterfield and Devon-Pen on the next. Sabbath-schools are well attended by children and adults at Chesterfield and Devon-Pen. Worship is maintained every Sabbath, either by myself, or by teachers in my absence. Communions in each church are bi-monthly. Of the two schools the teachers will report. I trust the August meetings of the mission will develop things favorable to our schools, and to our general prosperity. Contributions of our people up to 1st of May, as follows:

Mr. Venning, teacher at Devon-Pen, has suffered from two attacks of disease, and been compelled to suspend teaching for a season. It is hoped that he will resover so as again to resume his labors.

Gberlin.—An ecclesiastical council, in which seven churches were represented convened at Oberlin, December 29, 1852, and installed Rev. P. M. Way, pastor of the church at that station. A letter received from him a few days after, stated that there was a gradually increasing interest on the part of the church; the congregation was large, and their prospects generally were very favorable.

During the prevalence of the cholera there, under the plea of drinking to guard against the attacks of the disease, and through the pernicious advice of physicians here has been a great increase of intemperance and its attendant evils in the island. Mr. Way's practice as a physician gave him access to the people, and an opportunity to labor more directly for the suppression of this evil than he could otherwise have done. Something has been accomplished towards this end, but there is much yet to do. An increase of the evil has been prevented, but little has been done towards effecting a radical reform.

Mr. Way has suffered so much from sickness, that it was apprehended that he would be under the necessity of asking to be recalled. His health has since improved, and it is now hoped that he will be able to continue there.

The following is his report:

"In making my report, I am sorry that I am not able to present a more encouraging state of things, and yet I consider the present state much better than at my former time of reporting. The true condition of the people, and the embarrassments under which we labor, arising from influencea beyond our control, are not to be known by the superficial observer, neither can they be correctly reported by the best informed. I flatter myself, however, hat our labors have not been in vain—that a good influence has been exerted far beyond the limits of our congregation. We have received twelve persons on profession during the year. Our house of worship is generally full on the Sabbuth. The Sunday-school numbers between seventy and eighly, besides an adult Bible-class. Number of members in the church is fifty. Whole amount contributed by the church, to quarter ending July 1, 1853, 228 2a, $4d$, which has been appropriated as follows:

"Our hope is in God. Our health is perfectly restored."

In November last, the Executive Committee appointed Mr. J. W. Briggs, of Richmond, Vt., a missionary teacher for Jamaica. He sailed from New-York the last of January, and arrived at Kingston, via Navy Bay, Feb. 6. He was almost immediately attacked with what is called Chagres fever, and died at the Oberlin station, Feb. 17th. He had already endeared himself greatly to some of the members of the mission, and given rise to the hope that he would be greatly useful there. The following is an abridged sketch of the character ascribed to him by his former pastor at Richmond:

"Nor we are justified, perhaps, in saying thus much of the religious character and course of our departed brother: that in the whole of it, from beginning to end, in inward experience of truth and outward acts of duty, there appeared to be a good degree of earnestness and decision; what he did for the salvation of his own soul, for the good of man, or for the glory of God, he did with all his heart.

"From the outset he seemed to have assumed that religion was to be a whole-hearted work, and no other aims or interests or pleasures were suffered to come in competition with it, or control or turn him from his religious course. It was, indeed, through a long conflict with the law of sin and the delusions of a fallen sature, that he attained unto the assurance of peace with God through redeeming grace, and could stand before Him as a reconcited and beloved child of the Great Father. But this seeking was in earnest: it was no fickle purpose, no half resolution ready to look back and abandon the effort to find the way to sternal life.

"His Christian life was such as might have been expected from his introduction into it. From that experimental relation of the grace of God in which he lived, contemplating the purpose of his existence and salvation alone in the glory of God, by whom this grace was bestowed, resulted his Christian character and action. It was this that gave him that constancy and fidelity and zeal which he exhibited; and it was this that led him to devote himself to the missionary work. It was a conclusion formed, so far as I know, entirely between his own soul and God, and without any counsel or persuasion from man, but it was a very natural result from his views of grace, and the proper and entire devotion of the redeemed to the glory of God; it was the prompting of a faith which gave all the heart to the service of

"And such was the spirit of his conversation and example while he was among us. His walk was that of one whose faith was in God. His constancy was that of one whose hopes were in abounding grace. It made him a man of prayer, and of good courage and hope in God."

The school at Oberlin has been embarrassed by a change of teachers. Its report will be found under the appropriate head.

PROVIDENCE, AND ITS OUT-STATION AT BRANDON.

There have been some embarrassments at each of these churches, arising from the necessity of disciplining and excluding offending members. December 20, 1852. Mr. Hall wrote:

"The general aspect of things both here and at Brandon Hill appears favorable although there are things which sorely try us and our people. For a while both congregations were much diminished by the prevalence of the small-pox, but of late they have been filling up again. That diesase has been very severe about us. There were a few cases a long time ago, and we supposed it had passed; but it returned again, and scarcely a family has escaped. There has been only one death that of an infant, among our own people.

"Since I last wrote you, we have received six members to the church.

Some of them are valuable acquisitions.

"Some weeks since, we were obliged to cut off a member of this church for adultery, and recently one at Branden Hill for the same sin. He was a young man of whom hopes of better things were entertained. A few days since, one of our most prominent members turned away his oldest daughter for the same sin He is a good man, and feels it deeply. The pains he has taken to instruct his family would be a worthy example in any community.

"There is nothing in public sentiment to save the youth of Jamaica in this respect. And though they may know the truth, that seems to have no power to save them unless they are led to a knowledge of it as it is in Christ.

"In various respects we can see that there is an advancement among our people and some seem constantly to be growing in grace.

In January, Miss Hicks commenced teaching at Providence, with twenty-five scholars. At the close of the year, forty-eight are reported. A new schoolhouse has been built there, for which the people contributed freely.

Mr. Hall reports as follows:

"The church at this station now numbers forty-six members. Seven have been received during the year. One that had been suspended has been restored. Two have been cut off, and two have died. The average number of the congregation is

"The church at Brandon Hill numbers twenty-three members. Two have been cut off during the year, while none have been added, though a number have asked "The chapel there has been enlarged during the year, and the congregation averages about sixty, and is on the increase. My arrangements now are, and have been for several months, to preach there every Sabbath morning.

"The church and congregation there have paid on minister's support, $25 95; and contributed for Mendi mission, $3 80. They have also contributed for other purposes, but I cannot state the amount.

"The church and congregation at this place have given in money on minister's and teacher's support, &c., $42 39. What they have done in other ways, if reckened in money, would stand thus:

150 days' labor on the schoolhouse, at 25 cents per day...... 37 50 100 days' labor on the mission-house and premises, at 25 cents per day, 25 00

"The whole cost of the schoolhouse is $147 00. The people gave as above stated. We received from individual friends, $35 00; and there remains a debt of $17 50. "The house was finished within six months after we began to talk of building. The people gave and worked cheerfully, and the day the house was opened (the 14th of June) was a good day. We have a good house—pleasant, convenient, and durable. And all who see it are highly pleased with it. And we have a good school, which averages about thirty scholars.

"The hindrances to the progress of the gospel in Jamaica, and the discouragements we have to contend with, are as great as ever. Yet there are some things to cheer us: here and there a shrub in the desert, occasionally rising so as to give a shelter and a shade: now and then a glimmering ray to remind us that there is a world where purity and light dwell, and sin and darkness enter not."

Golden Vale.-This station was commenced by Mr. Olds two years ago. He has suffered so much from fever and ague during the year now reported, that he was compelled to leave his station for a change of air. At the latest dates, he was in the enjoyment of his usual health. April 12th, he wrote

"There was a time when it seemed quite probable that I should go home for a season to recruit my health. My physician strongly advised this course, if a change for the better was not soon perceived.

"When it was reported that there was some prospect that we might leave the island, a great excitement was created among the people. They would often say, 'We pray Massa to spare your health that you be minister for us. We well use to you now, and we well satisfy [strongly desire] to have you stay, &c., &c. One man said in one of our meetings that the people in the mountains were all wild, and that Minister bad just got them in the pasture and got the gates shut; and now, if he goes away, the gates will get open, and the beasts will then run wild again." Even when I left for Kingston, it was quite uncertain to our own minds how the matter would turn, and the people appeared quite sad at seeing us leave; but when we returned we met many happy faces. It was then, 'Thank the Lord, we see Minister return again!

"Such indications are in themselves pleasing, and, perhaps, in a certain sense, encouraging. And yet it is an encouragement that must be taken with a good degree of caution. Men may, and often do, have an interest that it is purely selfish in having a Ohristian minister live among them. There are here often motives of a class that can be little appreciated by the churches at home."

At the close of the year, Mr. Olds wrote :

"We have occasion to bless God that there are some rays of light bursting upon us. The Word of God, we believe, is not preached in vain. It finds its way to the hearts of some who, we hope, are trying to live, in their rude way, according to that Word. Others we believe are convinced of the truth, and think, with some seriousness, that they ought to obey that truth. A few, we hope, are the true disciples of

"As yet we have not organized a church at Golden Vale, but expect to do so in about four or five weeks. There will probably be from fifteen to eighteen who will unite with it. This number would be greatly enlarged were we to receive all who are inclined to present themselves. But we find it necessary to exercise great caution in the reception of members to churches. There is a strong bias in the minds of almost all the people in favor of some church connection. Immediately after the marriage ceremony is performed, the next step to be taken is to be in the direction of uniting with some church,

"Our congregations are uniformly good in pleasant weather. But during the last nine months they have been much affected by rains. From October 1 to February 1, we had but five days without rain. From that time to the 12th of April, we had more pleasant weather, but since the last-mentioned date to July, it has rained every day but four.

"My several out-stations continue to be well attended, and I esteem them among my most interesting services. I often think at these little gatherings the deepest and most abiding impressions are made.

"Our Sunday-school is well attended, and we feel that through it much good is being effected. Our usual number of scholars is from one hundred to one hundred and fifty. We are, however, greatly deficient in teachers—our only permanent ones being members of our own family. We have adopted here for the atternoon service a catechetical exercise, which I deem well adapted to the condition of the people. The subjects we take up are of the most practical kind, and we aim to bring them directly to their understandings and hearts. This exercise is attended by nearly the whole congregation."

SCHOOL REPORT.

"August, 1853.—Number of schools connected with the mission, seven; number of teachers employed, nine. Arrangements have also been made, during the past year, for opening two other schools within the bounds of the mission. They are to be located at Belgar and Rock River, in the midst of a large and destitute population. The former place is some three and a half miles from Brainerd, in the parish of St. Thomas-in-the-Vale, and the latter about the same distance from Eliot, in the parish of Metcalfe. Land has been purchased, and buildings are in course of erection, and the people are auxiously awaiting the opening of the schools, which we hope will not long be delayed. Teachers will be needed, either to occupy these fields or to take charge of others that may be vacated, should it be thought advisable to send those who have had some experience in teaching here, to these new localities.

"The Executive Committee are aware that we have a local board, called the Jamaica Voluntary School Association, organized a year and a half since, for the better management of our schools and the advancement of the cause of Christian education among our own people, and in destitute localities around us. The first regular anniversary of this organization was held at Brainerd chapel on the 3d inst. The house, which will accommodate not less than five hundred-people, was well filled at an early hour with an attentive and interested congregation, of whom upwards of two hundred were children connected with our schools,

"A liberal supply of refreahments was provided by the people for the children and strangers from abroad. All the teachers employed by the Association were present, and handed in written reports respecting the condition of their schools. The Directors (two of whom are chosen from among the people at each station, and associated with the minister in the management of the school) also presented a statement of the receipts and expenditures for each school. The foreneon was occupied in listening to the annual address by Rev. L. Thompson, and in speeches from other brethren upon subjects previously assigned. The afternoon was taken up with the presentation and discussion of the various reports. In the evening there was an exhibition of paintings, by means of a magic lantern, that afforded much amusement and instruction, and also excited much wonder among the people. The exercises all passed off pleasantly, and were of such a character as was adapted to leave a wholesome and salutary impression upon the minds of those present.

"It should be stated that the unusual disproportion between the whole number of pupils and the average daily attendance is to be chiefly ascribed to two causes: 1st, several of the schools are located in the vicinity of large rivers, that are frequently so swollen with the rains as to be impassable for days and even weeks together. In this way the schools are often very much reduced in numbers: 2d, schools in this country are generally taught only four days in the week. This arrangement we believe to be a bad one any where, but especially here, where home influences are almost 'only evil, and that continually.' We have felt that it was very desirable (if not quite indispensable to success) to keep the children in school at least five days in the week—otherwise much of the labor bestowed would be thrown away. But our teachers have found it no easy task to introduce such an innovation. Many parents want their children to stay at home and work on Fridays, or else go to market. The result has been, that while there has been a gradual gain where the experiment has been faithfully and perseveringly tried, still, less than one third the usual number, on an average, have attended school on that day. The average attendance at Mount Patience school, during four days in the week, has probably exceeded one hundred, and the other schools in the same proportion.

"Orthography, reading, writing, geography, and arithmetic (mental and written) are taught in all our schools, and grammar and composition in most. So far as I have been able to learn, but one opinion has been expressed respecting the character of the schools connected with our Association. All agree that our teachers are competent, self-denying, and devoted to their work, sparing neither time nor strength in their efforts to enlighten and improve those committed to their care; and, what is most important of all, we believe they love the souls of those dark-browed children just as well as though shrined in a casket of pearl, instead of ebony, and are anxiously and hopefully laboring for their salvation. If evidence were wanting of interest felt, both by parents and children, in our schools, it is found in the fact that they are so well attended, while many of the schools around us have been given up because parents cannot be induced to send in their children, even where no charge is made for their instruction! If the cause be sought for, it will be found that, in some instances, persons addicted to drinking and other gross immoralities have been intrusted with the sacred charge of training the youthful mind! Let pious, faithful teachers be employed, who love their work and long to do good, and they will find work enough to do, and they shall not lose their reward."

In behalf of the Association, H. B. Hall, Chairman, A. M. Richardson, Secretary.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The members of the Jamaica mission, sympathizing deeply with the desire of the Association to enlarge its operations, joined in passing the following resolutions:—

"Whereas, the last Annual Report of the Treasurer of the American Missionary Association reveals the fact that the income of that Society, for the last fiscal year, was nearly $4,000 less than during the previous year, while the number of additional laborers in the field amounted to thirty-eight; and whereas, this discrepancy between men and means cannot long exist without involving the Association in serious embarrassment, by curtailing its present operations, and banishing all hope of their future extension; and whereas, we believe that the progress of Christ's kingdom, and the salvation of the millions of the unenlightened, imperatively require the exercise of greater liberality and self-denial on the part of all who love the Redeemer's cause, and are laboring to promote it; therefore, "Resolved, That the resolution adopted at the last annual meeting of the A. M. A.

to raise fifty thousand dollars the current year, meets our hearty approval, and we trust will be promptly responded to by all its friends.

"Resolved, That we, as a mission, will make a special effort to aid the Association in raising the above amount,"

Adopted unanimously.

In carrying out the above resolutions, the missionaries and their churches contributed $505 76 to the funds of the Association, some of them contributing one fourth of their annual salary.

From this report of the Jamaica Mission it will be seen, that for most of the adult population of Jamaica, the unhappy victims of long years of oppression and degradation, our missionaries have great fear. Yet for even these there may be hope, even though with trembling. But it is around the youth of the island that their brightest hopes and anticipations cluster : from them they expect to gather their principal sheaves for the great Lord of the harvest. They say:

"To train them up to knowledge and virtue; to rid them (as far as possible) of evil influences, and throw around them those that are healthful and saving-this is to be our great work. Nor will it be a fruitless, hopeless task. We shall sow the seed for a glad and glorious harvest, that will be gathered by angels' hands into the celestial garner. The fruit may be long in coming to maturity. It may require that patience should have her perfect work; yet, like bread cast upon the waters, it shall be found after many days.

> " Though seed lie buried long in dust, It sha'n't deceive our hope : The precious grain shall ne'er be lost, For grace insures the crop.'

"Let the rising generation be furnished with good moral and religious instruction. and there is still hope for Jamaica. Her future shall yet be radiant with the sunshine of prosperity, and her sons and daughters shall be gladdened with the glorious light of gospel liberty."

But in order to success, they must have the sympathies and the support of their brethren in this country. They say:

"The barvest is great, but the laborers are few. We greatly need more helpers and the means of their support."

And in behalf of the victims of outrageous wrong, they say

"We wish to turn the tables-to supplant oppression by righteousness, insult by compassion and brotherly-kindness, hatred and contempt by love and winning meekness, till we allure these wretched ones to the hope and enjoyment of manhood and virtue. For them and for their children we ask for help; for them we pray."

OJIBUE MISSION.—MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

RED LAKE STATION......Missionaries, Rev. S. C. WRIGHT, ROBERT LAFFERTY, E. W. CARVER, O. A. COE, MRS. WRIGHT, MRS. LAFFERTY, MRS. CARVER, and MRS. COE. CASS LAKE STATION Missionaries, J. S. FISHER, FRANCIS SPRES, MRS. FISHER

St. JOSEPH..... Missionaries, Rev. A. Barnard, David B. Spencer, Mr. Smith, Mrs. Barnard, and Mrs. Spencer.

BELLE PRAIRIE DR. WM. LEWIS, Physician and Teacher, and MRS. LEWIS, Total, 19.

MR. AND MRS. KINNEY, who were connected with the Cass Lake station at the date of our last Report, have since joined the Episcopal mission at Gull Lake.

Two of these mission stations are located in Minnesota Territory, about six hundred miles north-west from the Falls of St. Anthony, on the head-waters of the Mis sissippi river, and are the only missions in that part of the country. The Ojibue or Chippeway tribe, among whom they are situated, is one of the largest tribes of Indians within the territory of the United States, and is estimated to contain about thirty thousand souls. They are divided into bands varying from two hundred to five hundred persons in each, the bands living from twenty-five to one hundred miles apart from each other, having their own homes, hunting grounds, and chiefs.

When these missions commenced, the Indians raised nothing, and were destitute of all domestic animals except dogs, and had no agricultural implements. They depended for subsistence upon hunting, fishing, wild rice and sugar. Being in a poor country for game, they often suffer with hunger, and more or less die of starvation. Their sufferings are at times very great. They sometimes resort even to human flesh to satisfy the cravings of hunger. They are very destitute of clothing : many of their children from one to ten years of age, being in a state of nudity, sometimes perishing with cold.

The country is very difficult of access, the only mode of conveyance for the last five hundred miles being in bark canoes, except from twenty to thirty miles' portages, where canoes and all supplies have to be carried upon men's backs.

In consequence of these difficulties, and the want of adequate funds, these missionaries have had but a meagre support, and have at times been left for days and weeks to subsist upon fresh fish (without salt) and mouldy corn. For three years they toiled under great privations, hardships, and suffering. They were obliged to clear and cultivate their own land, saw their lumber by hand with a pit-saw, and build their own houses; preach the gospel, teach school, visit the sick, and aid the Indians in every possible way.

There is a farmer at each of these stations, who aids the Indians in clearing and ploughing the land. They have by these influences been induced to give more attention to agricultural pursuits, and now cultivate the ground to considerable extent.

The Red Lake band raise an abundant supply of provisions for their own consumption, and last year had a small surplus. It was said by them last spring, that they then had more corn than they had ever had in the fall, before the misssionaries commenced their labors there. That band would never want for food, were it not for the fact that Indians from the surrounding country, when hunger and starvation overtake them, flock in among them, and by stealing and begging, exhaust all their supplies. Some families who raise more than enough for themselves, are in this way often reduced to suffering.

Rev. Mr. Bardwell, from whom the statistics of this mission are mainly derived,

"But little can be done to improve the morals of any people while they are starving to death, or roaming the country in pursuit of game to satisfy the cravings of hunger. Hence, our missionaries have made great efforts to induce the Indians to cultivate the soil for themselves. In this respect their labors have been crowned with encouraging success. The Indians have no working animals, and consequently no means of breaking up their ground. The mission farmer ploughs for them what new land they clear from year to year, and the old ground the Indians dig up with their hoes. Last year the mission employed two yoke of cattle sixteen days. ploughing lands which the Indians themselves had cleared. Each family has now its own garden, with from two to four acres under improvement.

The school at Red Lake has been taught eleven months during the last year. The number of scholars registered is nineteen, though the average attendance is but thirteen. The children are all required to devote a few hours each day to manual labor; the girls at various branches of house and needlework, the boys in farm and other work. All have made good proficiency in the studies usually taught in common schools. Thirteen of the scholars have been boarded, and six clothed by the mission, during the year."

Mr. Wright says :

"We rejoice in the prosperity of our school. In my family we now have eight (Indian) children; brother Carver has four, and brother Fisher one. It requires a great deal of care to look after them, provide for them, and keep them from the heathen influences around them. We think it a better policy to take a small number, and educate them thoroughly in all the various departments of a correct education, than to overtax our time and strength with a large number, and send them out into the world upprepared for the work we design them to accomplish.

"You would be encouraged, I am sure, could you visit us and witness the improvement these are making, who were one year ago wild, untutored creatures. We wait for the influence of the Holy Spirit upon them to convict and convert them. We pray earnestly that we may speedily enjoy a refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Why does the blessing tarry? Are not we all agreed in asking it? Are we not of one heart and of one mind? Why is the Lord so far from us? I hope we shall be especially remembered. We have a great deal of secular work on hand that must needs be done, but we would not neglect the souls of this poor people to do that."

The expense of sustaining one Indian child at the mission school is estimated to be twenty-five dollars per annum. Special pledges have been received for the support of a greater number than could be accommodated last year. The mission is in need of more commodious and better buildings, which they will be able to provide for themselves when the "mill," for which preparations are being made, is erected.

Mr. Bardwell had designed to build a mill for both grinding grain and sawing lumber, during the past year, but it was so late in the season before the requisite amount of money ($1,000) was raised for this object, and as there were some changes taking place at the mission, consequent upon the opening of a new station at Pembina, he concluded to defer it till another spring. The brethren at the mission will in the meantime be making preparations for it. The money is on deposit, reserved for this purpose.

A church has been organized at Red Lake, which has now connected with it eight native church members. One has been added, and one member has died during the year. In previous years they have parted with three of their members, who all died in the triumphs of faith. There is now one propounded for admission.

The Rev. Mr. Wright, the pastor of the church, says:

"The native church members, considering their circumstances, their ignorance, and their former habits, as fully adorn their profession as the majority of professors in the States. The greatest difficulty is to induce them to abandon their roving manner of life, and adopt habits of industry. In their heathen state they are so given up to idle, victous habits, to living by stealing and begging, that it requires a long time and a great amount of instruction, mingled with kindness and patient perseverance, to lead them away from such a course of life."

These Indians must be induced to cultivate their lands, or they must perish. Their game is nearly destroyed, and is becoming less and less every year. The leading men among them are aware of these things, but are utterly helpless, except as they get aid such as the missionaries are now giving them.

Cass Lake.—The removal of Mr. and Mrs. Fisher from this station, and the absence of Mr. Spees, were mentioned in the last Annual Report. Mr. Barnard and his family have now removed to St. Joseph's, Pembina county, to open a new station, and Mr. and Mrs. Fisher and Mr. and Mrs. Spees have returned to Cass Lake. These changes have, for a time, interrupted the progress of the mission. There has been no school regularly taught at Cass Lake, until since Mr. Fisher's return. He has taken three Indian children into his family, and designs to take more. Mr.

Barnard had with him at this station, one Indian young man, whom he brought down from Pembina. His parents were Catholics, but were anxious he should have a Protestant education. After having been at the mission less than two weeks, he could read very well in easy reading in his own language. A few weeks later, Mr. Barnard said of him:

"He is an exception to all the Indians with whom I am acquainted. His deportment in all respects is good. I am inclined to consider him a converted man. He seems to put no dependence upon Popery, but talks and acts like a Protestant Christian. He has been with us only five weeks, yet he can read quite intelligibly in the Testament, and writes legibly after a copy. I have reason to hope that the time and pains devoted to his instruction will not be lost. My prayer is, that God will make use of him."

The war spirit is reported to be a great hindrance to the progress of the gospel among the Indians. Mr. Fisher, writing from Cass Lake, July 11th, says:

"Most of the men from this place, and some from Lake Winnipeg, and about forty canoes from Leech Lake, left here yesterday to join the Red Lake Indians in a war party against the Sioux. I never saw such a general turn-out. We had some fears of the Leech Lake Indians, and locked up all our cattle in the barn, but the Lord did not suffer them to molest us in the least."

Mr. Bardwell adds:

"The last intelligence received from Ked Lake was, that this war party was mustering there, and it was supposed they would number about three hundred men. Enough, surely, to do the work of the Devil in that department of his dominions."

St. Joseph, Pembina county, Minnesota Territory.—This place is situated about thirty miles west of Pembina, just south of the British line. It is the county-seat of Pembina county, and contains about a thousand "half-breeds," and a few white families. The inhabitants of the place presented an urgent request for a mission more than two years ago, since which, they have been increasingly importunate.

From the first, Mr. Barnard has regarded that field as a very important one, and has been anxious that it should be occupied by a Protestant missionary. After his first visit there, he wrote:

"I am still of the opinion that some action should be taken, and that an effort should be made to supply that region with the means of education and with the true gospel, as soon as possible. I might state some facts, but I fear that, although strictly accurate, they would lead many persons who are ignorant of heathen character to expect more encouraging results than the future will develop. I have no doubt a large school could be sustained at the Fembina Mountain, or 'St. Joseph's,' as it is called. . . . The people are very anxious to have their children educated by Protestants, although they themselves are Catholics. I visited their priest, who received me very cordially. When I was introduced to some of the men, the first thing they said was, 'We want to give you our children to educate.' Almost the first question put to me by some was, 'Are you going to settle among us?' 'Have you selected a spot for a house?' 'When will you come?' adding, 'You will have plenty of children to teach,' dc. These things were said by Catholics, with many more things about their priest and his want of interest in their improvement. Of course I could give no direct answer to their questions, for I supposed that if I should go, it would be single-handed and alone, and that could not do much at first, besides taking care of my family."

In February, the Executive Committee received from the mission a copy of a resolution, passed unanimously, recommending that a mission should be established, as soon as practicable, at Pembina. It was accompanied by an expression of opinion, said to be unanimous, that Mr. Barnard could be more usefully employed there than at Cass Lake, and that it would be expedient for him to commence there immediately.

A government appropriation of $500 was made for a school, ot which the mission and its school will be permitted to avail themselves. They propose to commence a manual-labor school there, in which all the scholars shall be trained to work The necessary appropriation to the Ojibue mission, in consequence of the opening of this new station, will be increased about $500 per annum. Mr. Spencer and Mr. Smith will be associated with Mr. Barnard at that station. Writing from there, April 1, Mr. Spencer said:

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"You will perceive by reference to the map, that Red Lake is one of the head-waters of Red river, so that an uninterrupted water communication exists to the Pembina river; and thirty miles up this stream (which is not navigable) is St. Joseph, the place of our destination. We are desirous to arrive there in season to plant, more especially as provisions in that quarter are at present very scarce, owing to successive inundations the two years past. Father Smith has decided to accompany us.

"Before this reaches you, a letter from Brother Barnard will have been received, asking, for at least the first year, an appropriation of $500 from the Board. In this request I also join. I do so the more readily, as I understood, when with you, that the Committee stood ready to assist, in case it should be found expedient, and in the line of God's providence, to extend missionary operations in this quarter. Nor will the sum mentioned be thought a large sum, I am sure, when it is considered what is requisite in the commencement of such an enterprise. It is true we can get along as we have done in years past. When we came here, our Society was yet in its infancy; and with a strong desire to economize, necessity also being laid upon us, we pursued a course which, in other circumstances, our judgments could not approve. Since then, for the most part for the want of means and the lack of suitable men to be employed, we have expended some of the best years of our life in severe bodily labors, to the injury of health, and the detriment of the best interests of those whose eternal welfare we especially came to secure. Now we submit it to the decision of God's people, whose servants we are for Christ's sake, whether it is not poor policy-to appeal to no higher consideration-for their missionaries to waste their energies in sawing lumber, in building operations and the like, when it can be avoided? We do not expect to be idle; we do not ask to be exempt from the labor of our hands and the sweat of our brow; but while both by precept and example we encourage industrious habits among the people, we desire to employ our time and talents chiefly in teaching and disseminating the truth. As soon as practicable, we hope to be able to open a manual-labor schoolfor we are more and more convinced that this is our true policy-so that every influence we can bring to bear upon the young and rising generation may have its full effect. In commencing this undertaking, therefore, it is our prayer, if our views are correct, that, in the respect indicated at least, we may be placed in circumstances to carry them out; not to an indefinite extent, but only so far as their relative value as a portion of the great moral vineyard demands. Every thing is favorable for so doing, if the means are not wanting. Mr. Kiteon, of whom I made mention in a former communication, has kindly offered to contract for any buildings we may need, and to fornish, at reasonable prices, any thing we want, unless I except a few articles, such as quilts, socks, and the like, which we hope to obtain from private sources.

"The Pembinese are in a partially civilized state, accustomed to labor, and to obtain the necessaries of life by their own exertions, so that the system of barter which obtains here among the Indians (at best a necessary evil) will not meet our case there. The change in our circumstances, therefore, seems to call for a corresponding change in our relations to the Board, so as to relieve brother Bardwell and bring us more directly under their care."

The mission company arrived at St. Joseph the last day of May, and were warmly welcomed by the people. Mr. Barnard says:

"The people appeared very much pleased to see us. Many of them asked when we intended to commence school, saying, they were very auxious to have their children in school as soon as possible. They are a selfish and world-seeking people, like all others who are destitute of the true love of God. We hope to do them good by a consistent life and godly walk before them, and by enlightening their minds. From what we have seen among them, we are encouraged to hope that they will be inclined to improve their condition. Could a boarding-school be started here now, I presume from thirty to fifty scholars could be secured at once. There are a great many children here, and their parents are very anxious to have them taught in English.

Mr. Barnard has devoted a good deal of time, heretofore, to systemizing the Indian language, and preparing it for the use of others. He says:

"Of one thing I am sure, after nearly ten years' experience and observation, viz: that no man, however good, can possibly understand the workings of a heathea's mind, unless he can talk his language. Hence he cannot know how to adapt truth to it. To be sure, he may shoot at rardom, and God may guide the arrow. In all cases where an interpreter is employed, he, and not the missionary, adapts the language to the understanding of the hearers. How many interpreters can be thus depended upon? Why was it necessary that, the apostles should have the language? I suppose interpreters could have been obtained. I do not believe any language is too difficult to acquire; and I regard it the duty of the missionary to do what he can towards fitting himself to converse with the heathen whom he goes to save. I cannot begin to express the feelings I have on this subject, so clearly do I see how perfectly the missionary is fettered without a tongue."

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

MAKAWAO, EAST MAUI .- Missionaries, REV J. S. GREEN, MRS. GREEN

A FULL statistical report has been received from this mission. The indications of progress are very encouraging. More than one hundred and eighty members have been added to the two churches in Mr. Green's field. The interest of his people in behalf of the conversion of the world and the relief of the enslaved is maintained, and, in general, the members of the church are diligent and attentive readers of the Bible. Concerning this last subject, Mr. G. says:

"In nothing pertaining to my people do I more rejoice, than in the fact that multitudes of them are diligent, and not a few, intelligent readers of the Bible. Quite a number read it through yearly, and some have done so for more than ten years. To this, more than to any thing we can do, I attribute the fact that our people have been kept from falling into sin in the matter of intemperance. It does seem to me that any people who babitually and seriously read the Bible, do honor Him who gave it as a 'light to their feet and a lamp to their path;' and has He not solemnly declared, 'Them that honor me, I will honor? Some of my people seem to me to be growing Christians. They honor God; seem to love his Word and his house, and to desire the extension of his precious cause. I do not say this is the case with all—would that it were!—but quite a number appear thus. I hope too that sinners have been converted since I wrote you last: but the day will declare it. Many indulge the hope, and would gladly unite with the church."

To the people of Hawaii, he says,

"The Bible has given the Sabbath—sweet day of rest—and led the nation to observe it probably as sacredly as any nation on earth. It has destroyed polygamy, and given them the institution of marriage, which is regarded as faithfully as in most Christian countries. It has given freedom to a nation of serfs, law to a law-less race of beings, and has proved the source of general knowledge to an ignorant and debased people. . . It has effected more, infinitely more than all this. So far as any mortal can know, the Book of God has raised many of this poor people to the Paradise above, has erected in the New Jerusalem many a pillar to stand for ever, and has thus shown to the universe the most wondrous trophies of divine grace."

The converted Sandwich Islanders deplore the fact that that bleased Book is withheld from so many in our land, and that some professedly Christian men seem to justify the enactments which forbid the poor oppressed slave from learning to read it.

Mr. Green and his church are deeply interested in the mission enterprise that has emanated from the Sandwich Islands, and is laboring in Micronesia; and in the fact that other islands of the sea are looking there for missionary teachers. He herein finds an answer to the questionings of those, missionaries and others, who would send their children to the United States, fearing that they would not find employment there. In reference to the fact that a Marquesian chief had been there, seeking a teacher of the Ohfistian religion, he says:

"What is God saying to us and to our people through this benighted heathen chief? If I do not misinterpret his language, he is saying to us, 'Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitation: spare not; lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left,' Is not the great Lord of the harvest preparing a field of toil in the Pacific for our children and our children's children'

If May last, his field was deprived of the services of a teacher who had labored in that department for the last fifteen years. Mr. Green had great confidence in him, and desired to introduce him into the Christian ministry, but God has removed him. He was a diligent student of the Bible, and Mr. G. thinks he read it through, in course, not less than twelve times, besides his occasional rendings in school and elsewhere.

Mr. Green has organized a church during the year reported at Keoka, to which David Malo, a native of the islands ministers.

The progress of their schools has been much hindered during the year by the persevering efforts of Mormonism and Romanism. They have succeeded in drawing away many children from the schools. Yet the cause of education and sound learning appears to have made some progress.

The church at Makawao now numbers 549 members, 84 having been added dur-

The church at Keokea has 201 members, 104 having been received from the world the past year. The whole number of members in the two churches is 750; the whole number added on profession, 188.

The schools within his district contain about 500 children, some 200 less than in 1845. The branches studied are, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, philosophy, Church history, and Bible chronology. The scholars have made good progress, and he feels much encouraged, hoping that great good will result from the labors of this department.

REPORT OF STATION.

Makawao is the general name of our field, and I give it you as our principal station. We have, after much hesitation and after many disappointments in regard to a site for a meeting-house, concluded to build near our own house at Makawao. Quite lately we fixed the boundaries of the station, including a portion of Kula and a portion of Hamakua, and we hope soon to erect our house.

Kalanikalma, in Hamskua, has all along been the principal station. This is about five miles from my house. We have there a good, substantial stone meeting-house, where I meet a respectably large congregation on the Sabbath, at 11 o'clock A. M. The strength of the church is in the neighborhood of this house, so that I shall feel little reluctance at leaving them and preaching at Makawao at midday. The meeting-house at Kalanikalma being larger than we think of building, we shall, probably, continue to hold our large meetings there, as we now do. Huelo is our other Sabbath station in Hamakualoa. This is some eight miles distant from Makawao. A very respectable congregation assembles there on the Sabbath. For a year or more, Mr. Daniel Ji, a licentiate, resided there, preached on the Lord's day, and labored for the people as he was able. He then removed to Koolau, a few miles distant from Huelo, included in the Hana station.

Keokea, in Kula, is the name of the station occupied by David Malo. This place is eight or ten miles distant from Makawao, and was once an out-station. To this has been added Kalepolepo, formerly a small out-station of Wailuku. Pulchu, a station for Sabbath preaching, is about midway between Keokea and Makawao. Besides these, there are several smaller posts where meetings are frequently held, somewhat after the fashion of New-England conferences, attended in schol districts. Thus we have five stations where the preaching of the gospel is maintained pretty regularly, and three or four out-stations.

Number of Churches and Teachers, or Licensed Preachers of the Gospel.

We have only two distinct churches at present in this field, the church of Makawao and Hamakua united, and the church of Keokea in Kula. Of the latter church, formed August, 1852, David Malo, formerly of Lahaina, is pastor, he having been ordained to that office in September following. Daniel Ji is the only regularly licensed helper I have, and he may not return from Oahu to resume his labors. I have some three or four native helpers who, though not formally licensed, afford me great satisfaction by their efficient and judicious labors. Some of these may, ere long, be examined for a license.

Number of Church Members.

At the time that the church at Keokea was formed, it consisted of 97 members; some few of them from Kalepolepo formerly belonging to Wailuku station, but now to Keokea. Most of them, however, were from Kula. In April last, I assisted Malo, and we received 104 from the world, a company which the pastor of Keokea had examined and propounded, so that the church at Keokea has now 201 members in regular standing.

At Makawao, before the formation of the distinct church at Keokea, we had received 727 individuals to the church. Dismissed to unite at Keokea, 73, leaving 654. In January last we added 84, making 738.

On a careful examination, I find that there are the following number of church members in regular standing, viz.:

Changes during the Year in relation to the Churches.

It will be seen from the above that 104 members have been added to the church at Keokea, and 84 to the church at Makawao. Mr. Malo reports no deaths in his church. Some 8 or 10 members of our church have been reported to me as having died. Some of our brethren have removed to other churches, and a few from other churches have united with us. Some 25 children have been baptized during the

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Contributions for Benevolent Objects.

For the last year or two, the state of things in relation to money matters has been so distressingly bad, that a small amount only has been realized for the cause of benevolence. Mr. Malo has two stone meeting-houses under way-one nearly ready to put on the roof. He has been obliged to pay out all the money he could raise among the poor people for glass, nails, lumber, and carpenter-work. Our people at Makawao raised some $75,00, which I have paid over to the Treasurer of the Association. The people wish this to be divided equally between the cause of missions and the anti-slavery cause. We hope to do better this year, if spared.

The Labors of the Year, stated and occasional.

These have been the preaching of the gospel on nearly every Sabbath in the year, monthly concert, concert for schools and for seamen, and concert for the enslaved the last Monday of every month. When the weather has admitted, the people have assembled on Wednesday of each week for instruction, and I have met them, and, as I have been able, have communicated with them on such matters and things as have come up. This is a meeting of exceeding great importance, and I cannot dispense with it. On Saturday afternoon we have a meeting of the church in reference to the coming day of rest. These are our stated meetings. Occasional ones we have in different neighborhoods, a kind of familiar lecture, or the reading together from the Bible. Funerals also I have many to attend, and I do attend those which are near, where I read and pray at the grave.

Results, &c., so far as known.

In some respects, the results of these labors are less speedy and rich than I might, as sometimes seems to me, expect. The change from heathenism to a state of nominal Christianity is obvious, and no candid mind can fail to see it; but the work of civilization goes on slowly, or so it seems to me. One reason of this, I have of late been thinking, is a failure, on our part, of bringing to bear upon the minds of the people certain motives to action. The Bible was given us to teach the way to heaven and make men wise unto salvation, and this it has taught here at the islands. I am not at all ashamed of my people as students of the Word of God. They would put to shame many a man among us from New-England or Great Britain. But except as enjoining industry in our lawful callings, this book was not given to teach us farming, or the mechanic arts, or the thousand little, but indispensable arts and usages of civilized life. Something more than that Bible instruction is needed to make the people all that they should be. This necessary instruction is withheld to a considerable extent, as one teacher cannot do all or nearly all that is needed to be done. We see the fruits of our instruction in teaching the people to read, teaching them Bible history and geography. We see it, or believe we do, in seeing the Christian growing in grace, and in witnessing the turning of many of the people from sin to holiness, and from the power of Satan to the living God. We carnestly desire to see the people more civil and, more industrious, frugal, thrifty, and happy in their dwellings and families. That they may be thus civilized, I am doing more by my example and precept to teach the cultivation of the earth and the usages of life.

I have no conserve as to the control of the earth and the usages of by my example and precept to teach the chittyand of the earth and the dashes of turning the attention at little more to the cultivation of the earth, and to labors of other kinds, so long as I can help them to "keep their hearts with all diligence." And this I hope to do by clinging to the Bible, and teaching them to do so too. This we are still doing. Many of the people, young an I old, are continuing to read the Bible through in the course of the year. If they continue to read, to study, to love the precepts of the Bible, I shall have no fear though they fill their lands with the good things of this life, though they become a thrifty people and have stores of good things.

I trust that, in a moral point of view, the results of the labors bestowed on this field during the past year have not been in vain in the Lord. Though I cannot speak in a decided manner of a work of the Lord among the people, still, I think souls have been converted and the kingdom of the Son of God built up. Many of the church, too, seem to grow in grace; and they give me great satisfaction. Some have died, as I trust, in the Lord. They have loved him on earth; they loved his Sabbaths and his Word. They were humble, holy, believing men and women, and now I cannot but rejoice in the hope that they are with him, beholding his face, and being for ever assimilated to his glorious image.

CANADA MISSION-CANADA WEST.

NEW-CANAAN REV. E. E. KIRKLAND, MRS. KIEKLAND, MISS T LYON, MISS MARY C. BEALS. ST. CATHERINES. SEC. HIRAW WILSON, MRS. WILSON. MT. HOPE MISSION SCHOOL. Teachers, MISS MARY A. STADD. WINDSOR. Teacher, MISS MARY A. STADD. REV. E. E. KIRKLAND, MRS. KIBELAND, MISS THEODOSIA

THE number of missionaries and teachers in Canada, with which the year commenced, has been greatly reduced.

Early in the year, Mr. Kirkland wrote to the Committee, that the opposition to white missionaries manifested by the colored people of Canada had been so greatly increased by the interested misrepresentations of ignorant colored men, pretending to be ministers of the gospel, that he thought his own and his wife's labors, and the funds of the Association, could be better employed elsewhere. Subsequently he asked to be released from his engagements to the Society; and the Executive Committee, not without reluctance, released him. He has since left Canada.

Before leaving New-Canaan, he earnestly recommended to the Executive Committee to continue the services of Miss Lyon in the school at that place, and to appoint an assistant teacher to be associated with her. Miss Beals, of Ohio, was highly recommended to the Executive Committee, and has for some months past assisted in that school. Under date of August 19. Miss Lyon wrote:

"Our Sabbath-school is fuller and more interesting this summer than it has been at any time since I have been here. The parents, some of them, come out with their whole families, even where they have two that are too young to be in as scholars. For a few Sabbaths past, we have had a class of twelve or thirteen of the parents, some of them just beginning to learn to read; others can read a little. Our greatest difficulty in the Sabbath-school is a want of teachers. This class of adults needs two teachers very much, but can have but one. There have been, in all, fourteen deaths among the children since the 20th of March. Three of them have given good evidence of a change of heart, and have died rejoicing in the Lord, and feeling that they were going right home to heaven. One little girl, ten years old, longed for the time to come when she should go to be with her Saviour, whom she said she loved with all her heart. Some others have given some evidence of a change, though it has not been so clear as those three. I feel well paid for years of hard toil, in being permitted to witness such triumphs of the gospel as I have witnessed in the deaths of these children. Oh! pray for us, that these afflictions may be sanctified to the good of the people."

For some years past the number of colored scholars in the school at Mount Hope has been diminishing. The white children in that school could be provided for by Government and the Executive Committee did not feel warranted in using the funds of the Association in sustaining a school for their benefit. The station at Mount Hope, has therefore been discontinued, and the Misses Teall have left Canada.

St. Catharines.-Mr. Wilson continues his labors at this station, although no longer under the care of the Association. The term for which he was commissioned has expired, and he has decided not to renew his application. During the year he reported some very interesting seasons of refreshing from on High. At one time he wrote:

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"We have an exceedingly interesting Sabbath-school, numbering nearly one hundred scholars, which is much larger than it would have been but for the reason that we have clothed up many children on condition of their attendance. Quite a number of poor strangers, lately from bondage, have been clad and made comfortable to attend our protracted meeting, and are now rejoicing in hope.

"The work of grace here is progressing steadily and powerfully among the colored people; some thirty or more have found 'peace in believing,' and many others are inquiring 'what they must do to be saved.' Among those who have tasted the sweets of redeeming love are Mary Elizabeth, the girl in my family from New-Orleans; one man from New-Orleans, who arrived the last day of last year; one from Virginia, who arrived last month; one young man lately from Wheeling, Va., whose wife is a Roman Catholic, now at _____ U. S., but soon to be here; and a young man just from Kentucky: he had not been here a week before he was hopefully converted to God. There is here an intelligent and very interesting man, who told me last evening his mind was fully made up to serve God the rest of his life. He was formerly a blacksmith in Virginia, and while a slave there, took up the business of cleaning and repairing watches of his own accord, and with no one to teach him. He worked for his master through the day at the blacksmith trade, and for himself nights at his new business, sometimes working all night. He made his escape a little more than a year ago; his feet and legs were badly frozen ere he reached Pittsburg, and it was feared his limbs would have to be amputated; but he came to St. Catherines last May or June; when first arrived he could hardly walk, and received tender sympathy and charity. The first jeweller in the place took him in and gave him job-work, and soon found him accomplished in his business, and able to do nice work which he himself could not. He is now intrusted with the business of the establishment, and is much respected. I believe he is a Christian."

Windsor.-The school at Windsor has been under the charge of Miss Shadd, a colored young woman possessing an excellent education, and well qualified to teach-The school has been suspended, and Miss Shadd is now in the United States. She has not signified to the Committee an intention to return to Canada

Clothing.-The teachers at New-Canaan find it embarrassing rather than advantageous to be intrusted with clothing for general distribution. They therefore request that little, if any, should be sent them, except such as may be used in preparing children from the poorer families for school,

Mr. Wilson appears to find use for all the clothing sent to him. He wrote early in the season :-

"Since the 1st of Dec. last, we have furnished forty-four bed-quilts to about as many needy families, and over eight hundred articles of wearing apparel, of differ-ent descriptions and various sizes, for both sexes. A large share of this has been called for at our Mission-House; some has been sent off to the needy in other places within one hundred miles. In the distribution, a goodly number of recent fugitives from slavery have been furnished, and many who have come from nominally free States on account of oppressive laws. Many sick and infirm persons have been favored; several widows and orphan children have been supplied; two families that were burnt out, and lost nearly every thing they had; two aged blind men in St. Catherines and one in Niagara have shared liberally in our benefactions; one poor cripple, formerly a slave in Virginia—a noble specimen of humanity, but without legs—has been aided; also four Methodist preachers and one Baptist elder, with their families. These preachers are itinerating and laborious men." . . .

Whatever clothing is designed for Mr. Wilson's use should be directed to him at St. Catherines, Niagara District, Canada West.

SIAM MISSION.

BANGKOK, SIAM..... Missionaries, Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D., Rev. L. B. Lare, M.D., Rev. J. SLAST, MRS. BRADLEY, MRS. LARE, MRS. SLEET. Under appointment, Rev. C. F. Martin, Rev. WH. C. SEPHAM, MRS. Martin, MRS. SEIEPMAN. Total, 10.

Since the last Annual Report, the Executive Committee, yielding to their own convictions of duty and the often-urged requests of their missionaries, have authorized the opening of a new missionary station in Siam, and appointed two additional missionary families for that field of labor. From all the information that can be obtained from Siam, that kingdom appears now to be open to the preaching of the gospel, so that missionaries may go into every part of it, proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ, and presenting him as the only Saviour for our lost and ruined

It contains many cities, some of them with thirty thousand inhabitants, in each of which several missionaries might labor continually; and the liberal policy of the present King, it is said, authorizes the assertion that the field is open to a full system of gospel labor.

There are, however, as in every unchristian land, many obstacles to the progress of the gospel, among which our missionaries enumerate the following:

"The complete subserviency of this people to their rulers: the despotism that here reigns, crushing the bodies and spirits of this people, and offering a premium to almost every form of wickedness, an oppression not in the least alleviated by the present King, we regard as a mountain compared with which all that has been done by the government is as a grain of sand. In addition to this, there exists a form of oppression affecting a particular class of this people, differing somewhat from American slavery, yet perhaps not less unprincipled or cruel."

Of this there are two kinds: one a limited kind, where the servant is taken as surety for debt, and may, with some exceptions, be redeemed at any time by the payment of the debt. The other kind is a more absolute enslavement, with no such provision for redemption. The laws regulating the first kind permit a man who is in want of money to take his children, grandchildren, or other specified relatives, and pledge them as sureties for the payment of a debt, and the creditor may use the services of these, or transfer them to another, until the money is repaid. This may be done for as small a sum as five or six dollars of our money. A failure on the part of the debtor to redeem these sureties results in perpetual servitude.

The law, in its terms, prohibits cruelty, and decrees the freedom of the servant in extreme cases. The following is one of its strange provisions:

"If the creditor is condemned by the government to receive punishment for crimes committed, and shall send a servant (one of the above-named class) to receive punishment in his stead, and if such servant is beaten, chained, fettered, put in stocks, . . . or if such servant is punished instead of his masters wife, or child, or brother, or relative, the master has done wrong, and for his offense must allow his debtor to redeem his slave at half price. (In extreme cases, the debtor may take his servant without any payment.) If the slave is one absolute, the master is clear: such slave is entirely at his disposal. If he runs away or dies, his master bears the loss."

"Slaves for surety" are said to be very numerous in Bangkok; the exact number of which cannot be conjectured. In many cases their condition is no better than that of salayes absolute." Captives taken in war are also held as servants to the government, and their condition is likened to that of the children of Israel in Egypt.

Another evil with which the gospel has to contend in Siam, is the practice of polygamy and concubinage. These practices are not only allowed by government, but the rulers themselves carry the practice to the greatest extent.

The religion of the country is idolatrous, and is intimately connected with the government; both of the present reigning sovereigns entered into the kingly office from the priesthood.

These are not unexpected obstacles. Such, or similar, are found in every pagan government. To overcome them the Christian ministry is appointed, furnished with the gospel as its great instrumentality, and clothed with power by the indwelling Spirit of God.

In our last Report it was mentioned that the mission had obtained a grant of land from the King, for which they pay an annual rent of 320 tickals, ($192.) They have completed their buildings, and are now occupying them.

In October, 1852, they wrote:

"We are now as favorably situated, with reference to a place of abode, as we can ever hope to be in this heathen city. Our houses are completed, and a small printing office which we were under the necessity of building for the security of our apparatus and other mission property. Little remains to be done of manual labor to place us where we shall be able to engage in the more direct duties of our mission, with the prospect of being thereafter but little interrupted in these labors from such causes.

Our missionaries have labored much as usual, preaching statedly in certain places, to such audiences as they can gather; going out daily to preach in the streets, and in the lanes and courts of the temples, distributing religious tracts and portions of the sacred Scriptures, and occasionally journeying to other places to extend similar labors. Dr. Lane, describing one of these tours, save:

"Our first night we spent on the Tachin river, just at the mouth of the canal that leads over to Meklong. We had a comfortable night. In the morning, arose, and with the tide started on. The next day led us to the sea, at the mouth of the Meklong river. There we remained till midnight, and then started across the gulf, a distance of ten or twelve miles. When we started, there was hardly a ripple on the deep. All was darkness and stillness. We hoped strongly that we were crossing at a favorable hour; but we were hardly fairly out to sea, before the wind began to rise and the waves to be troublesome. Both Mr. B. and myself felt that probably an hour of toil and trial awaited us. We each of us took an oar and worked with all our might. The wind increased and the waves grew furious. We toiled on for an hour or so, and still saw nothing earthly that could brighten our hopes. Few words passed between us. Mrs. Lane lay half inclined, and occasionally asked, 'Do you see land yet?" At about three o'clock I felt it to be my duty to cease to hold up to her the brightest side, and gave her as good direction as I could how to act if we should be upset. I then went to my oar, committed myself and family and all to God, and felt happy in the thought, 'He doeth all things well. Let Him do what seemeth good in His sight,' Matters did not improve. Every little while, a rude wave would dash over our boat. At about four o'clock we drew near to some shore. There was no moon; but we could see the trees like a dark cloud, low in the horizon. We knew not where we were, whether above the river's mouth or below it, and we could do no otherwise than to try to fasten our boat and wait for the day. As I was about to thrust down a pole to try the depth of the water, a swift wave gave the boat a violent lurch that threw me entirely over her side. I thought I was going wholly into the deep; but I caught a chow, (an oar,) and partly recovered myself, when the boat seemed to dive under me and bore me up. I was glad to find myself safe, and spontaneously ascribed thanks to God for my deliverance. We soon found ourselves in less than one fathom water. Here we stuck down our chows and poles, and tied our boat, and then, like Paul and his company, we 'wished for the day.' It came in good time, according to the eternal promise of our God. We then found ourselves above the month of the Petchaburi river. The wind and waves moderated at about daylight, so that with little difficulty we entered the river. There we stopped."

Dr. Lane was here taken suddenly and severely ill with something resembling inflammation of the brain. He says:

"It seemed to me that I should probably die; and this passage delighted me exceedingly: 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me. Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.' During the day we moved up to Petchaburi, and stopped before a wat. As evening came on, my delirium left me, and I was in my right mind: but yet my suffering was great."

While attending as a physician in the palaces of the kings, Dr. Bradley has taken occasion to preach the gospel, and show its opposition to some of the practices of the great. The following are among the incidents which he reports:

"After breakfasting in the audience-hall of her Majesty, where for the first time prayer was offered to the true God in craving a blessing upon our food, we were invited to speak of Christ Jesus, and tell of his power and love. Some five or six of the highest princes of the kingdom were present, as well as several of the chief rulers, together with many others of inferior rank. I took up the Bible account of the creation, and having read it, taught my auditors concerning the living and only true God. That he is the sole maker and sustainer of all things; is the giver of all good; and that this same Jehovah was manifest in the flesh, became a man of sorrows, and lived, and taught, and gave many infallible proofs of his divinity in his acts, his death, and resurrection. As I came to the passage that speaks of God making man male and female, and only one of each ext. I ventured to preach in that great harem the Bible doctrine of marriage, and spoke, I trust, with a good degree of Christian boldness, of the sin of polygamy. I never had a more interesting audience. The attention given appeared to be close, and the questions propounded to me in the course of my remarks were much to the point. We speam nearly all that Sabbath in the audience-hall of the Queen, in prescribing for her, and in conversing with different individuals, and sometimes companies of them, on the doctrines of Christ. We had several interviews with the King, but found no opportunity to converse with him that day concerning the truths of the gospel."

Having been called to the second King's palace, he says:

"This has opened the door for me to preach Christ both outside and inside of the gates of his harem. Seeing me on a time have a copy of the Life of Christ in Siamese, he remarked that there was no end of our making and distributing the books of Christ. I took the occasion to say to him that we desired most earnestly to convert him and all his people to Christ, the true God and only Saviour. In reply, he inquired how he could become a disciple of Christ, having so many wives as had. I told him that he could not follow the instructions of Christ and have more than one wife; that if he would truly follow Him, it appeared to me that he must treat his first wife as his Queen, and, ceasing to consider all others as wives or combines, he should house, feed, and clothe them well, and treat their children as his own. 'Oh,' said he, 'that would be very difficult, if not impossible.' That remark led me to enlarge on other points concerning the Bible law of marriage, and the advantages of having only one wife."

In the course of the conversation, the king attempted to vindicate the practice of polygamy by a reference to the brute creation. Dr. B. replied:

"'You belong to the human race; you are a man, and a king of men; and will you attempt to justify your conduct by examples drawn from the brutes? 'Oh no, I do not mean to do that,' said he; 'I only say that such has been the result of my observation, and that perhaps it may have some bearing upon the question in hand.' He soon went out of the room, and thus prevented my proving to him that where polygamy prevails, the human race and human happiness are far from flourishing as they do in countries where it is not allowed."

HEATHEN CORRUPTIONS.

Dr. Bradley writes that his observations in the palaces of the Kings of Siam made him acquainted with depths of human pollution of which he had, before, seen only the surface. He says:

"A short time before, I had been awfully shocked by the filthy conversation of the Governor of C-, a place in the northern extremity of the kingdom; and had felt it to be my duty to rebuke him sharply for making himself so vile. It seemed to me that such gross pollution must be peculiar to the people of, that region, and indeed I had been credibly informed that it was. I could hardly think it possible that such abominations could be found in the capital of the kingdom, and much less among the most learned and refined in its palaces. But I found myself very much mistaken; just such vile talk, and even worse, was almost constant among the princes and officers of state, as I met them daily in the royal palaces. And there was no text in the Bible that I found myself necessitated to use so often in my teaching and preaching there, as the Seventh Commandment. .

"Aside from the many concubines in these harems, the thousands of females there, the unmarried princesses, their numerous female attendants, and the female servants of the concubines, seem to be comparatively free from the sin of which I am writing. The rules and regulations of those establishments are such as to throw a safeguard around those classes. Hence there are no places where our wives can labor so free from all liability to insult as there."

A brief extract from one of Mr. Silsby's letters will make known some of the customs of Siam, and the arbitrary power of its kings and nobles:

"My teacher, who is regarded as among the first Siamese scholars, divides the Siamese into seven classes:

"1. The royal family, including its immediate relatives.

"2. All other persons of rank or nobility.

"3. All the wealthy not included in the first two classes.

"4. Comprises merchants and traders.

"5. Farmers or cultivators of the soil, including, also, all laborers who do not belong to the next two classes.

" 6. Slaves.

"7. Captives taken in war.

The above classification, although not very accurate, will serve my purpose well enough, in what I may say respecting the people of Siam.

"Siamese 'customs' admit of there being three kings, viz.: a first, second, and third king; the last two, however, subordinate to the first.

"The authority of the first king is most despotic and absolute. It seems liable to no restrictions, excepting as the custom of former kings may seem to impose. . . When he commands, every man in the kingdom must drop every thing and attend to the royal behest. No matter if a dying wife or child be thus left to breather their last alone, the order must be obeyed, and the service dare claim no recompense. It is sometimes recompensed, but this altogether of grace, and even then is generally given to those who are not suffering want. Every thing here seems so arranged as continually to remind the subject of his complete subserviency to his king.

When the royal boat approaches, every other boat must seek some recess to hide away, and its occupant must not dare to gaze upon the royal face. Every boatman, when passing up or down the river in front of the royal palace, must take off his hat and get upon his knees to row his boat, if he would save his back from the lash. When a Siamese ship returns from another country laden with goods for his Majesty and any of his subjects, no man's property can be removed from the ship until the King's things shall first have been taken out. When a foreigner offers any thing extraordinary for sale, no subject must buy until the King shall first have had the opportunity of getting it. This despotic feature pervades even the language itself. Every thing belonging to the King has a different name from the same thing belonging to his subjects; and whenever they speak of him, they must employ language implying his greatness and their abjectness.

"These arbitrary ideas are of course not confined to the King, but every noble, great or small, deports himself upon the same principle with regard to those who are under him, and feels that he has the right, or at least exercises the power, of requiring the same abject recognition of his superiority. And when these principles are carried into practical detail, as they are in the actual administration of the government, they lead to every manner of oppression. The rewards of industry are thus extorted from the people, and all real enterprise is suppressed or discouraged. A large proportion of the people are required to labor unrequited three months every year, for the King or some of his nobles; others six months, and some even more. The products of industry meet with the most exorbitant taxes. The producer of cocoa-nuts, for example, realizes only half of the money obtained for their sale. The manufacturer of salt pays three fourths of the price of his salt to the Government. Sugar and a multitude of other articles are taxed in a similar manner. But were such stringent regulations as these the only things to be complained of the circumstances of this people would not be so bad as they are. Those in authority often fleece the people with impunity. The wages that are promised the laborer are often withheld, and he dares not complain; to do so may cost him his life."

Our missionaries meet with some encouragement in their work. Now and then they find one who has some knowledge of the plan of salvation, but they dare not speak confidently of the conversion of any. Dr. Bradley says of one man:

"I have one very interesting case in my mind, in the person of a nobleman about forty years of age, a maternal uncle of the late Queen of Siam. Since the death of the Queen, he has visited me several times, to converse with me on the religion of Jesus. He has from the first of my acquaintance with him, three months ago, seemed to be the most serious-minded man I have ever seen among the Siamese. His last visit was on Sabbath eve, the 26th ult. His conversation at that time was exceedingly interesting and encouraging. He solemnly affirms that he is a firm believer in Christ; that he has abandoned idolatry, as being a huge and horrid system of error; that his hope for salvation is placed in Christ only; and that he prays to him daily. On being asked how he prayed to him, he rehearsed a prayer which it would seem none but the Holy Ghost had taught him. Miss Morse, of the Baptist Mission, and Mrs. Bradley were present and heard all he said, and were astounded and delighted to behold such a man, a Siamese nobleman, relating, as it would seem, real Christian experience, and at the same time evincing very much knowledge of the gospel, while he had had but very slender means of receiving instruction from the missionaries. As to myself, I did not feel so sanguine that he was indeed a converted man; for I had before seen several a good deal like him of his own countrymen, and who, having stood, as it were, on the threshold of heaven, had gone entirely back, and were probably lost. But with all the abatements I feared there were in his character, I could not but regard him as at least very near the kingdom. I fondly hoped that he might be led entirely within the gates of the New Jerusalem. Be these promising appearances what they may, the Lord will not disappoint us. He will not be unfathful to his promises! Our labor in Him shall not be in vain; in due time we shall reap, if we faint not."

It is not yet certainly known that the Government will give its consent to missionaries taking up their residence in different parts of the kingdom. All needed facilities have been given them to make their living at Bangkok pleasant, and no objection whatever is made by the Government to their going out into every part of the kingdom to preach and distribute religious tracts and portions of the Bible, and the hope is entertained by the missionaries that they will be permitted to open new stations wherever the situation of the people seems to warrant.

The government of Siam is, however, a despotism, having a close connection with Buddhism; hence its future course cannot be predicted. The commands and promises of God are the missionaries' main reliance.

churches are making special efforts to promote the enaction of a Maine Law in the Western S a every way possible. They are advancing in Anti-Slavery action, and promoting the cause in

Our missions in the slave States are as prosperous as we could reasonably expect. They prove that the truth may be spoken in love, and that faithful instruction may be given even on the subject of American slavery. Mr. Fee writes:

"I am fully satisfied that Kentucky will soon open, in many counties at least, to a gospel opposed to slaveholding and all other known sins. We now need more laborers; we need men deeply imbued with the spirit of Christ—men of prayer, and apt to teach—men who, while they shall speak out against slaveholding and all other wrongs, shall do so with great tenderness and kindness; not to withhold truth, but to 'speak it in love.' Another laborer should be sent into Madison and Jessamine counties; there are more calls for preaching than your missionary there are fill

"Never have I been more fally persuaded of the necessity of a whole gospel than during this tour. All over this fertile and levely country, intellectual and moral decay are as manifest as the noon-day sun. That slavery, by engendering pride, caste, cruelty, oppression, fraud, and licentiousness, is the cause of this decay, is undeniable. And, under God, I believe nothing but the gospel of Christ, faithfully preached and applied to all known wrongs, will save from the calamities of general vice and the sore judgments of God; nothing but this will reform this or any other people. The history of the past shows that neither politics nor revolution correct the moral wrongs of society."

Mr. Fee, in presenting his annual report, writes :

"The labor has been to me exhausting, but not concentrated as formerly; and though not so fruitful in the ingathering of souls as in the previous year, yet profitable in its results.

"I have assisted in organizing three or four new churches in the interior of the State, upon the same principles of non-fellowship with slaveholding, caste, dramselling, &c.

"I have visited and preached at many new places where we have not organizations. These visits have generally been encouraging. . . Our congregations have uniformly been respectful, attentive, and solemn. We have made it a point never to deal in ridicule, lightness, sarcasm, or vituperation. We have never shunned to declare the plainest truths, and to speak, as far as we know it, the whole truth; but we have endeavored to do so in love, in kindness, and solemnity. As a result, our opponents have respected us, though they differed from us.

"The most encouraging feature of the field in Kentucky is, that the public mind

"The most encouraging feature of the field in Kentucky is, that the public mind is undoubtedly opening to the reception of truth, an investigation of the slavery, caste, and temperance questions. Slaveholders are losing some of their power over the public mind; the people better understand the character and designs of Abolitionists, and are becoming more and more convinced of the wrong of slavery as they contemplate it, and read upon the subject. Restraint is gradually being thrown off and congregations are multiplying in number, and increasing in size.

thrown off, and congregations are multiplying in number, and increasing in size.

"The continual agitation of the subject, of itself, does good, by directing the attention of persons to it. As they think, if they think soberly, as many do, they must be convinced; and though the number of pro-slavery 'Bible arguments,' in the form of books, is being multiplied, yet the number of opponents to slavery, in the form of 'living epistles, known and read of all men,' is also daily multiplied. I am now more than ever convinced that an anti-slavery gospel can be preached and will succeed in Kentucky. The very fact that anti-slavery churches have been planted and sustained, with a small but increasing success, is, of itself, encouraging to others to venture out and relieve conscience, and free their souls by organizing and doing duty.

"We need, now, some three or four more ministers in the work here, who are men of kindness, meakness, coursge, prayer, deep piety, willing to let go the minor issues among sectarians, and work upon union principles; work for fundamental faith and a righteous practice. Let the shibboleths of party sectism die in the contest for righteousness and liberty, and let true Christians be united as one man, coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty!

"Bro. Fisk and myself devote our whole time to the work of the ministry, and cannot supply the demands now made for preaching.

"Three colporteurs are now in the field, laboring in Lewis, Mason, Bracken, Fleming, Rockcastle, and Madison counties. These brethren visit hundreds of families, sell the publications of the American Tract Society, distribute Bibles to slaves that can read, and anti-slavery documents to slaveholders and non-slaveholders; talk with those whom they meet upon the necessity of repentance and of personal piety; also, in reference to their duty to the alaves, and to have no fellowship with slave-holders in the Church. These colporteurs are Abolitionists, and though often reviled and persecuted, yet they have not, thus far, been treated with any violence. The work of these brethren is of great service in enlightening and awakening the

"By solicitations made one or two months previous to me, I went with Bro. Fisk to Fleming county, some two weeks since. We had there a crowded house on Sab-bath; quiet, attentive, respectful no disturbance. On Monday, we asked how many there were present who were determined sooner or later to have no church fellowship with slaveholding, dram-selling, and other popular sins so often allowed in the large denominations around us. Seven persons rose to their feet.

"On Friday previous, at another meeting in the same county, fifteen miles from that place, eight persons rose to the same question. The way is opening, the work goes on : may God direct and bless!"

Encouraging reports have also been received from the other missionary in Kentucky, and from the brother in North Carolina. The brother last alluded to is ministering to six feeble charges, and statedly preaching at five other points where organizations have not been effected. The blessing of God has followed his efforts, souls have been hopefully converted, and the churches have been strengthened. They are, however, yet feeble, and will need further aid from our Association. There is great demand for further ministerial aid, but the prejudice against antislavery Christianity is so strong, that it is feared that no one but a native of the State would be tolerated in ministering to churches established on the principle of excluding slaveholders. At present, we know of none whom we can send to their aid. This brother wrote at the end of his second quarter's service :

"We have had several accessions to the church during this quarter. Two of these were from other churches, and six from the world. A good state of religious inter-were from other churches, and six from the world. A good state of religious interest has existed among our people for several months, and still continues. The prospect of doing good is brightening. If things continue as favorable as they now are, and the friends of humanity furpish us the assistance necessary to enable me to give all my time to the work, with the blessing of God, we shall prosper."

"There are two things which stand in the way of the progress of the cause with which we are identified. These are, prejudice against our principles, and the want of sufficient means to propagate them. If we are consistent with our principles and firm to our purpose, we shall stand unshaken, while we wage a war of extermina nation against shavers and against the area of this land. May God sneed tion against slavery, and against the pro-slaveryism of this land. May God speed

COLPORTEURS IN KENTUCKY.

The three colporteurs whose labors in Kentucky are addressed to distributing Bibles and religious tracts to the slaves, and anti-slavery and other religious truth to the whites, meet occasionally with some opposition, mostly from non-slaveholders, and with many cheering indications of kind feeling from all. They say :

"The good people are beginning to read and think for themselves, and are not willing to be guided any longer by the pro-slavery teachings that have been so long current in this boasted land of liberty. Many are beginning to see the impropriety of fellowshiping the sin of slavery in the Church, and to speak against so doing; yet there are many who regard their popularity too highly, to plead the cause of the oppressed; and many professed ministers seem to think more of pleasing the world than of obeying the commands of our Saviour, who said, 'Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets.' And again; 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy-

"I meet with some who promise usefulness, some who speak out against the great and crying sins of the land to some extent, but as yet few in these regions are willing to embark in an unpopular cause for Christ's sake. Still, many are reading and searching for truth, and many acknowledge the right in private conversation. One brother said the general aspect was very much changed within the last two or three years, and I find that many are becoming quite tender on the subject of

"I feel that the work is just begun, that there is very much to be done, and but a little time in which it may be done. The field is now before us, the harvest fast ripening, but the laborers few. I have visited and revisited this month three hundred and forty families, and sold them eighty-seven volumes for $18 05, besides donating twenty small books; have distributed this month only three Bibles and three Testaments to the slaves, though I have found several yet to be supplied. I have also distributed a large amount of religious and anti-slavery tracts, which have generally been well received, and are doing much good, especially making good impressions on the minds of the young, who are the bone and sinew of the land."

Owing to the miscarriage of a box of books, our colporteurs were for a time destitute of Bibles; hence the deficiency spoken of. They have since received a supply. At another time, one wrote :

"I have visited and revisited this month two hundred and seven families, and have sold them ninety-two volumes for $19 23 cents, besides supplying slaves that could read with five Bibles and five Testaments. I have found about ten other servants who can read, yet to be supplied. I have also distributed a large number of religious tracts, which I trust are doing much good.

"I make it a rule to discharge my duty in talking on the necessity of personal holiness, advising, exhorting, reproving, rebuking, and praying with all, whenever circumstances seem to dictate the same. And I thank God that there are some who, regardless of their popularity, speak out for the cause of righteousness, truth, love, and mercy. The work goes on. In some districts there have been lectures and debates concerning the evil and wrong of the system of slavery. One person remarked to me that the days of slavery were numbered, and that slaveholders themselves were aware of it.

"I find, on revisiting the districts where the good people have had time to read and study concerning the great evil and sinfulness of the system of slavery and its proper remedy, that I have great occasion for rejoicing."

The kind and amount of labor performed by some of our missionaries may be learned from the following extract:

"For a few months past I have been preaching a part of my time to a Presby-terian congregation ten miles from this place. The Lord has been pleased to own his truth at that place in the conversion of a few impenitent souls. The church has also been quickened in the service of God. I will give you an account of a Sabbath day's labor. While holding a meeting at East Liberty, ten miles from here, after preaching every evening during the week and once in the daytime, I returned home on Saturday, visited the brethren at Lock, and had a prayer meeting in the evening. A church-meeting was held on Sabbath morning, at ten, when four were examined and propounded. I preached at eleven o'clock, then rode five miles to Mt. Liberty, and preached at three o'clock P.M.; after which I rode to East Liberty, ten miles, and spoke in the evening, and saw three come forward to be prayed for. It was going beyond my strength, yet I thought I ought to do it. Had I strength, I should commence a series of meetings soon in this place.

"Labor for Christ is becoming sweeter and sweeter to me. Oh that I had a thousand lives to spend in his service !"

The churches of the West are awaking to the importance of Free Missions. A missionary from Ohio writes:

"I trust our Society this year will be prospered in an unusual degree. Our Free Mission Societies East and West are, as I understand it, the only Societies in correspondence with our churches which maintain, in their operation, the principles declared in the resolution of the General Congregational Convention at Albany. Surely the Congregational churches will not withhold their benefactions from missions managed in accordance with their own declared convictions."

Concerning their labors, a friend in Wisconsin writes :

"The way is now open, so that a very large number of free mission ministers are needed. A few more men of the right stamp in that State would add an inconceivable strength to the cause. Free missionaries are few and scattered, and have none of the advantages which union imparts. Some of them were entire strangers to all the rest. They have done a blessed work in their respective localities, but it has been done by individual effort, with no assistance whatever from the ministry around them; indeed, the general influence is all against them. All the other Societies have been well represented by able and faithful agents, who have cared for, watched over, and defended their missionaries; these have been wholly neglected. Hence, very large numbers of ministers who have been educated in the principles of reform, have been brought into connection with other Societies, thereby greatly weakening the hands of free missionaries, and strengthening those of the conservatives. Let not one accusing thought rise against those brethren. It would have required a martyr-spirif for them to have come upon the right ground. The people are poor and in debt, and the establishment of all the institutions and public improvements of society is resting upon them. Consequently, the missionary must either stop preaching, or receive the assistance of a Society some of whose practices he strongly disapproves of. The idea of ceasing to proclaim the gospel would not be entertained.

It has been said to me, If an agent had been sent into the State six years ago, the majority of the churches here would now be standing on Free Mission ground. There is need now of an agent on this field to preach to feeble churches, to organize new ones, and to obtain ministers for them. There is quite a number of successful ministers, who, if the enterprise is cared for as it ought to be, will join in it with full purpose of heart. But if its friends neglect it, it will have a depressing effect upon them."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN OHIO, A FREE PRESBYTERIAN.

"Our terms of communion exclude slaveholders, apologists, or such as vote for slaveholders, or immoral characters, distillers, venders, and such as use intoxicating drinks as a beverage, togother with the members of secret societies. This keeps us from large accessions; yet our cause is steadily on the advance in the community."

FREE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, WASHINGTON CITY.

"The condition of things reminded me of Jerusalem, when Nehemiah went up to rebuild it. Desolation reigned on every hand, a perverted gospel was proclaimed to some fifty thousand, and not a church could I find where buying and selling one another was considered a disciplinable offense. Not far from our house of worship, stood the dwelling of that prominent elder of the Presbyterian Church who spurned the prayers and tears of a broken-hearted mother, and sold her daughter, a worthy and estimable church-member, to one of the harems of the far South-refusing to sell her in Washington at any price. After the facts were published throughout the land, the New School General Assembly met at Washington, and this same elder distributed the emblems of the body and blood of that Saviour, whom he had, but a few months before, sold in the person of 'one of his little ones'!"

The church and congregation had incurred a debt in purchasing a house of worship. In these circumstances strenuous efforts were made by those who wished to join the church, and would have brought with them pecuniary aid, to induce them to pass a vote and publish to the world that slaveholding should be no bar to membership in that church.

The blessing of God attended the administration of his Word, and, during the six months Mr. Clarke labored there, five were added to the church on profession of faith.

"Permit me to add," Mr. Clarke writes in his report, "that, after a most careful survey of this field of labor, I am constrained to say, that I regard the importance of sustaining it unsurpassed by that of any church with which I am acquainted. Its position at the capital of this great nation, the favorable location of its house of worship—between the President's house and the capitol, and containing one of the most pleasant rooms for religious services in the city—the influence it may exert upon the multitude of strangers who visit the city from every part of the land and the world, the importance of furnishing a home for the many sons of New-England who are employees of Government, the importance of a constant light on the consciences of members of Congress while absent from home: all these and many more reasons present a strong and imperious claim upon your society for continued aid and sympathy."

TRAVERSE-DES-SIOUX, MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

The circumstances connected with the establishment of a home missionary at this remote point illustrate so well the demand for the operations of a society based on the principles we have adopted, that the Committee deem it expedient to make more than usually full extracts from the correspondence that preceded it.

Our missionary there had been for four years connected with the mission of the A. B. C. F. M. among the Dakotah Indians. He had a strong desire to spend his life among them, and there were some very encouraging appeals made to him, increasing that desire, just at the time he cut himself loose from them. His reasons for making the sacrifice he did he thus states:

"It is now more than four years since I came into this field of labor under the patronage of the A. B. C. F. M. We were not, however, without some scruples touching the policy of the Board in respect to certain popular vices, slavery, polygamy, and caste; meantime, however, we hoped there would be a change for the better in the said Board. In this we have been sadly disappointed, and our constitutions scruples remain; and therefore I shall seek to dissolve the relation which I sustain to it as its missionary.

"Not only am I dissatisfied with the policy and proceedings of said Board in general: but I am associated with some who maintain that, although it may be possibly inexpedient for an enlightened man to take a plurality of wives, we have no Scripture authority to require a man, who is a polygamist, on applying for admission to the fellowship of the Church, to put away any of his wives, bowever many he may have taken while in a state of heathenish darkness.

"Such counter-instruction neutralizes every effort to establish a holy religion among a licentious, wretched people like the Dakotahs, so far as the influence of such teaching obtains in the minds of the inquiring."

The question he presented was not a merely theoretical one. He says it "Has been and still is a practical one. There have been at least two applications for admission to the church at this station—one before I came, the other since. In the first case, Dr. T. S. Williamson, who was then associated with Bro. Briggs, agreeing with Mr. Renville, the ruling elder, voted for the reception of the man who had at the time two women as his wives. Mr. Riggs objected to his reception, whereupon they resolved to let the case rest while they would appeal to the Ripley Presbytery of Ohio for light upon the subject. But before this foreign light could be secured, the applicant was called to give up his account at the bar of God. He died at the very threshold of the kingdom, unwarhed of his sin! In regard to the other case, we required the man to put away all his women except the first one he bought, and to be married to her according to the institution of the Bible; but to this he objected, saying, if Dr. W. were present he would not require him to do this in order to his reception. And so, Naaman-like, he turned away, and remains unwashed, as we fear, to the present day. Similar cases of conviction and inquiry among the Dakotaha have occurred here; but all our efforts to lead them to do their duty in this particular have been neutralized by the counter-instruction of one of our own number, whose medical skill gives him not a little influence among the Dakotaha."

Mr. A.'s heart was strongly interested in behalf of the Dakotaha, and he at first purposed to remain among them. An interesting field presented itself at Patterson's Rapids, on the Minnesota River, about twenty miles below Lac-Qui-Parle, which he thus describes:

"There is a small band of Dakotahs at that place who seem desirous to improve their condition. They have abandoned the superstitions of their fathers, as well as many of their customs and habits of eavage life. They desire to build themselves houses, and plant large fields; they call for a teacher; they beg for a missionary. I have been down to ascertain more clearly the facts of their case; and since my return the chief man, Waumdiokiye, has been up to repay the viait and 'talk over,' as he said, 'the things that are in his heart.' He is an Indian of uncommon mind. Rev. G. H. Pond once remarked to me, that he is the wisest and most thinking Indian in the Dakotah nation. He and his family, his two sons and their families, and two sons in law and their families, together with three nephews and their families, constitute the leading families at their village. There are several others there who, like them, are willing to take hold, and make an effort to rise from their degradation. There are already three believing souls at that village. They beg me to have mercy on them, i. e., pity them, and come and teach them. The old chief, or leading man, said to me, 'You are the man of our choice, and I have come up to assure you that we all want you to come and live with us, and teach us.' He says he has already selected the most choice situation for my house, and any improvements that may be necessary for carrying on missionary operations."

With these urgent entreaties he would have gladly complied, but for the fear that his doing so would be regarded as an opposition movement by the missionaries with whom he had been connected, and the additional apprehension that the knowledge of their opinions would diminish his influence with the Indians among whom he might labor.

An interesting home-field was offered at Traverse-des-Sioux, about which he says:

"There will be many Dakotahs upon whom we may hope to exert an influence for good. Indeed, although we are constrained to leave the Dakotahs, our hearts shall be as fountains of tears for the everlasting welfare of this poor perishing

At Traverse-des-Sioux, he says:

"There are at this time some professed friends of the Redeemer at Traverse who would most likely rejoice in the establishment of a pure Christianity in their midst. Among these are the families of Messra, Alex. G. Huggins and Jonas Pettijohn, formerly connected with the A. B. C. F. M. as assistant missionaries. They left the Board partly on account of its connection with slavery and other prevailing sina. Already there are settlements in the vicinity of Traverse where the gospel ought to be preached to the people, so that the right shape may be given to society as it forms. It is truly astonishing with what rapidity the wave of population is rolling out in this direction. Four years ago, I preached in a LITILE LOS SCHOOL-HOUSE near where Rev. E. D. Neil's church now stands in St. Paul. That small house was amply sufficient to accommodate the entire population of St. Paul—now a city of school-houses and chapels.

"It is supposed by some that Traverse-des-Sioux will yet be the capital of the Territory instead of St. Paul. It is certainly in advance of what St. Paul was four years ago, both in respect to the population in town and the surrounding community.

"It seems to me your Association will do well to improve that opening for preaching the gospel and establishing its institutions in their purity there."

Eight miles below Traverse there is a flourishing settlement, and one twenty miles above. There is no minister of the gospel within seventy miles of T.

Mr. Adams arrived at Traverse May 20, and found there about a dozen professors of religion, whose sympathies are decidedly in favor of forming a Free Presbyterian church. July 11th, he wrote:

"That this place and vicinity will be of considerable importance very soon, is not doubted by any who become acquainted with its locality and resources.

"The Sabbath services are well attended, and the moral aspects of our society seem to be brightening. A temperance society after the good old model, without the red-fiannel string of secrecy, was organized some two weeks ago, in which chiefly all the citizens of this place took a deep interest. Some thirty or forty names were added to the pledge.

"A flourishing Sabbath-school has been under way for some three or four weeks, in which I have a Bible-class of some twelve or fifteen young men and women. The whole enterprise promises great good, to say nothing of what it has already done for the observance of the Sabbath in this community. Upwards of sixteen dollars were raised at once for the purchase of books for the school.

"I think the period when the organization of a church may be effected here is not distant. There are probably not less than ten or twelve who are ready for the movement. How many others may be brought in, I am unable now to state, but there are those in our midst whose confidence and sympathy we have—some of them have been connected with the Methodist church in other parts."

NEW-MEXICO.

SANTA FE, N. M....REV. W. G. KEPHART.

The reports received from this mission during the year have been less encouraging than the Committee had anticipated. Early in the year, Mr. Kephart wrote that in his estimation the door for Protestant missionaries in New-Mexico was hardly yet open, and that he regarded the Indians as furnishing far the most promising field of labor. In this opinion he supposed that all his brethren in the other missions concurred. With the consent of the Executive Committee, Mr. Kephart returned to the States in March last, and made to the Committee a written statement in relation to New-Mexico as a field for Protestant missions. From this statement we make the following extracts:

"1. The prevailing religion.—Your Committee are already aware that there is little else known in the territory than Roman Catholicism. Of those who make a profession of religion at all, in a population of sixty thousand souls, I believe there are not more than twenty-five Protestants in the whole territory.—There are, besides these, some who have once been members of Protestant churches elsewhere, but who have fallen back to the world. The native population, consisting of Mexicans and Pueblo Indians (not estimating the wild Indians) are, without a single exception, Catholics.

"For a number of years, the Church of both Old and New-Mexico held no connection with the head at Rome, and did not acknowledge the authority of the Pope. Within a few years past, they have been received back again into the bosom and communion of the universal papacy. I must, however, in justice say, that in New-Mexico they have not learned the full lesson of bigotry and intolerance toward other denominations, that so universally characterizes that Church.

"2. Character of their religious teachers.—The native priesthood, both of Old and New-Mexico, are among the worst of men that depravity could well desire. There is no species of vice that does not receive their patronage. Drunkenness, gambling, libertinism, lying and extortion, are things with which they are as familiar as with their 'Ave Marias,' and in which they find a great deal more pleasure. This is not an overdrawn picture; indeed, it falls short of the reality as seen amongst

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT. us. In thus speaking, I except, however, the bishop and those who came out with him from the States. Against them I would not charge these excesses, much as I differ with them in regard to other parts of their policy.

"3. The character of the people.—When it is remembered that those people have for centuries been ground into the dust-by the worst forms of civil as well as ecclesiastical oppression, that all their physical energies have been taxed to their utmost to meet the heavy exactions of both Church and State, that they have been held in the thradom of the darkest ignorance by their civil and ecclesiastical rulers, lest with the rays of dawning light they should become restive under their yoke, and cast it from them—it is hardly needful to ask, 'what is the character of such a peo-

"Long oppression of this kind naturally tends to make a people indolent, treacherous toward their rulers and toward one another, and vicious in the last degree.

And such, to a great extent, is the character of the Mexican population. Let us do them the justice to say, that they are not worse than any other people would be, placed for the same length of time in the same circumstances.

"They have lived so long in the deep night of their great ignorance, that it will take time to accustom them to the light of even a newly rising sun. They have been so long accustomed to see vice in its most revolting forms patronized and practhed by their religious teachers, that it will be long before they can be made to understand the intrinsic difference between vice and virtue.

"And yet if any one supposes that the Mexican people have no good traits of character, he is much mistaken. To me it has seemed wonderful that, amid the wreck of all that tends to elevate, expand, and purify the soul, they should have retained some traits of character which Americans could profitably imitate, and should have kept themselves free from some vices in which it has been our unenviable reputation to have been their first teachers.

"4. State of learning, prospects of success for schools, &c. —I believe the census taken in 1849-50 showed about one in every hundred, or about six hundred in the whole territory, able to read. Of this number, there are but few passable scholars, and still fewer, indeed very few, educated mev. A few of the more intelligent and influential, however, are flow waking up to the subject, and making some movement in advance. But the people are in the deepest poverty, and the masses cannot educate, if they would, unless they can get free schools.

"5. The American population.-That much has been lost to the cause of a sound morality, and many obstacles thrown in the way of those who would do good, by the example of the American and foreign population, there can be no question. Very few of these, who have come to the territory, have been members of any church, or professors of any religion; and some who have been even ministers of the gospel have fallen into sin and rebuke."

"The power of the priestheod over the people, in checking the spirit of inquiry. forbidding free investigation, and confining the people to that limited compass of thought that has the rituals of the Church for its widest latitude, must ever serve to keep them in comparatively abject ignorance, till that power can be broken.

"6. The most effectual means for reaching and improving the condition of the people.-Upon this point, I will say briefly that the best, spediest, and most effective mode, at present, is through the media of the school and the press. A system of colportage and personal preaching would be a most effective instrumentality, I believe, provided the men engaged in the work understood the Spanish language well enough to converse freely with the people.

"7. Cost of sustaining a mission.—A mission family cannot be sustained at Santa-Fe, and perhaps at any other point if he is wholly dependent upon a Society for support, for a sum less than $1200 per annum. With this he could probably cover also his incidental expenses of travelling (within the territory) during the year."

Mr. Kephart thinks that a printing-press for the publication of religious truth, is almost if not quite essential to the prosperity of a mission, and that this could not be vigorously operated at a less expense than $1500 per annum. He also expressed the "painful apprehension," that the funds of the Association could be appropriated in other ways which would result in more good to the world.

After mature deliberation, the Executive Committee resolved to suspend their efforts in that direction for the present, and Mr. K. has been released from his connection with the Society.

Although acquiescing in this result, Mr. Kephart says:

"I cannot reconcile myself to the conclusion that Providence intends you to abandon that field. I shall yet make an appeal to the people of the United States in its behalf. I cannot relinquish the hope that some Christian anti-slavery men may be found willing to stand in the breach between New-Mexico and the slave power."

Mr. K. proposes to publish a work on the subject of slavery, peonage, &c., as it exists in New-Mexico, in which, we suppose, he will expose the efforts of some of the officers of government to introduce slavery into that territory.

CALIFORNIA.

In accordance with a vote passed at the last Annual Meeting, the Executive Committee have established a mission in California for the Chinese and other foreigners in that State. Rev. S. V. Blakeslee and wife sailed from New-York for this mission in December 1852, and arrived at San Francisco early in January. Mr. Blakeslee is a graduate of the Western Reserve College and Theological Seminary, has had some experience as a pastor in the Western States, and before his appointment had resided more than a year in California,

The field of labor upon which we thus enter combines the advantages and the responsibilities of both Home and Foreign Missions. Many of these people will make California their home, and will thus become incorporated with the American people, and exert an influence for weal or for woe on our Government and nation. Others of them, numbered by thousands, will return to their native country, after an education of from five to ten years under American institutions and American influences, to carry back with them whatever of good or evil they have learned here. In this view of the case, the enterprise may justly be ranked among the more important foreign missionary operations. It should be so regarded by the friends of Christ, and be supplied with laborers having correct views of the gospel, and of civil government, and of the paramount claims of humanity and religion, above mere human institutions and enactments.

Viewed as a preparatory means for the future conversion of China, the facilities thus offered to us are very promising. . The immigrant, relieved from the crushing weight of governmental and religious oppression, as he lands upon our shores, is struck with the vast superiority of the American people as a class, and is thus stripped of a large portion of his prejudices. It is said that the more intelligent and reflecting of them attribute this superiority in part to the Bible and the religious institutions of the country. They are thus prepared to listen to the instructions of that Bible, and inquire after the peculiarities of those institutions. Every motive of worldly advancement leads them to desire the acquisition of our language and become acquainted with our peculiarities. This prepares the way for the approach of the religious teacher, and gives him access to the intelligence and the conscience of the immigrant. Thus God, in his providence, is breaking down the barriers in the way of our entrance into China, and has annihilated the greatest obstacles which have hitherto hindered our labors for the conversion of her people.

Mr. B-has prepared a small vocabulary for use. He says:

"It was necessary to do the whole by hand, printing each line separately, and then carefully copying the Chinese characters; and finally to get the whole lithographed; then go over the whole again on the stone, carefully scraping and correcting letter after letter for days; the whole being about the most fatiguing of any work I ever attempted. After four weeks toil, the book is to-day finished, and I send you a copy. I know it is a very imperfect thing, but no other person would do any thing of the kind to aid these interesting heathen in acquiring a knowledge of our language, so I determined to risk reputation and the loss of time in the effort. I seemed providentially supplied with five Chinese books, prepared to aid an Englishman in learning the Chinese tongue, from which I have prepared this little one to aid them in learning ours. I have written it, as you see, in the new characters. I did it not only because my own judgment was decidedly in its favor, but because of the advice of other and good men, as Mr. Nevins, the Superintendent of Common Schools here; also Mr. Day, of Brooklyn, son of President Day, who remarked to me that there was nothing which could reach the foreigners here except the Phonetic system. Our common pronunciation is almost as impossible for them to master without continued assistance as is theirs for us; hence they do not and will not, except in rare cases, do it. But in the new characters, with only a few weeks' assistance, they can go on themselves to the mastery of our own pronunciation; they will then comparatively easily learn the meaning of our words, and thus master the language itself. Yet I would not speak too confidently until I have made the experiment and know the result. The Spaniards do learn this character in eight or ten lessons, so as to pronounce better than those who have studied the common charac-

He has also completed a second Chinese book under nearly the same disadvantages as the first. He hopes they may aid greatly in the acquisition of our language and of Christian ideas by the Chinese in our country. Concerning these people he saws:

"The Chinese have strong minds, are studious, active, and enterprising. There are about 4,000 of them residing in San Francisco. One large street for a considerable distance, nearly in the heart of the city, is occupied exclusively by them, while their separate establishments are scattered through all parts. They are said to be clannish, but I believe it to be mainly from the force of circumstances. As they cannot speak our language, and are withat very different from us in their habits and manners, they are almost excluded from intercourse with Americans. They are also a people of lively social feelings; and until the Americans kindly take them, teach them our language, instruct them in our ways, draw them to adopt our views, to imbibe the genius and spirit of our people, and, above all, to love the same Sa-viour and rejoice in the knowledge of the truths of the same God, they will, they must be clannish. When they do this, I believe the Chinaman will in no way, except in physical stature, be inferior to the Anglo-Saxon. The day, I believe, will come when the Chinaman, as the right-hand companion of the American, will stand shoulder to shoulder with him in every good cause. But this is to be brought about by the providence and grace of God sanctifying and giving efficiency to the labors of the missionaries of the Orose, and the influence of this country for the good, the spiritual, eternal good of the many thousands of that vast empire who are pressing to these shores. At the Custom-House and Naval-Office I was told that probably 4,000 Chinese had come into the country since December. I believe this is a large estimate, but they are coming again in great numbers. There is not more prejudice against them than against other foreigners, unless, as they are an industrious class of people and are willing to labor for small wages, they come more into competition with American laborers, and thus are more liable to meet with opposition."

There is an increasing interest being felt in San Francisco in all which respects the Chinese. Mr. B. writes:

"I rejoice that I am here among them to labor for their elevation and their spiritual good in Christ Jesus, our and their only Redeemer. It is a great, difficult, and most responsible work; but I trust that, aided by your prayers and the prayers of the churches of Christ, I may have grace to do my duty, and God will order the result according to his own eternal and infinitely wise counsel."

The providences of God seem to be providing for the permanent residence of large masses of these people within our territory. Some of them have already become citizens of the United States, or declared their intention of doing so, and their near neighbors say they have shown themselves to be men, and on many public occasions have appeared to great advantage. Every possible inducement to either Home or Foreign missionary labor combines to make this department of effort important. Whether, as the result of the present very extraordinary movement in China, a large portion of the 40,000 Chinese in California shall be called home to their native land, or be compelled to cast their lot for life among us, is as yet very uncertain. In the one case we should use the opportunity given to us to prepare them to take back in their hands, and in their hearts, the gospel of Christ for the salvation of their countrymen; and in the other to make them partakers of that same gospel, that their advent among us may prove to be a blessing not only to themselves, but to us and the world. God seems to have placed them within reach of our sanctuaries, and under the sound of our voices, and to be calling upon us to use the instrumentalities of his appointment for their conversion. Our responsibilities are thus increased in the ratio of our improved facilities for labor. May the favorable results of that labor show a corresponding increase!

The labors of our missionary there are self-denying ones. The whole appropriation to the Mission for the first year, including twenty-five hundred dollars expended for a building, is a thousand dollars less than some individual ministers of the gospel are receiving for their labors in the same city; yet the Executive Committee made as large an appropriation as the income of the Association would allow of.

MISSION IN EGYPT.

The attention of Christians has been drawn to this land of antiquity by a letter from the Rev. Mr. Thompson, of the Tabernacle Church, New-York, giving an account of his travels among the Copts, in company with Rev. Professor Upham, of Maine, and recommending the establishment of a mission among them. This letter, in manuscript, was early placed in the hands of our Secretaries by one of the brethren of the Tabernacle Church and a member of our Committee. The Executive Committee deeming themselves called upon by Providence to examine the subject of the establishment of this mission have done so, and have decided to appoint missionaries to this interesting and important field.

Copious extracts from Mr. Thompson's letter have been published in the American Missionary, and will be given in this Report. They cannot fail to interest all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and who desire to be workers with him in the redemption of the world.

Rev. Charles F. Martin, a recent graduate of the Union Theological Seminary, now under appointment as a missionary of the Association, has had his attention turned to this field, and is ready to enter it, under the direction of the Executive Committee, whenever the proper time for doing so shall arrive.

Mr. Thompson states that the gospel was introduced into Egypt in the time of the apostles. Some of those who witnessed the miraculous manifestations of the Spirit, and heard the gospel on the day of Pentecost, were dwellers in Egypt, or Coptic Jews, who came up from Alexandria and other parts of Egypt to the great yearly festival at Jerusalem. No doubt some who were converted then, on returning, preached the gospel. The Ethiopian eunuch would not have failed to report the gospel of salvation after his conversion and baptism by Philip.

In the first century Egypt began to stretch forth her hands to God, and the early persecutions of her Christians, and especially under Diocletian, produced many martyrs and true witnesses for Christ there.

In the reign of Constantine the Great, the Christian religion was established in Egypt, as it was throughout the Roman Empire, and perhaps with less superstition than elsewhere.

We must content ourselves with a few extracts from Mr. T.'s letter:

"Christianity, though decayed and withered in the land of Egypt, is not yet extinct. It is an interesting and most significant fact, that, notwithstanding the persecutions they have endured from Pagan emperors and from Mohanmedan kings, nearly all the original stock of the country that remain at this day are nominal Christians. These are known as Copts, and they claim to have preserved intact the blood of the ancient Egyptians through all the changes of their country: a claim not without reason, since neither the Persians, the Greeks, nor the Romans supplanted the original inhabitants of the country, and since religious prejudices have been a barrier to the intermarriage of Mohanmedans and Christians. The Arab tradition is, that Copt was a son of Mizraim, the second son of Ham, who built Egypt; and that, having wrested from his brothers their share of the patrimony, he gave his name to the whole country. The Arabs now call a Copt Guypte, and Copts Guyptei, from which Egypt and Egyptians are easily derived. Though speaking the Arabic, the Copts also retain their original language, which has marked affinities with the Hebrew, and with the whole Shemitic family. Thus the Zoan of the Scriptures, called Tanis by the Greeks, and San or Zan by the Arabs, is called Gasis by the Copts; the Ham or Khem of the Hebrew Scriptures is Chem in the Coptic; the ancient Syens of the Scriptures, was very early made in this language, manuscript copies of which I have seen in the Coptic convents and churches.

"In their ecclesiastical organization, in their doctrinal belief, and in their church usages and mode of worship, the Copts have departed far less from the New Testament than have the Roman Catholics. The government of the Coptic Church is Episcopal. Its head is a Patriarch, who is elected from among the fathers of one of the principal monasteries, and who now resides at Cairo. In this respect the Coptic Church corresponds with the Greek, Armenian, Nestorian, and other Oriental Churches, which have never acknowledged the supremacy of the Pope. The Abyssinian branch of the Coptic Church is under the superintendence of a Mutran, who is now the only dignitary of that name, and who at his death is succeeded by another from Cairo, appointed by the Patriarch, and sent in chains to his see, in token of his dependence upon the head of the Church."

The Copts every where give the impression of superiority in agriculture, in trade, and in letters. In short, where business tact and enterprise are required, and where business thrift is evidenced, the difference between the Copts and their Moslem neighbors is as striking as between the Protestant and the Roman Catholic countries of Europe. The Copts are even now the best race on the soil of Egypt.

Here is a description in part of a meeting with the Copts:

"As we approached Megadeh, a principal town of the Copts, in the vicinity of Thebes, Prof. Upham and myself determined to pay our respects to these nominally Christian brethren. Taking the dragoman with us, we sought their church. As soon as our object was known, a number of very respectable men wearing the dark turban gathered about us, and conducted us in a body to their house of worship. It was a large square brick building, with a low doorway, and a row of brick pillars in the centre. Between the middle pillars was a screen, and behind this a rude wooden pulpit and a reading-desk, with a small vestry in the rear where the priest robes himself, which is also covered with a screen. There were no seats in the house, but mats were spread upon the floor, on which the worshippers sit in Oriental fashion. Chairs were brought for us, however, and the whole company sat or stood around us in a circle on the floor. Directly before us was one who seemed to be the principal man of the party, and who took the lead in the conversation; but several of them had most intelligent countenances, and heads as finely developed as any portrayed in the phrenological charts. We told them who we were and where we came from; but they did not seem to have any definite ideas of America until a rude map was drawn upon the ground. We informed them of the number and the character of our churches, and of their missionary operations, and especially of their sympathy for such as maintained pure religion in lands of darkness, and had suffered for Christ's sake and the gospel's. I inquired for a Bible, and they produced a written copy of the Psalms, and a Bible printed at Malta, with the Coptic and the Arabic in parallel columns. In exchange I showed them a Bible with Oriental illustrations and maps, with which they were highly pleased. They also produced a copy of their liturgy in Coptic and Arabic. Seeing some rude pictures on the walls, executed in a style like the coarsest colored lithographs, I inquired whom these represented. They answered, the angels Gabriel and Michael, and the Virgin Mary; but they assured us they did not pray to them, nor in any sense worship them, but prayed to God through Christ alone. In answer to an inquiry whether they prayed for the dead, they showed the form of prayer used in the burial service, but said that they did not pray for the dead, nor to the saints. There was no altar with candles, nor any other marks of superstition, such as are seen in Roman Catholic churches-only those few pictures. They pray in their families, and have schools for their children. They are careful in the observance of the Sabbath; and though they have another larger house of worship-which they afterwards showed us—they have not room enough for their congregation, there being some 2,500 Copts in the town. The women sit in the churches in a screened gallery, apart by themselves. The Copts do not allow of bigamy, and they assured us that they are not loose in the matter of divorce, of which they have been accused by emissaries of the Roman Catholic Church and by their Puseyite coadjutors in the Church of England. They had already received donations of Bibles and Testaments from the British and Foreign Bible Society, but said they would be thankful to receive from us any Bibles and tracts that we might send them after our return, with a view to which we exchanged addresses, which a scribe with his inkhorn wrote very neatly upon such scraps of paper as were at hand. They did not complain of any oppression from the Government in matters of religion, but thought they were compelled to furnish more than their quota for the army; and with the vague notion of European influence which all Egyptians seem to have, they requested us to interfere for them through the Consul at Cairo. We spoke to them of the love of Christ dwelling in the heart, of our love for them, and our desire to know them and to do them good. They said they would be happy to have missionaries from America visit them and dwell among them. Coffee was then served after the manner of the East, hot, strong, without sugar or milk, in tiny cups of china poised in egg-shaped brass holders; and leaving a donation to the church, we rose to depart. But we were not suffered to go alone. Our whole audience of fifty persons, with accessions on the way, accompanied us to the river; and while for nearly an hour we awaited the arrival of the boat, they lingered around, learning to pronounce our names, and in every possible way expressing their gratification at our visit. The whole interview had been one of the utmost cordiality on their part, and they were evidently reluctant to have it closed. We were upon the whole quite favorably impressed with their appearance. I do not doubt that there are sincere Christians among them. As a body, however, they have fallen into a formal Christianity, and they need more discriminating and practical views of the gospel. They are simple-hearted, and ready to listen to the truth. Indeed, I should infer that vital religion has been somewhat revived among them by the distribution of the Bible.

"I cannot doubt that they have been so long preserved a separate people, as tenacious as the Jews of their language and their religion, because of some special design of Providence for the revival of Christianity through them in Egypt and in Ethiopia, and the evangelization of the vast interior of Africa. And I deem it of the utmost importance that a mission of inquiry should be sent to Egypt by Christians in the United States, to visit the Copts wherever they can be found, to gather facts respecting their condition, to acquaint them with the condition of the Ameri can churches, to revive in their minds the primitive truths of the gospel and the spirit of the primitive Christians, to introduce among them religious hooks and tracts, and to encourage family religion and Christian education, and thus to prepare the way for such a permanent mission among these Copts as has been instituted among the Armenians and the Nestorians, and has there been so signally blessed of God. Such a mission should consist of at least two persons, well versed in church history and institutions, as well as in the Scriptures, affable and discreet, shrewd and discriminating, single-hearted and simple-hearted in their devotion to Christ and his cause. One of them certainly should be able to speak Arabic fluently, and one of them should have a knowledge of medicine, and especially of the treatment of dysentery and ophthalmia, the prevailing diseases of Egypt.'

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Mr. Thompson suggests that a mission should be sent to Egypt, for the purpose of exploration; but remarks: "I am inclined to think that the way is open without further exploration. And were it not for my responsibilities as a father, now twofold increased, I would waive all other obligations, study the Arabic language, and enter upon the work I am commending so strongly to others. Did circumstances favor, my older and wiser companion would not be behind me in his zeal." He then calls upon brethren to unite with him in a thank-offering to be rendered in that distant land. He says:

"Let its form be the voluntary support of a missionary in Egypt. The sum of five hundred dollars a year will suffice for this after the first year of exploration, and of this I will give one tenth. Either the American Board, or the American Missionary Association, or the Christian Union, in all of which you have confidence, would probably designate a missionary to this field if his support were pledged. But if no Society will undertake the work, then do you undertake it, and let Dr. Robinson, and Dr. Cheever, and others, who have been in Egypt, guide you in the selection of the agent. Not for my sake do I make this plea, but for Christ's sake and the gospel's, for the sake of his professed people in this land, for the sake of the souls around me that are ready to perish. Shall not this land, where Abraham sojourned and where Jacob died, where Joseph was exalted and where Moses was born and nurtured-this land that gave a refuge to the infant Jesus from the wrath of Herod, and that in after years was itself baptized with the blood of the saintsshall not this land bail the day when 'the Lord shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the Lord whom the Lord of Hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people '?" (Isniah xix, 21-25.)

Another missionary should be appointed to go out with Mr. Martin, and the Executive Committee hope that some other church, whom God has blessed with the ability, will undertake his support,

AUXILIARIES.

THE PENOBSCOT COUNTY MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION

Held its sixth annual meeting at Bangor, Feb. 23, 1853. The receipts of the Society for the year reported showed an increase of 100 per cent, over those of any previous year. The report of the Treasurer urges increased effort in behalf of the parent Society. It expresses the hope that legacies may hereafter be of frequent occurrence, and calls upon all "to do with their might what their hands find to do." The Treasurer of this Society is James Allen, Bangor, Maine.

THE WESTERN HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

An arrangement has been made with the Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association, by which it renews its auxiliary relationship to the A. M. A., and the two bodies are now in a situation to strengthen and encourage each other. The report of the receipts of that auxiliary were received too late to be audited in the Treasurer's account; hence they do not appear in detail in the report. The amount

The number of missionaries commissioned by it during the year was 27, of whom 22 remained at the close of the year. Of the whole number, 18 were in Ohio, 3 in Illinois, 1 in Indiana, 1 in Michigan, 1 in Wisconsin, 1 in Iowa, 1 in Minnesota Territory, and 1 in Pennsylvania.

The W. H. & F. M. A. will devote its energies to the prosecution of the work of Home Missions in W. Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Southern Illinois; and in those States will commission missionaries, employ agents and collect funds; and will pay over to the treasury of the parent Society any surplus of funds that it may receive beyond that which may be needed for the supply of its own wants in the home

Agents from the parent Society for the collection of funds for Foreign Missions will be welcomed to every part of that field once every year; and all the money paid in to either Society for the work of Foreign Missions will be expended under the direction of the Executive Committee of the A. M. Association. By this division of labor the Western Society can expend its energies in exploring and cultivating its own field, searching out feeble churches that need support, providing for them a faithful ministry, and securing in their behalf the material aid of their more highly favored Christian brethren and sisters. It will also endeavor to lay the claims of its field before every Christian within its bounds, and give each the opportunity of contributing to sustain the effort. For a time at least, it will need the sympathy and aid of Eastern Christians; but it is hoped that it will not be many years before it will have the ability to sustain its own feeble churches, and contribute freely to aid others still more needy. Until that time it will look to our Association for aid.

Rev. A. Benton is Corresponding Secretary, and T. B. Mason Treasurer of the Society.

THE N. W. H. M. ASSOCIATION.

Rev. E. Goodman, Chicago, Corresponding Secretary; has also become auxiliary to the A. M. Association, and will prosecute its work in the N. W. States and Territories. Its receipts during the last year, aside from the amount received through our Association, were $2,209.67, and the number of Home Missionaries aided by it was sixteen. The arrangements made with the two last-named Societies will doubtless greatly increase the number of Home Missienaries who will connect themselves with us.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

Sixteen thousand copies of this paper have been printed and sent out monthly to donors to the Society's treasury, and to persons recommended by them. Besides intelligence from our missions, it has contained occasional articles, giving information concerning the principles of the Association, and has thus been a valuable agency in increasing the number of our friends, and in enlarging our receipts. We shall therefore continue to send it to all who express a wish to receive it, hoping that thereby we shall promote the best interests of the cause.

CONCLUSION.

THE extent of our territory, the amount of our population and its rapid increase ; the variety of races, religion, language and education; the conflicting character of the free and despotic institutions and laws of the country; the immeasurable wrongs of one portion of our population at the hands of the other; the apologies for slavery by leading men in the Church and ministry, notwithstanding its inhumanity, and its denial of education and the Bible to its victims; the consequent contempt for religion, and the boldness of infidelity, unitedly call the friends of God and man vigorously to prosecute, on the basis of the pure and free gospel of Christ, the Home Missionary enterprise.

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

It is not our purpose to discuss the relative importance of foreign and home missions. Neither can be magnified beyond its own merits, nor is there the least danger of injury to one by the hearty support of the other. The world, as a field, gives breadth to our view, commanding us to a work so vast as to stir within us all the elements of life and effort. No romantic notion, however, of the early conversion of the world, as such, without individualizing and establishing numerous missions among the nations and people, will be realized.

Home Missions are but a part of the whole, having important bearings upon the entire world. The character of our Christianity at home will determine it abroad. so far as we propagate it; and the question whether we shall succeed with our Foreign Missions depends under God, upon the cultivation of a pure Christianity at home, and much also upon the evangelization of the masses by Home Missions.

The ground taken by this Association against slavery, caste, and other sinsagainst fellowshiping slaveholders and their apologists, has been opposed by every method and with singular reasons given. We shall here consider but one of them, as the subject is discussed elsewhere in this Report.

It is said as a justification for holding relations to slaveholding churches and societies for the propagation of the gospel, and cooperating with them, that "Everything which is human is imperfect," forgetting that the imperfection plead is moral, and that sustaining such a crime as slaveholding, directly or indirectly, is a sin of great magnitude. As disease worketh death in the body, so moral evil, though imagined to be slight works death to the soul, and ultimately to the cause of benevolence, however zealous in the support of its object its individual or associated advocates may be. Who would plead the indulgence of disease for the health of the body, and why the allowance of moral evil in the cause of truth and salvation! "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

The philosophy of Christianity commends itself to reason. The object being not only deliverance from the curse of the law, but holiness-it cannot be secured by sin, nor benevolence by selfishness: therefore, Christianity must not allow sin, but unconscious of any other danger, must jealously guard against sin as the only enemy. "Who can harm you if ye be followers of that which is good?" The friends of the gospel rejoice in the real divinity and consequent utility of Christianity.

We will not stop here to argue the sinfulness of slaveholding, a crime most terrible among men, and full of rebellion against God, but would simply ask of those who do admit it to be sinful, to treat it as such, working nothing but death. Under whatever guise it may come up, it will be seen by the good only to be shunned and execrated. It cannot be plead that benevolence requires us to unite in fellowship with slaveholders on the principle that we should visit the sick to do them good. The analogy is not true unless it be required that the visitor partake of the infection in order to heal the infected; of insanity, to make mad men sane. Would not such moral reasoning be called madness? The true physician aims to remove the virus from the blood, and the surgeon probes an ulcer to save the patient, though the evil may be near to the heart. Practitioners in morals and true religion know how useless are all expedients to unite good and evil, and choose to obey the injunctions, "Depart from evil, and do good:" "Abhor that which is evil:" "Avoid the appearance of evil."

Whatever may be promised from "another gospel," nothing can be hoped for from the gospel of Christ and its faithful application, but its legitimate results: salvation, with holiness unto the Lord. The friends of Temperance have discovered the truth of our principle, and only expect success in the way of total abstinence.

Any other principle would subvert what has been regarded necessary to salvation in the preaching of the gospel. Men are told that they must repent of all sin, must now repent, and that conscious allowance of sin, or encouragement of others in sin, is fatal to the Christian character and to the propagation of Christianity. They have been told this without qualification, and rightly too. Can then any sin present valid claims to forbearance, whether private or public?

Whatever system prevents the propagation of the gospel of Christ is sinful, and to be feared.

Slavery and popery stand prominent in the way of the evangelization of our country. In both, the Sabbath, that great preservator of a people and sign of God's presence, is systematically desecrated; and education, whether intellectual or moral, is prevented in the masses. Neither the confessional, penance, or fasts in the one case, nor whips and manacles in the other, can prevent the development of evil passions and brutal character. A priesthood leading the poor victims of superstition by artifice and deceit, and slaveholding which rules by brute force, are essential evil in themselves, and death to individual and national virtue and prosperity. From these systems, Home Missions meet the most formidable opposition; more merked and effective than that of infidelity. The one burns the Protestant Bible, and the other by law prevents its use, by entirely denying education and books to the slaves. Slavery and popery practically promote licentiousness and intemperance. No one can estimate the amount of injury inflicted upon the country by intemperance. Popery furnishes a large proportion of the drunkards, and of the miserable men who traffic in intoxicating liquors, demoralizing, impoverishing, and destroying the people. Infidelity has not the element of power that slavery or Romanism possesses, from the fact that it is a negative thing, and never has in itself the advantage of being a system. It must, if it would have this advantage, connect itself with socialism, or something which professes a good object.

Whatever does violence to public virtue and debauches and hardens the heart, is to be dreaded; especially when government becomes the actor. Thus the government of this country, by its violation of treaties with the Indians, and their expulsion; its dismemberment of Texas, and war of conquest and robbery with Mexico; and its crowning outrage upon humanity in the Fugitive-Slave Bill, has corrupted and demoralized multitudes, given to the spirit of violence new life, and marked the period of our history with shame and national barbarity. That we are not altogether a base nation is not owing to the want of example and authority from "the powers that be." The influence of humanity, and of the Christian sentiment yet alive in many, has kept us from being as Sodom and Gomorrah. The example and influence of the government has been marked with the desecration of the Sabbath. What if the religious teachers were to apologize for the government and excuse this violation of the divine law, as many have done, apologizing for its support of slavery, and by teaching respect for the government, while it enforces the Fugitive-Slave Bill-what chance would there be for the Sabbath and for God's law in this country ?

The haste for riches, the spirit of adventure, the worship of mammon has made the work of the missionaries difficult. They find this spirit as rife at the West, and in all new parts of this country, as in the old States, or even the Atlantic cities. The struggle for the ordinary comforts of life; the temptation to secure more land than is necessary to cultivate, and for speculation, nothing can regulate or control but the gospel and a faithful ministry, with the aid of the divine Spirit.

The emigrating tendency of the people retards the progress of the missionaries. In some instances, as they just begin to secure strength, numbers of the people pluck up and remove still further west, where they suppose their comfort or desire for wealth will be more fully met.

The missionaries must ery aloud, and show the people their idolatry and all their sin. They must waken the few friends of God in every neighborhood to salvation. They must gather churches and Sabbath-schools, visit from house to house, and labor day and night to bring men to repentance. This must be done in the face of infidelity, with its scoffs and sneers; the hatred of formalists and every species of errorists, and of many who are orthodox in creed, but infidel to humanity. They are not unfrequently called to weep over those who once flourished as professors of religion in the older States, but who have backslidden; and over some who have entirely apostatized from the faith and are found among the vilifiers of the Cross.

In the slave States they should preach a free and whole gospel in the presence of their enemies, and of threatened violence in some instances, and establish non-slaveholding churches in their midst, distributing anti-slavery tracts to the slaveholders, and giving the Bible to the slaves. The missionary, though opposed by rumsellers, interested politicians, bold singers and hypocrites, should enter with all his heart into the cause of temperance and other moral reforms.

He must take the lead in all educational enterprises, and see that the fountains of knowledge are kept pure, and everywhere open to all classes, and to both sexes. The missionary must be a man of progress. Everything about him is advancing in some direction, and he, to be true to Christ and to his generation, of all men must not stend still.

In new countries the life of a missionary is not only one of effort, but sometimes of exposure and danger; often he must travel many miles in cold and storms, and not unfrequently over swelling streams in times of freshet; often too from sickness personal, or in his family, with but scanty means, some one suffers or falls in death through the want of the necessary medical aid or care. He looks upward unto Jesus and presses on. The Lord owns such, and often pours out his Spirit on them and the people; a harvest of souls is gathered to Christ, and foundations are laid for generations to come. The struggling people, though at much sacrifice, with the encouragement of the missionary and his constant influence, succeed in erecting a house for the worship of God. School-houses and colleges rise up at their hands, and the wilderness blossoms as the rose. Wisdom as well as piety led our fathers to organize the early Home Missionary Society of Connecticut, and those of other States. What would the West now be if this Christian effort had not been made ? and what shall we soon be if Home Missions are not increased, and pursued with greater vigor than heretofore? How can the pious of New-England and other States meet the wants of their brethren who have gone out from them; or of the perishing millions from all countries who are rushing to our shores? How shall the reign of despotism or anarchy be prevented if the pure gospel of Christ is not made free to all, and pressed upon the entire people?

The revivals of religion within the present year in the missionary churches are grounds of encouragement. Though the Church looks mostly to the young, who are mainly our hope, it is a gratifying fact that in many of the revivals reported, a large proportion of the converts have been heads of families, in the midst of life, with all its responsibilities and influence.

At the West the anti-slavery spirit has more life and power than at the East, and except in some dark districts, which, settled mainly from the slave States, hold on to old prejudices, and oppress the free people of color, it speaks out in manly tones unshackled by the fear of hoary conservatism.

The missionaries of this Association, ever protesting against all cruel laws and usages affecting the slaves, the fleeing fugitives, and the free colored people, will plead for justice in their behalf, for all personal and civil rights, and for equal advantages in education and the arts.

The people of color have a higher destiny fast developing and important to us; nor can their moral and political influence be despised. Their efforts for improvements, and in the cause of temperance and religion—their support of hundreds of churches and ministers, entitle them to great respect and affection. Numbering, as they do, half a million of souls, they should be assisted by missions. In our cities where so many, especially the youth, are exposed to peculiar temptation, in their unpropitious circumstances, the friends of God and of humanity should, throw around them the means of protection, and seek to lead them to Christ.

The encouragements to prosecute Home Missions on a vast scale are multiplying, and the Church is giving indications of a purpose to meet the call which the providence and the Spirit of God makes upon her. The efforts of the different denominations to aid feeble churches in erecting houses for the worship of God, except, so far as it may be connected with a spirit of sectarian rivalry for church-extension, to the neglect of the weighty matters of the law and true spiritual life, is a sign of promise, and should be greatly increased.

Although it is the policy of the Association mainly to employ missionaries in connection with their partial support by the churches, it will aid evangelists in sections where the population is sparse. We have regretted, as have many others, the almost entire suppression of the labors of evangelists among the churches. Some pastors whose fears were excited some years since would, we believe, now welcome devoted evangelists to aid them in the promotion of revivals of true religion.

Just alarm has been given in view of the fact that so few young men are preparing for the Gospel ministry. Where shall we look soon for the ministers of reconciliation? We must cry to God for the outpouring of His Spirit in our Sabbathschools and Bible-classes. Parents, teachers and ministers must lead pious and promising youth to contemplate and desire this great work. Our missionaries will labor to effect this important object, and in every church seek out the true subjects, and secure the aid which they may require.

Being themselves necessarily examples of self-denial, they will feel the importance of counteracting, as far as possible, the covetousness as well as the wastefulness of the people, and excite, in every way possible, in the old and young, a spirit of benevolence, and also the cultivation of liberality and large-heartedness; stimulating the churches to early self-reliance for the support of their ministers, and to extraordinary efforts to extend the blessings of salvation to the world.

It is a striking mark of the religion of Christ that "to the poor the Gospel is preached," and it is scarcely less so that the stranger is to know its power and share its blessings. However much, therefore, there may be to excite apprehension from the influence of foreigners of false religion, and of many who have never been taught to revere the Sabbath; and of the many who traffic in strong drink; we have occasion to bless God for not a few of his saints among this population who prize the Gospel, and who use it for the enlightenment and salvation of all.

If, indeed, we are led to the alternative that the multitudes from foreign lands will destroy our institutions and hopes, unless through love to them we become the instruments of their repentance and salvation, there should be no lack o effort for their good, and for the glory of Christ in their conversion.

The philanthropist and the Christian, as he casts his eye upon Europe and witnesses the rigor of despots, their subtle diplomacy or bloody hand, as the struggling and convulsed masses at intervals utter their cries, with imprecations and anathemas, and gathering blackness, threaten to work out their own redemption; and sees already a quarter of a million annually leaving the old world to find a refuge in our country, may learn what is to come. When also, China with her three hundred and fifty millions is being revolutionized, and tens of thousands of her subjects are settling in this land, we should start as at the sound of the trumpet and the tramping of a host, and arise to welcome them with the weapons of truth, and in the garments of salvation.

The larger proportion of the multitudes coming from Europe are Germans, mostly Roman Catholics, Rationalists, Infidels, and Atheists. Perhaps, however, a quarter of them profess evangelical faith, many pant for the Gospel, and thank God for the Home Missionary. They are nearly all readers, love books, and can therefore be reached through the press and by those who can preach in their own language the Gospel of Christ. The institutions of learning and theology in existence among the Germans in this country, and their great number of evangelical churches, encourage us, while there is everything in the entire people to awaken solicitude and feeling in their behalf. They are generally lovers of liberty, and will do much for the overthrow of slavery. They will be a strong element in this nation, and the Church must do all that is possible to secure them to Christ. He will, we hope, yet "make one new man"* of all the peoples concentrating in this nation, combining the physical and mental powers of all—their arts and sciences—enlightening them by His word and Spirit, and giving to all the spirit of miversal brotherhood.

It becomes the friends of God and of than to look to God, and to act in hope, assured that no power of caste or oppression can defeat this glorious consummation. What a mighty and a blessed people we may be if Christianity shall indeed triumph! A new world indeed, and prepared to regenerate the old! This glorious result is to be secured by the Gospel and by Christian effort.

For years past the church and missionary societies have but scantily supplied the standing population with ministers. The rush of emigration from the old world and the Eastern States, together with the natural increase, will require beyond the Atlantic States, annually, a thousand ministers; a large proportion of whom, if supplied, must be-Home Missionaries.

If we look to the slave States increasing, in the slave population alone, at the rate of 70,000 annually, we see, that to meet the spiritual necessities of this outraged and neglected people, so far as ministers of the Gospel are concerned, 100 ministers would be required annually, calculating one to every 700 souls. How shall that want be supplied, and that of the three million new in bonds, and the mass of the white population mostly ignorant, and in morals not superior to the slaves?

The heart swells with pity for these multitudes, and our bowels of compassion yearn over the bond and the free, the home-born and the stranger. Christ died for all! After the labor, anxieties, and strife of the generation now on the stage, they will pass away to the grave, and their souls to meet their Judge. Succeeding generations will follow and people the eternal world, to enjoy the bliss of heaven, or suffer the woes of perdition. This country, if permitted of God to go on and to increase at the present ratio, will, in less than a century, have a population equal to China; and whether, like the world before the flood, it shall be "filled with violence" to be destroyed, or with righteousness, truth and salvation, may depend, under God, upon the humble but earnest and prayerful efforts of his people of the present day, and especially through the missionary enterprise. Who can but tremble in view of his responsibility? Who can hold property, friends, or life dear if he may but throw himself and all he has into the work, cheered by the glorious promise, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to right-counses, as the stars for ever and ever," rejoicing as did the great apostle to the Gentiles, who exclaimed, "Who is sufficient for these things?" and "Through Christ strengthening me I can do all things!"

There is one topic prominently introduced in the Address of the Convention by which the American Missionary Association was formed, which was designed to be a conspicuous feature in our organization, that has not since received the attention to which its importance justly entitles it. The work of the world's conversion, the turning of its hundreds of millions of lost, degraded, and sensual beings, from their debasing superstitions and practices to the love and service of the true God, is vast beyond all human conception. To increase the facilities for its accomplishment, to divest them of every possible hindrance to its progress, to multiply indefinitely the number of those engaged in it, were the objects which the friends of the Association sought to attain in its formation. They purposed to call the attention of individual Christians and of local churches, possessed of the means of sustaining their own missionaries abroad, to the privilege, may we not say duty ! of doing so. That there are many individual Christians, and thousands of churches, who might each do this were they willing to exercise the same strict economy and endure a tithe of the self-denial that they expect from missionaries, cannot be reasonably doubted. A moiety of the wealth of church-members, now treasured up, or perhaps misspent, and which is eating the souls of its possessors as a canker, or is reserved for the destruction of their heirs, would, if thus expended, be amply sufficient to multiply many fold the effective force now used in the work of missions. That the fulfilment of the parting command of our Redeemer can never be reached until churches and church-members are made to realize more fully than they now do the extent of their individual responsibility in relation to it, is too plain to need argument. Is there any better way to secure the realization of this responsibility than by urging upon churches, whose members possess the pecuniary ability needed, the duty of selecting and sustaining their own missionary laborer in some part of the immense field now providentially open to them. They should, if possible, select one of their own number, or some one well known to them, and possessed of suitable qualifications, in whom they would feel a deep interest, and by whose correspondence they would be continually prompted to sustain him in his work.

In the primitive ages of the Church no large missionary bodies were in existence; yet labors analogous to those which we now term missionary, were constantly put forth, and were crowned with a success not since equalled. If the churches of our land would return to the simplicity of the methods made use of in those times, and employ them with the like spirituality of mind that characterized the early disciples of Christ, we might hope that the gospel would again have those signal triumphs which we may indeed imagine, but of which we have no adequate conception. Each church would then be a missionary body actively engaged in sending the goel abroad, and many of them having their own immediate representative in the field. The way is now abundantly prepared for such efforts. Large organizations, needful for doing the preliminary work and for media of communication between churches or individuals and their missionaries, are already in existence. These are necessary in order that they may have an oversight of the whole field, and on which, in emergencies, missions and missionaries may fall back; but they can never do the work on their present plans. The churches must engage more directly in it. Will they do it?

Those best acquainted with the work to be done—missionaries who have spent twenty or thirty years in various parts of the field—are convinced that missionary efforts, in the better portions of it, should be increased ten-fold, in some portions an hundred-fold, while in others still it is yet to be begun. It will then be seen that if an increase at all approaching to the magnitude of the demand be attempted, no missionary body now existing in this country could even begin to do its portion of the work, unless it could be aided in the way indicated by numerous churches in different parts of the country, raising the needed means in their own body, sustaining their missionary, conducting the correspondence with him themselves, and thus relieving the missionary body from all present care and responsibility relating to

The division of the work, of its responsibility and its conferred power, would work happily for the preservation of its purity, and prevent the abuse of a trust which might otherwise become too great to be eafely committed to any merely human organization. Where numerous organizations exist, all having the same general object to accomplish, and depending on the favor of the benevolent for existence, each tends to quicken the zeal and purify the efforts of the others; so that if the efforts of one were conducted in a wrong spirit, there would be counteracting and ameliorating influences around to prevent entire corruption. On the contrary, where the efforts are all concentrated in one organization, if the spirit and the practice should become offensive to God, the influence wrought upon the cause would be most disastrous.

In efforts like those that have been suggested, where many churches do their own missionary work, merely using the organizations as channels of communication, there would be a vast economy of expense, as well as a large increase of means.

Another advantage resulting from such a course would be a multiplication of the number of those who would enter the missionary field. The effort to lay their personal responsibility upon every individual Christian would bring the question home to many minds, Why should not I go to the heathen? and hundreds now resting quietly at home would respond to the inquiry, Who will go for us!—Here am I; send me.

The Executive Committee cannot but feel that it is their duty to urge these considerations upon those churches of our Lord Jeaus Christ, whose members he has blessed with the means necessary to carry them into effect. The work is a glorious one; the obligation is as imperative as any they can conceive of, unless they can use their wealth in a way more likely to please and honor Him; and the good they can thus do cannot be estimated until we can fathom the depths of everlasting damnation, and take the full measure of eternal joy and blessedness. Some contributors to our funds have this year given more than enough to sustain a missionary family at any one of our missions; may we not hope that they will make their annual contributions sufficient for this purpose!

THE GOSPEL METHOD OF EVANGELIZATION

1 Cor. ix. 22.

"I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some."

##att, iv. 8, 9, 10.

"Again the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

EVERY institution, whether social, political, or religious, has an animus, a spirit, a something which makes it, as the case may be, useful or dangerous, worthy of affection, or deserving of reprobation.

Of no institution, and of no class of institutions, is this more true than it is of those which are designed for the propagation of religion. Men do not undertake to disseminate their religious sentiments or principles without being animated by a spirit which communicates itself to, and appears in the organization or institution through which their endeavors find a channel.

The Society of the Jesuits has a character as discernible as is that of any brother who wears the habit of the order. The American Missionary Association has a spirit as characteristic, and as easily known, as is that of any person who has come here to express an interest in its concerns. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreigu Missions has a character as evident to observation as is that of any officer who conducts or of any member who promotes its affairs.

Now, the animus or spirit of an institution or organization is more apparent in the policy pursued in its operations than in any thing else—more even than in its most solemn professions. Know the mode, the method by which, for instance, missionary associations perform their work, and you know the character, the soul of the Societies themselves. Let such an institution prove itself cunning and crafty in the accomplishment of its purpose, and though it may call itself "the Society of Jesus," and assert that it embodies the guilelessness of Christianity, it is known to be corrupt, and its name becomes, in public esteem, the synonym for whatever is hateful and dangerous. But let it in its public policy be honest, straight-forward, and truthful, and worthiness of character is ascribed to it by all who candidly observe it.

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

And to pass to another point, it may be said that as the spirit or animus of an institution is indicated, so is it influenced by the policy or method it observes in accomplishing its purpose. An institution may have in its beginning a commendable spirit; but, required to take up a certain line of policy, it may push that policy to such an extreme, or so maintain it in the face of evident indications that God would have the once useful method abandoned, as to suffer an entire loss of the character which, in its better day, made it worthy of praise. Many, it is to be feared, have been and are the institutions which have descended to a fearful degeneracy of character, through incautiousness in taking up policy which has reacted on and destroyed the laudable purpose it was intended to execute.

If these, then, are the relations of the policy of institutions to their standing before the public and to their actual character or spirit, what topic can more properly ask the attention of those who convene to investigate the affairs of, and pray for, a missionary enterprise, than one which has respect to the method to be observed in the propagation of religious truth?

In this question I have hinted my design in setting before you the passages of the Scriptures which I have just read; but I may properly express my purpose more distinctly by saying that I propose to look to these texts for indications of the material points of policy to be REGARDED, WHETHER BY INDIVIDUALS OR BY INSTITUTIONS, IN THE PROPA-GATION OF THE GOSPEL.

Following this purpose, then, I ask you to join me in looking, I. At the indications with respect to one aspect of the true method of evangelization which the first of our texts sets forth; for I may say here that our texts severally illustrate different though harmonious aspects or phases of the same thing.

The passage now before us - "I am made all things to all men" - is the language of the Apostle Paul, and describes the method by which he discharged the duties of his great office. We shall prepare ourselves to understand the sense and appreciate the importance of what is here said of himself by the Apostle, if we spend a little time in considering some of the circumstances under which the writer of the words before us was raised up for and discharged the ministry committed unto him.

Paul, though of Jewish origin, was born in a Greek city, and belonged to a family which enjoyed at least some social elevation. He had familiar intercourse, in his early years, with the best of both Jewish and Greek society: and Greek society was then the most cultivated in the world. At his conversion he lost social position, and was brought into close affinity with those who occupied humble stations in life.

And varied as was the social, not less so was the moral history of Paul. Naturally impulsive, and in his early years violent in his prejudices and persecuting in his spirit, long a Hebrew of the Hebrews, he became at his conversion of meek and gentle mind, a Christian in whom was no guile.

This variety of intercourse with men of all degrees, and this variety of experience of almost all possible moral states, gave the Apostle an opportunity to know human nature in all its aspects; to realize how man feels and is inclined to act under the widely different influences to which, in different social positions, and with different temperaments, habits, and education, he is subjected. He knew, by experience of it, what temptation to arrogance and pride the rich suffer; he knew, by contact with it, to what temptation to desponding and churlish murmuring the poor are exposed. He knew, by trying it, how hard it is for the socially elevated to descend to the humiliation which, to follow Jesus, they cannot escape. He knew, by daily sight of it, how difficult it is for the mind unquickened by habits of thought, to waken itself to the activity required for a heart-work. He knew full well with how strong a hand prejudice holds to old opinions, and with what power some forms of temptation weigh with even a soul consecrated to the service of God. He knew how formalism imagines that it sees too 'much, and philosophy too little spiritualism in such a system as that of which Incarnate Deity is the centre. Jews, Greeks, Gentiles; men of all sorts and classes; men trained in all ways and in no ways; religious men, sensual men, fanatics, and philosophers, all men-he knew them all, and seemed to be able, as I have said, to realize the wants and measure the feelings of all.

This knowledge of human nature made Paul tolerant towards it. He did not forget, when he preached the gospel, that those to whom he preached were almost invariably acted on by influences which made them averse either to all truth, or to that form of truth on which he was inclined to insist. He did not forget that the Jew was in bondage to prejudice, the Greek to philosophy, and the gross Gentile to appetite. He did not forget that the Jew, though he sought salvation by Jesus, might yet enterfain strong regard for the temple worship. He did not forget that the Greek, though bending at the cross, might yet be disposed to ask a solution of its mystery. He did not forget that the pagan or the profligate, turned to the better way, might yet go on feeble knees through the strait path. Nay, rather remembering the frailties and the perverse tendencies of human nature, he bore with it as it rejected truth, and was patient with it as it only slowly groped its way out into the light. With the penitent Jew he prayed and vowed in the Temple, though for himself he was free from the law which required temple-service. With the believing Greek, he reasoned respecting mysteries, for the solution of which he was willing to wait till, in the light of eternity, they should no longer be mysteries. To the poor wretch, just escaped from the power of lust, he extended his own strong hand, and exclaiming, "I am more than conqueror through Him that loved me!" besought his trembling brother to hope for the same glorious conquest in which he rejoiced. He made it his business to strengthen weak hands and feeble knees. He denied himself luxuries, and even necessaries, lest by the use of even that which his conscience did not refuse to him, he might hurt the yet uninstructed consciences of others. He made forbearance to the frail a cardinal element in his scheme of Christian duty; and no precept did he ever utter more fervently than he did that in which he said to his Christian brethren, "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak."

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

If, then, we are to give weight to the example of Paul, we must infer that he who has the true evangelizing spirit will be tolerant towards human weakness, and will pursue a method of labor which will make account of the effect on the moral state of men, of temperament, of training, of habit, and of social position. He will remember, in urging the claims of the gospel, that every man has frailties and besetments peculiar to himself, and that he is in bondage to some-influence which, perhaps and probably, has no weight with any other being. He will remember that old notions may so distemper the moral eye, that truth cannot always be readily seen by it, and if seen, not fully understood; and that, until there is prejudice, or some other form of selfishness, there is no sin in this distemper. He will remember that impediments to acceptance of the truth may be inseparable from the social affinities of those for whose good he labors. He will remember that the uninitiated and the novice cannot see duty as he, a veteran, does, and that many things which would be entirely sinful in him might be no offense against right in one who knows less than he does.

And if for the individual to have the true evangelizing spirit, he must be tolerant, so, for an institution, a church, a Missionary Association or Society to have this spirit, it must be forbearing. It must not drive its ponderous wheels over institutions, theories, and social distinctions which oppose themselves to it, but must rein its way on facile axle through such a course as a kind discrimination between ignorance and sin, between essential practice and non-essential conduct may open before it.

With one aspect of the true policy of evangelization before us, let us now turn, that we may observe another, to the text which stands second at the head of my discourse.

"Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

We have here a drama. The actors are, on the one hand, the father of lies, the being who either originates or accelerates the cheats, the oppressions, the cruelties, the iniquities of all forms, which blight human happiness, pervert the human mind, and fit the immortal soul for endless woe: on the other, the being on whom the heavy load of the world's redemption has been laid-who, more loving than an earthly father, and more tender than a mother, looks on no human woe without compassion. and on no sorrow without desiring to relieve it; the being who counted it no grief to try the temptations, the afflictions, the pains of men, and to encounter the bitterest of suffering, ay, death, that those who hated him might be saved. On a height overlooking the world, these persons, he who curses and he who blesses our race, confront each other.

The Arch-tempter, glorying in his power and in the mischiefs of which he has been the author, points his companion to the evils which the world endures; the selfishness, the malice, the bitter strife, the woes, the personal griefs, the bodily pains, the hungerings, the thirstings, the social and moral calamities, the arrogance of place, the depressions of the poor, the bereavements which extort a wail from the captive in the cell, and as well from the king on the throne; the opposition to truth, and the hostility to God which deface the fair earth, and deform the image of the Most High.

Saddening is the sight to the lowly and loving Man of Sorrows. Not more painful is the sight to the parent of the anguish of his first-born and only child which struggles in the embrace of a cruel death. Yes, saddening indeed, and the more afflictive to him, because he knows that the end of these sins and griefs and woes is not yet; that generation after generation of their offspring, in long procession, must still, through scores of centuries, traverse the path of human history: the more saddening too, because he knows that in conflict with these enemies of good, the disciples who shall take up the peace-dispensing gospel he has come to declare, must bear trials from which his own heroic soul, armed with highest powers, cannot but recoil.

The survey completed, the Deceiver says to the other, "All these things: will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Ah, is not this a tempting offer? The mastery of the world, the deliverance of that world from temptation, from sorrow, from discord, from physical and moral evils; and the rescue of the saints in all ages from the reproaches, the buffetings, the martyrdoms they must experience if Satan remains supreme; all these advantages to be gained by just one act, a compromise act, an act which no eyes but those of them who are parties to it shall see, and which need never again be repeated. Will not the Saviour accept the offer? Nav! Hear his indignant reply! "Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." With such emphatic rebuke does he meet the offer made him, and with that one sentence does he declare that not even to save the world, the object on which his heart is most set, will he pursue a course which will either involve himself in sin or indicate the least tolerance towards the sins of others.

Here, then, we have disclosed another of the aspects of the policy of true evangelization, viz.: that it will for no consideration, and however much it may be inclined to accommodate itself to the opinions and non-essential habits and customs of men—that it will for no consideration make any compromise with, nor any concession to sin; that not sapping and mining, but outspoken and inflexible hostility, will be the style of its opposition to all evident unrighteousness.

Leaving here the text before us, and taking up the inference which has been drawn from it, I may remark upon it, that evangelization must always act in distinct hostility to all sin, and with no tolerance for, or disposition to accommodate itself to any sin, or,

1. It cannot claim that it represents Christianity. Christianity makes no provision for sin, nor are the terms on which it offers its blessings indulgent towards the least sin; and if Christianity sternly discountenances all sin, shall a church, for instance, which, by a timid use of her discipline, shelters any known iniquity; or shall a religious newspaper which, by studied coldness towards reformatory enterprises, gives virtual countenance to the sin to be reformed; or shall a religious Publishing Society, which, pliant towards strong-handed vices, garbles the works of the honest dead—I will not say to suit the wishes of, but for the purpose of reaching the corrupt living; or shall a Missionary Society, which, by a time-serving policy, really lends its influence to the support of wrongs which humanity hates—shall either of these agencies call itself an instrument of Christian evangelization? Nay, surely, if there is any thing in

2. Evangelization must always act in distinct hostility to all sin, or it:

ean accomplish no, or if any, no good results. Policy which is timorous and time-serving has no moral power. Pursued by unscrupulous Jesuits, it may seemingly convert heathen by nations, and bring kings to receive holy water at its summary baptism; but it never really converts the heart. It cajoles the passions, but does not move the will. Nay, it makes men scorn itself, and loathe the doctrine or system of which it is the vehicle. Leave condemnation of oppression out of the gospel you carry to him who holds his fellows in unrequited bondage, and will he respect, or admire, or truly embrace that gospel? Not if he has in him a sense of the first principles of right, of justice, of obligation.

Indeed, it is only aggressive policy, policy which, awed neither by the standing, the wealth, nor the threats of the transgressor, says boldly to him, "Repent of Sin or Perish," which is likely to bring him to exclaim, as David, convicted by the prophet's pointed parable and his bold charge, "Thou art the man," exclaimed, "I have sinned against the Lord."

True, a timorous evangelizing policy may sometimes produce results which promise well; but the end of those results shows that evil keeps growth with, if it does not outgrow the good produced. Send missionaries to a tribe or nation of pagan slaveholders; hesitate about requiring the missionaries to reprove the peculiar sin of the people, and let the missionaries hesitate about doing so; and though idols shall be given to the bats; and civilization develop a social state and political institutions; and though industry shall turn hunting-grounds into fruitful fields, and religious worship be offered in temples crowning hills on which pagan holocausts once smoked, yet will the civilization soon show itself to be a brutal state, and the political institutions prove themselves only perpetual supports of monstrous wrong. Read in the horrible pro-slavery laws of the so-called civilized and christianized Choctaws, the indications of the final issue of an evangelism which temporizes with sin.

And it is further to be noticed, that it is generally, if not always true, that even while temporizing evangelization is rewarded with partial good, the policy employed exerts a fatal reflex influence on those who employ it, and through them on others. Look, for illustration of this statement, to the history of the leading events which have transpired in this country within a few years. Chief among these events have been the annexation of Texas, as a slave State, to our federal Union; the waging, in behalf of slavery, of a wicked and almost wholly unprovoked war with Mexico; and the attempt by Congress, in the passage of the celebrated Compromise measures, to make the North for ever subservient to the slave power.

Now, by what process has this series of events, culminating in the Fugitive Slave Bill—and what a climax of villany!—I ask, by what process this series of events, all designed to favor an infamous institution, has been brought about ? Brought about, be it observed, in the face of a national conscience which, even in the days of Madison and Jefferson, was strong enough to save our Constitution the disgrace of saying one word which should assume that slavery is a legal institution. By what process? Let the history of evangelizing instrumentalities answer. In the time named, one leading religious Publishing Society, the organ of a union of denominations, and sustained by prominent ministers and laymen, has seemingly, if not evidently, at the instance of slavery-propagandists, coolly condemned to withdrawal from circulation a little book which, with much merit, had no fault except that it says:

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

"What is a slave, Mother?" asked Mary. "Is it a servant?"

"Yes," replied her mother; "slaves are servants, for they work for their masters, and wait on them; but they are not hired servants; but are bought and sold like beasts, and have nothing but what their masters choose to give them. They are obliged to work very hard, and sometimes their masters use them cruelly, beat them, and starve them, and kill them; for they have nobody to help them. Sometimes they are chained together, and driven about like beasts.

Another more prominent Publishing Society has, like its fellow, either bowing before or subservient to our peculiar institution, while publishing treatises on the various sins and crimes which come within the compass of human guilt, constantly failed to rebuke, and even left wholly out of sight the sin of holding men in slavery, a sin known by it to be indulged in by a large class of those who read its publications; and has added to what seems like sycophancy in its course by expunging from the standard works issued from its press such passages as might be obnoxious to slaveholders.

And meantime, a leading Missionary Society has capped the volcanic fires of earnest desire for the relief of the bondman, kindled in many Christian hearts, with the truly extinguishing doctrine that slavery is an organic sin, and therefore not to be treated as one would treat sins not organic, such as drunkenness and falsehood.

These things-all measures of evangelizing policy-have occurred; and what effect have they had? Making those who were participants in them, and those who were subject to the influence of the participants, familiar with, and complacent towards, compromising and temporizing with sin. What effect could they have, other than such a debasement of the religious mind of the country, and then, of course, of the politics of the country, (for religion has hitherto been a check on our politics,) that the audacious legislation which enacted the Fugitive-Slave Bill was made possible, and was tamely acquiesced in by not a small portion of the professedly religious men of the land.

A temporizing evangelization, then, by the operation of the laws of our nature, not only fails of its professed object, but recoils in evils not a few on those who undertake it, and often on the Church and world at large.

And I need hardly add, for a third remark respecting the policy of evangelization which compromises with sin, that it cannot have Divine approval. Surely, the Being who struck with instant death the man who thoughtlessly lifted a hand to steady the tottering ark, is not likely to be complacent towards an individual or an institution guilty of temporizing with evil that good may come.

Here resting this train of thought, I may properly repeat the inference drawn from our second text, that the true evangelizing spirit will, for no consideration, make any compromise with or concession to sin.

The two aspects of the proper method of evangelization are now before us; and with our picture complete we find that in this method are joined toleration toward the ignorance and sympathy with the trials of men, with undeviating, open hostility to sin.

And now, brethren, can the importance of making evangelizing policy embrace the two elements so frequently named on this occasion be too strongly emphasized, or can those who love truth be complained of if they strenuously insist that the work of saving souls, whether at home or abroad, shall be so conducted that while the weakness of man shall not be rudely assailed, his sins shall not pass unreproved? The question of course answers itself.

It was, if I mistake not, with an earnest and devout desire that Christianity might be rescued from the corruption to which, what seemed to many the time-serving policy of certain agencies and enterprises undertaken in her name were likely to subject her, that its founders originated the Society which now celebrates its Seventh Anniversary.

A brief review of the circumstances under which the American Missionary Association was established will not be out of place here.

In the course of the agitations which attended the anti-slavery movements of 1837 and onward, many thinking men through the country were led to feel that their political alliances were such as made them parties to the support of slavery. Doing works meet for repentance in their political associations, they were naturally led to look next at the moral aspects of their religious connections; and the result of the inquiries on this point which became somewhat prevalent was, that a forward step, especially in the matter of relations to missionary enterprises, was also necessary. The conviction ripening into action, its fruit was the following call.

[&]quot;To the Friends of Bible Missions in the State of New-York.

[&]quot;Brethren,-The undersigned are friends of Freedom and of Missions. Heretofore we have acted in the support of Missions through the American Board and kindred Associations. Numbers of us still do so. But we need not inform you that latterly strange things have come to the public knowledge. Slaveholders are in churches planted and sustained by the American Board. They are there approved and regular members. They have been welcomed to, and continued in them, without question, without reproof, without discipline. This has been done for more than one quarter of a century, and is still done; and now that the thing has at last come to be generally known, the Board, and those who direct its affairs, excuse, justify, and declare it apostolic and scriptural. They commend the missionaries who have done and still do it, as competent and faithful, and tell them, in terms, that they cannot advise, much less require them to change their proceeding. For aught that appears, the gospel we are to propagate through this agency is to tolerate, baptize, and welcome slavery to the Church, wherever it meets it in all the earth. Caste, polygamy, and other social wrongs are to have a like allowance, admission, and sanction. And they who would have it otherwise are assured that they transcend 'God's method,' and have not learned their 'procedure from the Bible.'

"Brethren, the undersigned invite all the friends of freedom and of missions, who have heretofore cooperated with the American Board and kindred Associations, or who now do so, to meet in Convention at Syracuse, on Wednesday, the 18th of February next, for the purpose of considering generally the whole subject of the Bible methods of propagating the gospel; and particularly for the purpose of putting forth such a remonstrance against the practice referred to in the mission churches, and the positions taken in justification of it, as the cause of Bible missions demands; with the consideration of such practical measures as may seem best to give practical effect to the same."

In answer to this call, a large convention, composed in no small measure of men eminers for ability to comprehend truth and for devotion to duty, came together.

During the session of the convention, the policy of the Missionary Board with which most of the delegates had been in the habit of acting was illustrated by a quotation from one of its own Annual Reports, the Report* presented at the meeting held in Brooklyn, N.Y., in the autumn of 1845.

The quotation was adduced as a fair exponent of the views held by the leading officers of the Board with respect to some of the functions and methods of evangelization, and is in these words:

"But slavery is not the only social wrong to be met in the progress of the missionary work, and to which the principles which are adopted in prosecuting that

When this frank and distinct avowal of the policy of the American Board, with respect to "organic" sins, was produced in the convention o which I have referred, and when it was proved by reference to the instructions given by the Prudential Committee to missionaries set apart to labor among the oriental churches, instructions which charged its servants to make no assault on the rites and ceremonies which the very missionaries thus charged have described as being "grossly idolatrous," and as consisting in part of homage to the image of the "immaculate mother of God;" and when it was further proved, by reference to documents showing that the Committee had refused to allow missionaries to organize churches for the shelter and culture of converts in the East, who dared not subject themselves to the perverting influences which abounded in their national churches; I say, when it was proved in this way that the Board was disposed to reduce its conservative theory to constant practice, and that probably nothing would avail to turn the Board from its sapping and mining policy, the majority of those present felt that they could no longer work must probably be applied. There are the castes of India, deeply and inveterately inwrought in the very texture of society, causing to the mass of the people hereditary and deep degradation, leading to the most inhuman and coatemptous feelings and conduct in social life, and presenting the most formidable barriers to every species of improvement. There are also the unrestrained exactions, made in the form of revenue, or of military or other service, connected with a species of feudalism, prevailing in many unenlightened communities, which are most unrighteneous in their character and paralyzing in their influence, and cause unlimited distress to individuals and families. There are also those various forms and degrees of oppression, whether of laws or of usage, prevailing under the arbitrary governments which hear away over the larger part of earlie's surface."

"Should it be found, as the result of experience, that souls among the heathen are in fact regenerated by the Holy Spirit, before they are freed from all participation in these social and moral evils, and that convincing evidence can be given that they are so regenerated, then, may not the master and the slave, the ruler and the subject, giving such evidence of spiritual renovation, be all gathered into the same fold of Christ! And may they not all there and in this manner, under proper teaching, learn the great lesson, (so difficult for partially sanctified men to learn,) that in Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, but that all are one in Him? And may they not, under these influences, have effectually nurtured in them those feelings of brotherly love, and that regard for each other's rights and welfare, in which alone is found the remedy for all such evils! Under such influences, may not the master be prepared to break the bonds of the slave, and the oppressive ruler led to dispense justice to the subject, and the proud Brahmin fraternally to embrace the man of low caste; and each to do it cheeffully, because it is humane and right, and because they are all children of the great household of God? By such influences, mainly, is not the great moral transformation to be wrought in the master and the ruler, in the bondman and the oppressed, all-important to both, and the only sure guaranty for permanent improvement in the so-cial character and condition of either?"

The reader is asked to consider whether this passage does not savor strongly of those "half-covenant" doctrines which once infected many of the churches in New-England, and which led to the dismission of the elder President Edwards, who had resolutely withstood them.

^{*}This Report was called out by the presentation to the Board at a previous session of several petitions, asking for some action on the part of the Board, which should silence the charges of a disposition to be time-serving with respect to its relations to slavery, which were current in some circles. The spirit of the Report (certainly to a degree) embraced the doctrine that slave-holding, as such, is not to be treated in the matter of religious instruction, admonition, and discipline, as are drunkenness, falsehood, and gaming.

fraternize with the Society, though they had fondly loved it, long prayed for it, and rejoiced in its success, as the veteran rejoices in the success of the leader he has followed through many long campaigns.*

The feeling thus estranged from the American Board, soon found opportunity to take distinct and working form. A local committee which had undertaken to send the gospel by the medium of the rescued Amistad captives to inner Africa; another committee, which was maintaining missions in Jamaica; and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society of Ohio, finding that their work could be accomplished by an extension of their plans, gave up their organizations, and accepted the invitation of the American Missionary Association to be merged in that Society, which had been recently formed by those who had expressed their views of Bible Missions in the Syracuse Convention.

Anxious to guard the great idea of Christian missions which they sought to incorporate into their new organization, assiduously as possible, the founders of the Association threw the gates of membership open to none who were not evangelical in their religious belief and moral in their conduct; and rejecting the close-corporation form, made the doings of the officers of the Association subject to the scrutiny and legislative action of the members.

Thus originated and thus constituted, the Association has been in the field seven years, and in that time has pushed its outposts to almost every quarter of the globe. It is represented by an effective force of Christian laborers in Siam, in the Sandwich Islands, in Africa, in Jamaica, among the Indians of the far North-west, the Chinese in California, the people of the destitute portions of the western and north-western States, and two of the slave States. Operating through a territory so wide, and tested under every variety of circumstances, the Society has had opportunity to determine whether the sapping and mining or the uncompromising is the better policy; and the friends of the cause surely have occasion to rejoice that thus far no disposition on the part of the Association to accommodate itself either to organic iniquities or to private vices has come to light. May the day when the Society shall be complacent to evil that good may come, never be!

I cannot close my discourse without applying the subject I have endeavored to illustrate. 1. By charging my hearers to remember that duty to aid in Christianizing the world is not met simply by association with and labor in behalf of some missionary enterprise, but that the obligation to which I refer as imperatively demands alliance with the right kind of evangelizing agencies, as it requires any endeavor. This is so obviously an inference from the topics we have considered, that I need not illustrate or expand it. But let me press the point. Let me ask those who hear whether they look with careful and conscientious scrutiny to the policy of the evangelizing agencies with which they are connected? Do they see to it that the moral support of their sympathies and prayers, and the material aid of their contributions, withheld from institutions which, by temporizing, bring shame on the gospel, are given to agencies which, by aggressive and progressive fidelity to truth, dignify the gospel of Him who would not, even to save a world, concede to even a single sin? Say, friend, does the constraint of social relations, or habit, or thoughtlessness wed you to an organization; the policy of which savors of compromising rather than Christian honesty? or does truth so have its place in your affections, your principles, and your conduct, that you fraternize only that which, aiming to do God's work, aims also to do that work in God's way: the way of forbearance with what can be borne with, but of hostility to sin, which can never claim forbearance?

Ponder the question, brethren, for it may be that some who have not thought themselves wanting in the missionary spirit have yet need to commence the true evangelizing practice.

But let me apply my subject, 2. By calling on those who sustain the Association for which I speak, to keep steadily in view the great principles which should underlie the policy of an organization for the propagation of Christian truth; and to see to it that their Society, temperate, kind and tolerant toward those who are not friends to it, and also toward the world it seeks to save, is yet positively, not by compulsion, but by loving, free choice, hostile to iniquity in all forms, to sins organic and to sins not organic, to public sins and to private sins.

But let me, in final application of my subject, remind my brethren of the Society, that it is not by public action only or chiefly that radical gospel institutions can be sustained. The instrumentalities which with meekness but with boldness, with gentleness but with fearless avowal of truth, do God's work in the right way, must be rooted in the steadfast

^{*}Lest my recital of history should convey a wrong impression, I must here say:

1. That those who in the Syracuse Convention complained of the action of the Board, did not undertake to determine the moral intention of those who devised and executed the policy complained of. It was the policy itself to which they objected; and they evidently felt that if they were sure that the policy originated in a pure intention, they were not at liberty to uphold it.

2. That since the time the Board published its intention to pursue the conservative policy with regard to Missions in the East, of which complaint was made in the Syracuse Convention, it has in practice abandoned that policy, and set up churches for the enfolding of converts from the dead forms of the Greek and other oriental churches; but whether or not this change was brought about by the pressure of a disaffection with its course, which cost the Board the loss of at least one of its many excellent missionaries, is not for me to say.

faith, devout prayers, and irreproachable lives of those who maintain them. In no other soil, not even in the fervor of fidelity of their representatives in the great field, can they find nutriment. Consider then, brethren, our obligation! Reflect, that if our secret purposes, our hidden affections, our private conduct, our state and standing in God's sight are contrary to truth, no public endeavors we can make will avail to the support of truly gospel missions.

How shall our brethren in Africa have the heart to stand unflinchingly before the strong-handed wrongs they witness, or how shall our missionaries in the territory of Southern slavery be nerved for their trying work, if only the money and resolutions of those who are themselves in practice temporizers, sustain them?

Let us carry the thought which this question cannot but awaken in our hearts, to our homes; and impelled by this momentous motive, let us do well our daily duty, and fill with a devotion which never tires of prayer, and with a labor for souls which is never weary, the measure of our obligation to our Maker and to man. And if such is our devotion, and such are our lives, then will not our missions represent in vain the truths we practise. They will succeed; and our home religion will send through them, insignificant though they may appear to human eyes, a fullness of blessing even to distant nations; as when with a tidal wave, which hardly ripples on the surface of the deep, the swelling flood of ocean fills with its affluence every depression of the indented shore.

EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING.

The Service is the ort was the star on of by Mr. Joseph and Carles

THE ASSOCIATION met in the Congregational Church of West-Meriden, Ct., commencing at two o'clock P.M., of Wednesday, September 27, 1854; Hon. William Jackson, President, in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. A. Underwood, of New-Jersey.

Rev. Henry Belden, of New-York, was appointed Recording Secretary, and Rev. J. C. Tefft, of the Mendi Mission, Africa, Assistant-Secretary, for the Meeting. The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read and approved.

The Treasurer of the Association, L. Tappan, read his Report of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year, which, on motion, was referred to the Auditors of the last year.

The Secretary for the Foreign Department read the Report of that Department. At intervals during the reading, statements relative to their respective missions were made by Mr. Tefft, of the Mendi Mission, and Mr. Richardson, of the Jamaica Mission; and the congregation united in singing Heber's missionary hymn,

"From Greenland's ley mountains," etc.

Mr. Jocelyn, Secretary of the Home Department, commenced the Report on Home Missions, but before concluding gave way to a motion to defer the completion of the Report until Thursday morning.

The following Committees were then appointed, namely:

Committee on Business, Resolutions, etc.—Dr. J. R. Lee, of Worcester, Mass.; Rev. W. B. Brown, of Andover, Mass.; Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, of New-York; Rev. W. W. Patton, of Hartford; H. B. Spellman, Esq., of Cleveland, O.; and Lewis Tappan, of New-York.

Committee on Nominations-Rev. L. F. Waldo, of North-Brookfield,

Mass.; Samuel Deming, Esq., of Farmington; Rev. J. Brewer, of Middletown; Rev. G. Whipple, of New-York; and H. M. Payne, of Albany, N. Y. The Association adjourned to meet on Thursday morning, at 9 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The Annual Sermon was preached by Rev. Silas McKeen, of Bradford, Vt., from Rev. 6: 12. "And they went forth conquering and to conquer."

THURSDAY MORNING, September 28.

A meeting for prayer and conference was held, commencing at eight, and continuing until nine o'clock, at which time the meeting was called to order for business by the President, and prayer was offered by Rev. Josiah Brewer, of Middletown.

The Secretaries' Report was then resumed by Mr. Jocelyn, and completed by Mr. Whipple, when, on motion of Rev. Mr. Waldo, the Report was approved and referred to the Executive Committee for publication.

Rev. Mr. Bardwell then made some statements relative to the Mission among the Ojibues, and the condition of the Indians of that tribe.

The Business Committee reported a series of resolutions recommended by the majority of the Committee, and a minority report on the second resolution of the series. The Report of the Committee was accepted, and the resolutions were taken up in order for discussion. The first of the series was passed unanimously.

The second resolution was then read. Some verbal amendments were made, followed by a discussion, in which Mr. Tappan, Mr. Brown, Mr. Patton, Mr. Stillwell, Mr. Brewer, Mr. Williams, and others participated, and which continued through the forenoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated by the Association and the congregation present. Rev. Mr. Brown made the opening address, and officiated in the distribution of the bread. Mr. Richardson, of the Jamaica Mission, followed in an address to the congregation, and the distribution of the cup.

After the conclusion of these services, the Association was again called to order for the transaction of business, and the discussion on the second resolution was resumed. The proposed amendments were then withdrawn, with the understanding that they should be published, (also the enactments of the Choctaw Council referred to in them,) in connection with the official report of the proceedings of the meeting; after which the second resolution was unanimously passed.

The remaining resolutions of the series were then adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

1. Resolved, That the success that has attended the operations of the Association from its commencement calls for our gratitude to the Great Head of the Church, and should encourage us in prosecuting the important work committed to our hands.

2. Resolved, That we rejoice, and express our thanks to Almighty God, in view of the action of the A.B.C.F.M., recently taken in Hartford, in freely discussing the subject of slavery, in adopting the anti-slavery sentiments in Mr. Treat's letter of 1848, and in resolving to disregard the recent enactments of the Choctaw nation relating to the instruction of slaves and their children; and we ardently hope and sincerely pray that the time may soon come when the Board will withdraw all support from slavery by excluding slaveholders from the mission churches.*

3. Resolved, That, in view of the condition of the Church with reference to American slavery, the religion of Christ as well as consistency of character require the Christian abolitionists to be as circumspect in their religious as in their political action, lest it be truthfully said that they prize politics more than Christianity.

4. Resolved, That the providence of God in opening the way before our mission-aries into the interior of Africa, and inclining the hearts of so many of its rulers to desire the establishment of missions among them, viewed in connection with the spiritual blessings granted to the agencies already employed there, should be regarded as his call upon Christians to increase their efforts for the evangelization of that continent.

5. Resolved, That the success with which the Great Head of the Church has crowned the mission among the emancipated people of Jamaica, should encourage the Executive Committee to make vigorous efforts to supply that mission with the increased number of missionaries and teachers now needed.

6. Resolved, That the success of Colportage in Kentucky, in connection with the circulation of the Bible among slaves, and the formation of churches in slave States that hold no communion with slaveholders, under the direction of this Association, affords evidence of the Divine favor, and indicates the duty of greatly increasing the number and efficiency of those who are strenuously and successfully laboring in such fields.

7. Resolved, That it is the solemn duty of the friends of missions immediately to avail themselves of the openings providentially existing, for the introduction of the Gospel and the promotion of temperance and freedom in the slave States and the new territorics, and that it be recommended to Christians to encourage emigration to Kanzas and Nebraska, to supply the means for the support of missionaries, and to induce the establishment therein of missionary colonies, in which Christians shall associate as churches, with ministers of their own selection.

*One of the enactments referred to forbids that any "slave, or the children of slaves, shall be taught to read or write in or at any school, or academy in the nation, by any person whomsoever, or connected in any manner whatever, either as superintendent, missionary, teacher, farmer, matron, pupil, or otherwise, with any school or academy in the nation, under pain of dismissal from such school and removal out of the nation, in case the person offending is not a citizen of the Choctaw nation."

Another provision of the same law is as follows; "It shall be the duty of the general superintendent and trustees of schools to be vigilant in the performance of their functions, and promptly remove, or report to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for removal, according to the nature of the contract between the Choctaw nation and the different Boards of Missions having charge of public schools and academies, any and all persons who may be connected therewith, who is or are known to be abolitionists, or who disseminate, or attempt to disseminate, directly or indirectly, abolitlon doctrines, or any other fanatical sentiments, which in their opinion are dangerous to the peace and safety of the Choctaw people."

[PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE FOR RESOLUTION 2, WITH AMENDMENT IN BRACKETS.]

Resolved, That as friends of Bible Missions we rejoice in the refusal of the A.B.C.F.M. to regard unjust and unchristian legal enactments, and in the sanction at length given by them to the truth contained in the letter of their Secretary, Mr. Treat, of 1548, that "domestic slavery is at war with the rights of man, and opposed to the principles of the Gospel," that the great majority of slaveholders are manifesty selfish, and treat the alaves as property making their own advantage the grand object in view; and that the Apostles did much that by fair implication bears strongly against slavery, while they did not give it the least sanction, regarding it as unnatural and sinful; that in particular, while not admitting that the phraseology quoted indicates the entire duty of the Church, we still rejoice in the declaration of Mr. Treat's letter, as thus indorsed by the A.B.C.F.M., that if a candidate for admission to the Church, who sustains the legal relation of owner of slaves can not show that this relation "is involuntary on his part," or" that it is retained at their request and for their advantage," and that "he utterly rejects and repudiates the idea of holding property in his fellow-men," "there "is no warrant whatever" "for admitting such a none to the privileges of the people of God;"] and that we earnestly hope that the time is not far distant when the Board will take still higher ground, and declare to their missionaries who preside over churches that admit slaveholders to their communion, that slaveholding is not to be tolerated, even if slaveholders for a former of the Lord's supper can scripturally and righfully be denied to converts who are supposed to have given evidence of pietry, if they persist in holding their fellow-men in slavery under any preference; and that the Indian churches must forthwith free themselves from all connection with slavery and slaveholders, or the Board will immediately withdraw from them its aid.

8. Resolved, That while "the field is the world," and our foreign missions should be fully sustained and rapidly enlarged, home missions should also be greatly increased and vigorously supported, both for the salvation of our own country and as a means of preparing it to be an instrumentality for the conversion of the world. 9. Resolved, That it is essential to success in the prosecution of our work that there be a great increase of the missionary spirit in the hearts of Christians, and that we therefore exhort all who cooperate with us, to consecrate themselves, their property and their children fully to God, and that with reviewed expressions they property, and their children fully to God, and that with renewed earnestness they supplicate the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the churches at home and the missions abroad.

10. Resolved, That in view of the great work still to be done, in the enlightenment of public sentiment, and the more thorough reformation of Missionary Boards, and the opening for missionary work at home and abroad, the friends of Bible Missions are earnnestly invited to increase their contributions to this Association, that its missions may be adequately sustained and greatly multiplied.

The Committee on Nominations reported as follows:

"The Committee on Nominations having learned with regret that our worthy President declines a reelection to that office, would recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the thanks of this Association be presented to Hon. William Jackson, for the service that he has rendered to it as its presiding officer, from its formation to the present time, and that we tender to him our assurance that we shall ever hold in grateful remembrance the faithful and impartial manner in which he has discharged the duties of that office.

"The Committee respectfully recommend the following as officers of the Association for the ensuing year:

For President.

Hon, LAWRENCE BRAINERD, of St. Albans, Vt.

Vice-Presidents.

Rev. DAVID THURSTON, Maine, Rev. SAMUEL E. CORNISH, New-York, F. D. PARISH, Esq., Ohio,

Hon. WILLIAM JACKSON, MARS., Prof. C. D. CLEVELAND, Penn., Rev. JONATHAN BLANCHARD, Ill.

Corresponding Secretary for the Foreign Department, Rev. George Whipple, New-York.

Corresponding Secretary for the Home Department, Rev. S. S. JOCELYN, New-York.

> Recording Secretary. Rev. HENRY BELDEN, New-York.

Treasurer. LEWIS TAPPAN, New-York.

Executive Committee.

ARTHUR TAPPAN, New-York, C. B. RAY, New-York, THOMAS RITTER, New-York, WILLIAM E. WHITING, New-York, HENRY BELDEN, New-York, JOSIAH BREWER, Connecticut,

S. S. Jocelyn, New-York, ANTHONY LANE, New-York, SAMUEL E. CORNISH, New-York, J. O. BENNETT, New-York, J. A. PAINE, New-York,

J. R. LEE, Massachusetts.

The resolution was adopted, and the officers nominated by the Committee

Mr. Jackson then addressed the Association, stating that he had not declined a reelection to the office of president from any diminution of interest in the Association, but only on account of his increasing age and infirmities. He intended still to exert himself to sustain the interests of the Society, and was grateful for the honor conferred on him, by electing him to the less responsible office of Vice-President, an office which he cheerfully accepted. He then introduced Hon. Lawrence Brainerd, President-elect, who, after a few brief remarks, took the chair.

A proposed amendment to the Constitution was reported to have been submitted to the Executive Committee, and was therefore presented to the Association. It was then, on motion,

Resolved, To strike out from the third article of the Constitution, the words "at any one time;" and to add the following clause, namely, "provided that children and youth who have not professed their faith, may be constituted life-members without the privilege of voting."

THURSDAY EVENING.

Brief addresses were made by the Treasurer, the Corresponding Secretaries, by Mr. Bardwell and several of the missionaries present.

At the suggestion of several persons in the congregation a collection was taken, after which the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to Rev. Silas McKeen for his discourse preached last evening, and that a copy be requested for publica-

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to the Church of West-Meriden for the use of their house of worship on this occasion; to the Committee of Arrangements and to the choir, for their very valuable assistance; and to the citizens of the place, for the hospitality extended to the members of the Associa-

The Association was then formally adjourned, to meet next year at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee. The congregation united in singing the "Missionary Hymn," and were dismissed with the apostolic benediction.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

SINCE the last meeting of the Association, two of our foreign missionaries have finished their labors on earth and entered, we trust, into their eternal rest in the presence of their Lord. One was an ordained missionary in connection with the 'Mendi Mission, and the other a female assistant missionary in the Olibus Mission.

Five missionary laborers have, for the first time, joined their several Missions, and three have returned to them after a short visit to the United States. Nine have been compelled, either by their own ill-health or that of their companions, to leave their work for a season and endeavor to recuit their energies by a visit to their native clime. Some of these expect to return to their Mission this fall; others will wait till the opening of another spring. The providences of God that have compelled so many of our missionaries to leave their labors just when, to all human appearance, they were most needed, can not but be regarded as afflictive, and should call forth earnest prayer that they may be speedily permitted to return, or that others may be found to fill their vacant places.

The mercy of God has been youchsafed to our Missions in the outpouring of his Spirit and the revival of his work among the people. Our Foreign Missions, with a single exception, and many of the missionaries in the home field, report refreshings from the presence of the Holy Spirit, and conversion of the impenitent, and among church members a manifest progress in the divine life.

By the Treasurer's report it will be seen that there has been a gratifying increase in the receipts of our treasury, amounting to more than fourteen per cent on the income of the previous year, and some five thousand dollars more than the current expenses of the Association, thus enabling the Committee greatly to reduce the debt existing at our last annual meeting.

The number of life-members of the Association, which was at the last report 864, has been increased 295, and now amounts to 1159.

The Committee have also been cheered and encouraged by the action of individual churches and ecclesiastical bodies, indorsing more or less fully some of the distinctive principles of the Associations, and recommending its Missions to the support of Christians. The recent action of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions concedes the correctness of one of the positions assumed by the friends of the Association, namely, that missionary bodies were solemnly bound to bear a testimony against American slavery as a sin against God and an obstacle in the way of the world's conversion. These things create the hope, that if the friends of God who regard slaveholding, ordinary slaveholding, as incompatible with the spirit of Christianity and a sufficient disqualification for its communion, will be true to God and firm and consistent in the maintenance of their principles, the time will come when all missionary bodies will refuse to solicit or receive into their treasuries the gains of oppression, will teach that slaveholding is a barrier to admission to the Church and a ground of discipline, and will refuse to sustain missionaries or mission churches who by their language or their practice deny it.

MENDI MISSION, WEST-AFRICA.

Stations .- KAW-MENDI. BOOM-FALLS. AND GOOD HOPE.

Missionaries.—Rev. Geo. Thompson, Rev. J. C. Tefft, Rev. Morris Officer, Rev. John Condit, John S. Brooke, Doctot T. G. Cole, Daniel W. Burton, Sanuel Gray, Edward Henny Greer, Miss Hompson, Miss Burton, Miss Geren, Mageru, Jim Gray, Miss Hanned Morr, Miss Loviea Saxton, Miss Mary B. Aldrich; under appointment, Miss Janz Winters, Miss Suran Teall, and Miss Suran Wolfer.

During the year under review, our mission in Africa have been called to mourn the loss by death of one of their number, Rev. John Condit, formerly of Newark, New-Jersey. Mr. Condit received his appointment from the Executive Committee in October, 1853, was ordained at Newark, in November, and on the 30th of that month, with high hopes of usefulness and strong confidence that God had called him to labor in Africa, he sailed in company with Mr. Thompson for the Mission. He arrived on the coast of Africa December 27, reached Sierra Leone January 4, and the Mission January 13.

One of his associate missionaries, Dr. T. G. Cole, says of him:

"He was filled with a veritable worker's spirit, and (immediately after his arrival in Africa) began to show forth his zeal in his Master's service by his fervent efforts to awaken in the minds of the pupils, the natives, and all whom he met, a spirit of more active inquiry on the subject of religion, and to interest them in the great plan of salvation through the all-atoning blood of Jesus Christ."

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

His first missionary labor was performed at Freetown, Sierra Leone. Mr. Thompson thus describes the scene:

'Passing along a narrow street, thickly settled, we passed a house full of people talking among themselves. They called out 'Good evening, sirs; come in here; and we went in. They arose and gave us a seat; and Brother Condit, finding them all ready to hear of Jesus, preached to them. They were all attention, and often assented, saying, 'That's true.' 'True.' 'Yes,' etc. They thanked us very much for calling. We prayed, and sung, and departed, after all had shaken our hands, thanked us again, and bid us 'good night.' Brother Condit said, 'That's worth crossing the ocean for."

At the first mission meeting, subsequent to his arrival, he was appointed to labor in connection with the Kaw-Mendi station, with which he continued his connection till his decease. On the Sabbath, as Mr. Thompson ministered to the church and congregation at the mission, Mr. C. visited the neighboring villages to lift up before their inhabitants the standard of the cross. He thus visited and preached in several villages where the name of Christ had never before been heard. The Spirit of God seemed to accompany his labors, and the preaching of the word greatly affected the hearts of his hearers. For seven successive Sabbaths lie preached in Barmah, a town a little below Kaw-Mendi, whose chief was a Mohammedan, and who at length manifested much hostility to his labors, and especially to his attempt to circulate the New Testament in Arabic. Speaking of one of these visits. Mr. Condit wrote :

"On my arrival, I was met by the king and some of his followers, demanding of me my business there. I said I came to preach Christ to them. He became enraged, and told me I was a bad man. I came to teach his people devil-ways. and I had a devil-book, pointing to two Arabic Testaments which I took with me for distribution. He said, You must take them devil-books back again. After he got through, I asked him if he took the responsibility of driving the missionary away from the people. He said he did. He was willing to have me come and talk with him upon other matters, but not to preach. When I commenced to sing. he left, calling the people after him. However, many staid, while I talked about Jesus. Through the grace of God, a fire has begun to burn there, which I hope will consume the Man of Sin."

At a later date Mr. Condit wrote that he had been preaching at a little town below Barmah, where, he says,

"They informed me the Gospel had never been preached. I shall never forget the scene, and I trust sternity will reveal the fact, that some souls were benefited. I had the privilege of seeing the heathen idols demolished before my eyes, men and I had the privilege of seeing the heathen idois demolished before my eyes, men and women giving up their charms and gree-grees, and declaring they would no longer live in their country ways. The power of God was in the word. Such earnest looks, such alternate expressions of despair, hope, and joy, as were seen in the countenances of some of the hearers, when I was enabled by the Spirit to unfold the mercies of God to them in the gift of his Son Jesus! I never had such love for any people. When I took my departure, every soul in the town followed me to my boat, clapping their hands in token of gratitude, and desiring that I should come often. I left with my pockets nearly full of gree-grees, charms, etc. . What will be the result time alone will declare. One thing is certain, the Lord has visited that place, and whether it will result in their destruction or salvation, we do not know. May we not, however, after such manifestations of God's mercy, hope that some will retain the good impression made, and hide the word in their hearts until it bring forth the fruits of righteousness? The same results attended the word at a small town near Good Hope. Miss More was with me on this interesting occasion. The head man was the first to strip himself of his country fashions."

Of the ultimate results of these labors it is impossible to speak. The immediate effects were such as greatly to cheer the heart of the missionary and make him feel that his self-denial and labor were not in vain.

It is but proper to say that our missionaries were very strongly apprehensive that Brother Condit was undertaking too much, and that they entreated him to moderate his labors and avoid exposure; but feeling remarkably well, and being confident that God had a work for him to do, and would sustain him to perform it. he did with his might what his hand and heart found to do, and went entirely beyond his physical ability. When attacked with the fever he was in an open boat on his way to Freetown, and continued to go forward for two days, when he turned back to Good Hope. There he remained until he died, April 24.

Dr. Cole says, when he first saw him:

"We hoped, with God's blessing, he might pass through and recover, as his nervous system did not show that extreme excitability which indicates want of vital strength, nor that dullness that marks the overwhelming power of malaria. He would get up and down alone, from choice, rather than ask any one to assist him; till Friday morning, while so doing he fainted, fell headlong across the room. and went into spasms of face, neck, and body generally. These were not severe, but continued till he was restored from the fainting. He was insensible of what had passed. From this time his downward progress was rapid."

Since his decease, we learn that before he became a missionary, he had twice had somewhat similar fits, having fallen in a state of compete exhaustion, and for some time continued insensible.

After describing his death, Dr. Cole says:

"Thus passed away all that was mortal of our friend; but the soul of the dear brother, we believe, we know, is at rest. One so gentle in spirit, so confiding, so full of faith in God, and hope in his promises, so indefatigable in his labors for the conversion of sinners, so self-denying when he felt the call of God to him, so willing to be any thing, or to do any thing, endure any thing for Jesus' sake, can not but find a ready admittance and glorious welcome to the home of the blessed, the haven of eternal rest, and world of endless joys. Oh! if we all could have that fervency of spirit and meekness of disposition, we doubtless should find the work of God to prosper more effectually in our hands."

Our Mission has also been diminished in number during the year under review, by the return of Mr. Officer, and Mr. and Mrs. Gray. Mr. Officer is a member of the Lutheran Church, and if he returns to Africa will probably go out in connection with Missions of his own denomination, believing that he can do more for Africa by inducing the Lutherans to undertake separate missions, than if he were to labor in connection with other denominations of Christians. The Ex. Com. part with him with much regret, but they can not undertake to control his convictions

Mr. Gray has spent three years in Africa, and has in various ways rendered valuable service to the Mission. His excessive labors and frequent exposures so affected his health that he notified the Ex. Com. early in the year, that he should be obliged to return to America. He left the Mission in January, and arrived

Mr. Tefft, after having obtained the consent of the Executive Committee, and on account of ill-health, returned to this country in June. By the advice of the Mission physician, and the full approbation of the Mission, Miss Sexton, who had for some time been suffering from dropsy, accompanied him. The health of both improved during the voyage, and the Ex. Com, have confident hope that they may return this fall.

KAW-MENDI STATION.

Until the present year the Mission had been subject to an annual rent for the grounds occupied by this station, and during the troubled condition of the country some back-rent had accrued. By an agreement entered into with Henry Tucker. chief of the Sherbro country, February 24, 1854, this rent has been relinquished for ever. The following are the essential parts of this agreement:

"Said Henry Tucker, in consideration of one hundred and fifty dollars, paid by James Cutler Tefft and Morris Officer, doth for himself, his heirs, assigns, and people, relinquish all back-rent due from the Kaw-Mendi Mission to him, for the use of the Mission premises, bounded as follows, namely, beginning at the point of land running into the Little Boom River or Creek, near the western part of the little village, now called Mo-Cobak, and running from thence south, or south-west. eight furlongs; thence east, parallel with said Little Boom River four furlongs; thence north, or parallel with the west boundary, eight furlongs to the Little Boom

"Said Henry Tucker further agrees to relinquish to said J. C. Tefft and Morris Officer, and their successors, as Missionaries of said Kaw-Mendi Mission, all further rent for said Mission premises so long as said American Missionary Association may wish to occupy them. And said Henry Tucker further agrees, that said Kaw-Mendi Mission may remove all property from Kaw-Mendi, whenever they shall deem it best."

This instrument was regularly signed, sealed, and witnessed, and a copy of it sent to the Executive Committee.

On the second Sabbath of January, Mr. Tefft received into the church four boys from the Mission-school. One of these boys had been at the Mission since before Mr. Raymond's death, and the other from eight to eighteen months. The case of one of them was peculiar. Mr. Tefft says that for a full year before he succeeded in joining the Mission, he was determined to go there and get an education. He was then living as a servant-boy, and would often entreat his master to let him go, so that he could do something in the world besides being a waiter. The first sermon he heard at the Mission seemed to make a lasting impression on his heart, and eight months after he made a public profession of his faith in Christ. The latest intelligence from the Mission brings favorable reports from all these.

The whole number received into the church, the last year, up to July 1, 1854, was seventeen, and the number of native church-members at that time at Kaw-Mendi was fifty-three. Three had been dismissed from that church to join the church at the Boom-falls station, and two, yet members, were under discipline. Since the formation of the church eleven native members have been excommunicated, two have died, and four have left for other places.

REVIVAL OF THE WORK OF GOD.

In May, Mr. Thompson wrote from Kaw-Mendi that God was pouring out his spirit and reviving his work at that station. The work commenced with great power on the Sabbath, May 14, and continued up to July 3, the date of the letters last received. Their meetings for preaching and for prayer were numerously attended. The members of the church appeared much more than usually earnest in their desire to know and do all the will of God, and to secure for others an interest in the great salvation. Many of the impenitent manifested conviction for sin, and quite a number professed conversion, and applied for admission to the mission-church. Mr. T. says he never before had such clear and definite views of the truth that Christ died for every man, as when preaching to the people from 1 Peter 1:18, 19. The occasion was one of much more than usual interest. He adds-"God affected my own heart, and fitted me to speak simply. Give God the praise. It was a solemn time while Christ crucified for each one of them was held up before them. God bless the truth."

The following is an extract from a letter dated June 20th:

"The work mentioned by me in former letters yet continues with power. Old, hardened cases, who have withstood every thing from the commencement of the mission, have humbled themselves and professed to submit to God. Many heads of families have professed repentance, and are now praying alone and together. For more than five weeks we have had meetings every evening. For three weeks I preached every evening in the chapel. Then we changed the mode of operation. and while the teacher and scholars met in the chapel every evening to pray, Daddy Johnson, an aged African, and I went from house to house, holding meetings, till we went nearly through the town. Our meetings were held mainly in the open air, for the houses would not accommodate half the people. These meetings were searching and powerful. I generally preached a short sermon, and many confessed their sins and professed submission to God. Nearly every meeting witnessed new cases of husbands, wives, or country people, apparently coming to Jesus. The work goes on. We hope to see all converted. Some hard cases remain for whom we are praying. Numbers of the boys and girls hope they have passed from death unto life. May God carry it forward till all iniquity shall be searched out and put away. This week I expect to preach every night, beside attending prayer-meetings and classes, and examining candidates for the church every afternoon."

Mr. Thompson then gives an account of the hopeful conversion of two native men, each of whom, at the time he wrote, appeared well,

"My Sabbaths as you will have seen, are very laborious, as I preach four times and conduct the Sabbath-school. At the little town where Bro, Condit preached a few times, they plead for us to come and preach to them, but I can not get away. How can I? Oh! if we only had sufficient help to go 'two and two,' then could we visit and invite the people of the towns around to the Gospel feast. But, alas! now they remain heathen, almost within hearing of us, and we can not help it. When shall we have laborers? The Lord provide them in his good time. The work is his, and I believe it will go on."

Under date July 3, Mr. Thompson wrote:

"Yesterday was an interesting and blessed day at Kaw-Mendi. I baptized and received eight new members to the church; seven of them were connected with the school, and one was the mother of three or four of our girls. Another old lady from the village near, who has long given evidence of piety, would have been received, but was providentially detained. Numbers of the school children yet profess conversion, and we hope are converted, but will wait till the next communion, as there was not time to examine them before this one. Many of the workmen and towns-people, heads of families and single, old, middle-aged and young, profess to have given up all to Christ, and are leading a praying life, but as they need more instruction than could be given them before this communion season, it was thought best for them to wait till the next. For seven weeks we had meetings every

Mr. Thompson describes the interest of some of these meetings as being intense, almost overpowering him. Upon one occasion the people came together and filled the house long before the usual hour, so that no bell was rung for the meeting.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"It is good," he says, "to be here, though my labors are excessive. I think I never labored so hard for so long a time, in America. I wonder at myself, but it is only the fulfillment of the promise, 'As thy day is so thy strength shall be.'"

BOOM-FALLS STATION, (or Mo-Tappan.)

This station is in the Boompey country, at a little town called Mo-Tappan, about half a mile below Tissana, the residence of the chief of the country. It is represented as being a delightful location, having a large number of small towns within a few miles of it, and all ready to receive the preacher of the Gospel and listen to his message. It is on the Boom River, in latitude about 7½ degrees north, and directly on the route from the Sherbro Island into the interior Mendi country. Mr. Thompson desired to obtain the location when he first went into the Boompey country, but it was at that time denied to him. Its chief, Braw, subsequently expressed a strong desire to have a mission established there, and afforded some facilities for the enterprise. Mr. Brooks commenced the station a little more than a year and a half ago, but his operations were temporarily suspended, and recommenced during the present year.

Mr. Brooks has with him a native teacher from Freetown, and seven of the most advanced scholars from Kaw-Mendi. He commenced a school immediately after his arrival there, with thirteen scholars, and was urged to take others long before he could prepare accommodations to take them. It was his purpose to make a part of the mission buildings from unburnt brick, believing that he could obtain good buildings, at very much less expense than in any other way. Of the success of his experiment the Executive Committee have not been informed.

Mr. Brooks has none but native Africans with him at this station. Soon after he recommenced his labors there, he wrote:

"I am again at my favorite field; happy, though alone; contented, though life in the bush is rough and unsettled; hopeful, though the seed long sown has produced little fruit; encouraged by faith's bright promises, though I can see nothing of the future. God, who hath called, who hath promised, who is faithful, and whose will is the salvation of men of every grade, condition, and clime, . . . is an all-sufficient support to my soul. So long as I am sure that the work my hands find to do is his work, my heart is satisfied.

"Oh! how much one banished as it were from every kindred mind, shut out from society, and shut up with such a mass of mind—depraved, degraded, repulsive mind—needs the society of the Supreme! I can not see how a person, enlightened and Christianized, could remain with such a people, without the abiding fellowship of the Holy Spirit.

The boys are some society, but it requires all my grace and experience to keep them within suitable limits. If they were mature Christians, they would be some support—as it is, the care for their souls rests upon me with more weight than my own. I am sure I share an interest in your prayers. I know that almost hourly prayers are offered for me and mine."

Mr. Brooks afterwards gives the following account of the exercises of the Sabbath and of the opening of a school. It will be seen that the pupils of the school are required to spend a portion of each day in labor. A three-fold advantage will arise from this, a reduction of expense, training them to habits of industry, and furnishing them with a knowledge of agriculture, or some useful art:

"All going to or from the town, on the Sabbath, except to attend these meetings, or in care for the sick, has been prohibited. A flag is to be raised Saturday evening and Sabbath, to show our neighbors the day for rest and worship, and invite them to join us in our devotional and religious exercises. Our congregation last Sabbath was made up of people from five or six different towns around. Such a representation will be seldom given, yet I do expect a few from three or four of the towns nearly every Sabbath. I shall do all in my power to draw them out.

"On Monday I opened a school with 12 pupils. The hours of the day were divided in this manner: from 6 to 9, labor; from 9 to 10, breakfast and have prayers; from 10 to 1, school; from 1 to 4, work; then dinner and recreation; prayers or meetings at 6. All must attend at prayer and meetings. The boys are cutting farms for themselves. They have begun well. Monday and Saturday evenings we have a prayer-meeting; Wednesday, an inquiry-meeting; Thursday evening, a lecture. I purpose that the Sabbath and Thursday-evening lectures shall be discourses on the Sabbath-school lessons."

The following extract from a letter written soon after this station was commenced, will show some of the encouragements and trials of the missionary, and perhaps incite some pious hearts to pray for the preservation of the young converts just snatched from the baneful control of heathenism:

"Last Monday evening, our prayer-meeting was very interesting. Four of our good boys joined in the exercises, offering fervent and affecting prayers that they might be made useful to the mission and their fellows. One made the following remark in his prayer, which I give as a specimen of the desires expressed by all: 'Lord we have for a long time desired to live with the heathen. Now grant us grace to live so as to give them confidence in our religion, and draw them-to thee.' These may not be the exact words, but they are as near as my memory serves me. It expresses the idea, with nothing added. Hearts that can frame and feel such a prayer, under God will be useful. Is it not a support for one under the circumstances in which I am placed, to have a few such boy-associates? Associates indeed they are, cheering and blessing me every day. With these, who would have been heathen to-day, but through the grace of God, in the use of the mission, who could not labor with good cheer and hope?"

Directly across the river, from the Boom Falls station, lies Mo-Bungo, in the Looboo country, whose chief, Bea-Bungo, has long been anxious to have a mission established there. He is getting to be an aged man, and in many ways has manifested a strong desire to hear the Gospel himself and have it preached to his people. He appears to possess a more intelligent knowledge of it than any other leading man in those parts. Our missionaries do not decide whether his motive is the simple desire to learn Gospel truth, or something less worthy. They do, however, regard these indications as furnishing an open door which they may enter with the proclamation of divine truth, trusting God to make that truth effectual for the conversion of men. Of this chief, Mr. B. says:

"From a visit I had last week from Bea-Bungo, I judge that his mind has not been idle on the subject of religion. He came to me with a 'dream,' but for a dream there is a cause. The points of interest in it were, 1. He was told by one in his dream that he must pray to God in Mendi; that God could hear Mendi as well as English. 2. That when he kneeled down to pray, he found that he was not alone, but many of his companions and younger persons were present, and followed his example. 3. After prayer, the man who served him as a teacher gave him and his companions wine and milk, very delicious to drink. When he left me, he said, 'When you are not able to come and hold meeting at my place, send your boys and I will hear and learn of them, alone, if no one else will turn in to hear with me. For myself, I am going to beg God what I can and what I know in my native tongue. I believe he will hear.'

At another time he wrote:

"Bea-Bungo refitted a large building in good native taste, mainly for meetings. This he has done of his own free will, without even a suggestion from me. As soon as the work was finished, he visited me to invite me to occupy it for a house of worship.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"A few days previous to this, he came to inquire if we were not prepared to take his children, manifesting some uneasiness, through fear that we could not take all he wished to have us. I gave him some, though not very definite encouragement, that we might soon take four or five."

At a later date, Mr. B., in describing the scenes of the Sabbath, wrote:

"I have around me about thirty souls, whose interests demand the care and labors of one missionary. To these I had intended to give my undivided attention this day, until, at an early hour, a messenger came from Bea-Bungo, inquiring if I could come to his place to hold a meeting to-day. What answer shall I give? What can I do? I am single-handed and it is thought by those who know little of the field, that there is not here a sufficient opening for missionary effort. I am thus compelled to labor alone, without any hope of soon receiving assistance. The impossibility of one's being able to enter all the opening doors, and to comply with all the calls to go to different places, 'to keep Sunday,' is such that I often become distracted, and know not what to do or where to go. Those who best know the field, and my trying situation here, have deep sympathy with me, and would, if consistent with other duties, speedily hasten to my assistance.

"Yielding to the request of Bea-Bungo, I went to Mo-Bungo to hold religious relating to the request of Bersbungs, I went to introduce to interest services. Being a little later than usual, I found he had given up the idea of my coming, and that, having heard I was going to Soombia, he had gone there to attend meeting. This looks like some desire of the Gospel for its own sake. I asked two of the leading men to call the people together. They did so, and I spoke to them of the religion of Christa"

In view of scenes like these, and the many calls for the missionary reaching him from other places, Mr. B. appeals to Christians at home:

"But the question is still pressing upon my mind whether I shall add fuel to the kindling interest awakened in the minds of the heathen, and neglect the children and people whom Providence has placed under my more immediate care; or shall I turn a deaf ear to the Macedonian cry? Has God called me to awaken an interest in the cause of Christ among this people, that I am not able to sustain? Were the efforts which have led to these results wrong and untimely? What say you, my brethren? What will the Christian Church answer when asked this question? Will they say, we are not prepared to follow up a general movement among the people of the Boom; confine your labors to as small a circle as possible when you find the people becoming too much interested in the observance of the Sabbath? Don't think of keeping up with the providence of God, as seen in the opening doors of usefulness around you. Besides, is it not the 'white man's money' rather than the 'white man's religion' which they desire? Selfishness, I admit, may have much to do in this matter, and it would be unreasonable to expect otherwise. They are not converts who call for the Sabbath visits of the missionary, but they are heathen, who have seen enough of Christianity to know that it is more desirable than heathenism, and who wish their children to grow up under its influence, that they may live and act like 'white men.' Or at least they wish to have the name of observing the Sabbath, and to have meetings 'white man's fashion.' These are the lowest motives which I can attribute to them. If I am enthusiastic in regard to this station and field, I wish not to lead others into wrong views relative to it. Sober truth is strong enough to support any cause worthy of Christian patronage. To things as they are, I therefore appeal, and ask if the lowest construction we can put upon Bea-Bungo's motives, in the desire he manifests to have religious meetings and Sabbath regulations at his place, does not, by the most approved rules of practical missionary life, indicate an 'open door' of more than ordinary interest? I see but little reason to hope for an easier entrance among the heathen than is now offered to us on the Boom. If twenty missionaries were stationed along this beautiful river, within the distance of as many miles, they could collect, in four times that number of towns, attentive hearers, who would give them a warm welcome, and 'something to eat,' for the glad tidings of salvation, although they might not, in great numbers, embrace it."

In relation to temporal matters, Mr. B. says there is a very marked improvement in the personal habits of the people at the Boom Falls station. One year before, there was but one man beside himself that attempted to raise cocoa in that neighborhood; now, almost every family is attempting a cocoa farm, and it is fast becoming a common article of food. So also of gardening. His example is being followed, and some gardens in the neighborhood vie with his own for neatness

In all things, Mr. B. is greatly encouraged. He says:

"Never in my life was I more confident of success than I am of the success of our cause. Never did any thing look so inviting, so desirable, so hopeful as the work we contemplate on the Boom. Mr. H. expressed it as his opinion that the Boom presented one of the most inviting fields for missionary labor within his knowledge. This is saying much, for he is acquainted with the whole west coast of Africa to the Cape of Good Hope.

"You and my brethren may class me with those who wish to go ahead. Onward, onward, with measured, steady progress, is the language of my heart. I would not be wild and headlong, but deliberate, active, hopeful. I feel as I would have others feel, much as a man would who is under the necessity of travelling a day's journey through a forest filled with by-paths, and without a guide. He travels thoughtfully, carefully, that he miss not his way, but presses forward as fast as he can with safety, to gain time for a hindrance, if one should occur. With us, time is limited. There is a way to do our work in that limited time. To provide for unforeseen difficulties, we must press forward with energy."

Lest he should be thought too sanguine, he thus apologizes for dwelling more upon the encouraging features of his field than upon its discouragements, and says:

"One who has long contended with the discouragements and difficulties of missionary life, in heathen lands, is much like the veteran warrior, who has passed through many a hard-fought battle. Each speaks more freely of his success and his hopes than of his hardship and his toils: supposing that all will know that the latter are inseparable from his calling. The young warrior and the young missionary may at first be disposed to dwell on these, but as he becomes more engaged in his work, and feels the cause to be his own, they cease to occupy his attention, and find but little place in his communications. Hope, success, triumphs, are ever new, and for that reason, command his heart and control his pen."

While he thus writes he is not inexperienced in the trials of a missionary life: "In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, (and) in hunger and thirst." One of these perils he thus describes:

"At Bogo, the next place I called at, I was met by fifty or more warriors, naked, and armed with drawn cutlasses for a fight. As soon as I sprang ashore, they entered my canoe and pillaged it, stripping my boys, throwing one into the river, and tying a rope upon another's neck. I was then taken into a house with a third boy to be kept from the rabble and noise, to tell my business and be questioned. In a few minutes the excitement became so strong out of doors that we were left alone in the house. Some clamored loudly for our lives; others said, Kill the men, and put the white man in the canoe, and let him go down to the salt water where he came from. At length the company became divided. Two Mandingo or Mendi Mohammedans, together with one warrior from Tecongo and a man from Tormohoo, took our part. This was very seasonable, for two of my men were by this time in the hands of executioners. Our friends prevailed. The rabble being defeated in this plan, crowded into the house and began to strip me and my other boy. From me they took all but my trowsers and a shirt. Those who had defended the men out of doors learning what was going on in the house, took whips and soon cleared the house 'by strong.' With this wild people we were detained three days."

Nor is he unaware of the imminent danger of the falling away of those in whom they have the most confidence. Fearful examples of the apostasy of those who have run well for a season have taught him, as well as others, to say:

"These of whom we have such hope and confidence are but youths, subject to the moral instability of early life, besides the influences of heathen education and association, for ever awakening the passions of the human heart, and tempting them to a life of sensual indulgence. Knowing this, excites my fears. Seeing them at times struggling with these temptations, and almost giving way, grieves and distresses me beyond measure. Looking at either side, it is well and good to be here; good to be a teacher and guide to such youth. I would not have it otherwise. God hath so ordered, and I am, and hope they are, blessed in his appointment."

And again:

"The more I do and suffer for Africa, the more it seems like a home for me. Africa, the heathen of Africa, lie, next to God, the nearest to my heart; yes, so mingled and entwined are they with my duty and love to God, that they are hard to separate. Discouragements invigorate me for a new effort; trials bind me more closely to this people; difficulties and hardships make me feel more at home. So long have these things been like my daily food, that life without them would seem like an empty dream."

This seems to be a fulfillment of Christ's instructions, counting the cost, and then, with all the heart, undertaking to build the Lord's house.

GOOD HOPE STATION: SHERBRO ISLAND.

This station has been commenced within the year under review. It is situated in about 7 deg. 30 min. north latitude, and 12 deg. 30 min. longitude west from London, on the Sherbro Island, and nearly opposite the mouth of the Boom-Kittam River. By the payment of one hundred dollars, a lease for nighty-nine years, with the privilege of renewal on the same terms, has been obtained of about five eighths of a square mile, lying on the Sherbro River, near the British Consulate. The mission thus obtains the advantage of a coast station. Easy of access from all the other stations, on a stream navigable by vessels crossing the ocean, and nearly surrounded by a numerous native population, who live in small towns or villages near them, it is thought the location will be more healthy than any that could be found on the coast of the main land.

One of the houses sent from this country has been erected there, with additions, and a station commenced. Since Mr. Officer's return to the United States, there has been no ordained missionary there, and Mr. Burton has conducted the religious exercises of the Sabbath. These meetings are attended by the British Consul and some other Europeans, residents on the Island. A small school has been commenced, and a limited number of scholars taken under the care of the Mission. This station is so located that Mr. Burton, who is now the only male missionary there, hopes to be able to limit the number of scholars, so that none shall be received who do not give fair promise of usefulness when educated, and that the sobool shall never be so large that the missionary force can not do justice to all.

As we have before said, our mission there is greatly in need of a reinforcement.

Since the death of Mr. Condit and the return of Mr. Officer and Mr. Tefft to the United States, Mr. Thompson is the only ordained missionary at the Mission. This fact, of course, precludes the possibility of commencing new stations in answer to the applications made to them; yet they feel almost as if necessity was laid on them to make a commencement at two points. Mr. T. continues:

"If God will provide the help, there are many places open to us which we should like to occupy; but there are two in particular, Welah and Mo-Bwavi, which we must take up as soon as our help will permit. Welah should be the first on account of its healthfulness for new missionaries, and on account of its readiness of access from Kaw-Mendi, Good Hope, and Mo-Tappan. To this last-named place we could easily ride on horseback. . . . Its beautiful situation, the land scenery, the splendid water-power, the falls, the excellent spring or river water, and the abundance of stone make it one of the most desirable places known. Such a place can not remain long unoccupied, and we need it for the welfare of the coast and the interior station, and of the whole mission. How can we do without it?"

NEW STATIONS.

On the little map of our African missions, prefixed to this Report, the first of these places may be seen, near the centre of the north border. It lies on the Jong River, just above tide water, at the first rapids as you ascend from the ocean. All or nearly all, our missionaries have visited it, and are unanimous in describing it as a most desirable site for a mission station. Dr. Cole describes it as pleasant, healthy, and in a direction toward a thickly-populated region more interior. He says it has along the river elevated banks, covered with timber of a good quality, with the purest and best of soft water. He found "granite rock, with its innumerable peculiarities, and iron, to abound." Most of the material necessary for buildings could be obtained there, or near at hand. Mr. Thompson's description of the place, as published in the October number of the Missionary, is still more glowing. All the mission, without an exception, unite in desiring permission to occupy it. It is now open for our occupancy. How long it may remain so is uncertain.

Mo-Bwavi is about 12 miles below the Boom Falls station, on the Boom River, under the government of Bar-Colong, who resides at Mo-Colong, a village of five hundred inhabitants, about half a mile distant. This chief has long desired the establishment of a mission there, and has several times obtained from some of our missionaries a pledge to commence one as soon as they shall be able to do so. Mr. Brooks has already secured a house in anticipation of soon being able to open a school, if no more. He wrote at one time as follows:

"Bar-Colong is becoming quite uneasy about our building at Mo-Bwavi. I am sorry we are not able to commence a mission there. We must go forward; so it seems to me. Surely I would not go faster than Providence leads, but I do feel that Providence is dragging us forward, and that we are holding back unwilling to be led. It would be well to open stations at other places, but above all, and first of all, we should thoroughly man Mo-Tappan and Mo-Bwavi; not less than four able male missionaries will man these two stations comfortably. Six would be better, though the other two may do as well at Welah, until we are better supplied. We are not prepared as we could wish for a large reinforcement, yet one moderately large could be set to work at once."

Listening to the entreaties of our missionaries, the Executive Committee passed a vote authorizing the mission to commence a new station at Welah or Mo-Bwavi, as they might elect, as soon as practicable. Nothing but the fear of encouraging the mission to undertake more than they were able to do, prevented the Committee from authorizing the occupancy of both the places named.

In the August number of the American Missionary, an earnest appeal for laborers was published, as coming from the older members of the Mission. They represent the country as everywhere open to the preachers of the Gospel, and give a list of scores of towns in which a missionary would be cheerfully received, and his message of truth respectfully heard.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"These," it says, "are all open for preaching. At every place the missionary would be welcomed, and heard. Many are glad to hear. They should hear; and since God has opened the way, so that his messengers can go undisturbed, to proclaim the way of salvation, is it not an unmistakable call from heaven to let them hear—to make known to them the plan of redemption, through a crucified Redeemer? 'But how can they hear without a preacher? And how can they preach except they be sent?' For Brother Brooks, alone as he now is, can not go to them all. His hands are full, and his strength more than occupied in towns close at home, within a half-hour's walk. Now the way is open. The missionary of our mission is received on both sides of the war-all are our friends-all wish to give us children-all will hear. It was not so always. It will not continue so long, unless we take possession of the ripe field. Oh! where are the laborers? Who will come to the rescue? Who says, 'Here am I-send me?'

[After giving another small list of towns lying near the mission, in another direction, said to contain an aggregate of 6000 or 7000 inhabitants, the appeal speaks of] "numerous villages and towns in other directions, easily accessible; and every place freely opened to the missionary. Is not this an important field? Should it not be occupied at once? Then who will come? Who will hasten before these numerous doors are closed against us? Who !

"And what shall we say of the interior? They are calling for us to come, but how can we go? We are crippled and tied, for want of help. Tecongo, a day and a half east by north, pleads. The king is ready to do any thing we ask. He is very anxious to have us come. And a mission there would do more than any thing else, to secure permanent peace in all the country. We should then have hold of the hands of both Tecongo and Boompeh, the great opposing powers of the "Two hundred miles eastward, in the Kong mountains, from which place some of the Amistads came, they are eager for a missionary. God has gone before us, and opened our way, and by his providences, is urging us forward. What will Christians at home answer? Will they hold up our hands?

"The country described is beautiful—high land, rich soil, fine water, and excellent breezes, day and night. Nights cool, like full in America, so that a fire is grateful, and clothes not a burthen. Fruits and vegetables can be raised all the year. Brother Brooks raised four crops of corn on the same piece of ground in one "Delightful scenery abounds. The air is pure, and we think it is a healthy country, capable of being made great; but heatherism reigns, and hangs like a pall, over all. The Gospel is needed to work a change. This is the great remedy which God has given us to rectify all these ills; but the remedy must be applied.

Who will help us? Africa calls. Your crushed missionaries call. And God from heaven calls: 'Whom shall I send, and who will go for us!' Shall these multitudes of benighted souls have occasion to say longer; 'No man cared for my soul?' Oh! let it not be. May the Lord send forth laborers after his own heart.

"We are in a country where war is frequent. The Gospel is a gospel of peace. We want men and women who will enter heartily into the work; who can bear all things-endure all things,' and thus exhibit, in life, the excellency and power of the blessed Gospel. We want thorough peace men, who can trust in God—men of business—men of prayer—'apt to teach.' The Lord choose!"

The Executive Committee are constrained to spread forth this appeal before the young men, and especially before young ministers, in our land, and ask them to consider it as addressed to them. Does not God thus call upon some of them. to deny themselves the endearments of home, and take up their cross and go, for Christ's sake, where they can thus give the bread of life to thousands for whom Christ died, and who without their exertions must inevitably go down to the grave and to the judgment, without a knowledge of the way of life through a crucified Redeemer?

The Executive Committee must regard Western Africa, in the vicinity of our missions, and farther in the interior, as open to the preaching of the Gospel, to an extent many times as great, if not many hundred times as great, as our ability to occupy it. The knowledge of this fact, again and again, in the operations of a Divine providence, thrust upon the attention of young and middle-aged men and women, must be regarded as his call upon them to go in, and in the name of the Lord, take possession of it. By the remembrance of what He has done to make salvation possible-of all that he has providentially wrought to give us a knowledge of the way of its attainment; by the revelation of the joys of heaven, and the pains of hell: by his commands and entreaties, affectionately, earnestly, and with Divine Majesty left for and laid upon them. God in Christ is calling upon Christians to complete the work he has begun, and to preach salvation in his name throughout all the world. By his providential opening of a door into Western Africa; by his there preparing a heathen people to listen to and receive the word of truth; and by an often-refreshed remembrance of the wrongs which our own land, by slavery, has heaped, and is still heaping, with crushing, damning weight, upon Africa and her sable sons and daughters, he is peculiarly calling upon Christian abolitionists to enter into the work, and do all they can, both here and in Africa, to remove the curse. Ethiopia is stretching out her hands unto God: who among the children of God will give her the bread of life and the water of salvation?

KIND OF LABORERS NEEDED.

1. We need for our African mission, first of all, pious and learned ministers of the Gospel, who can both preach the Gospel through the agency of interpreters, now prepared for them, and reduce to writing the language of the country, so that we may give the people the Bible, the word of life, in their own familiar tongue. Hitherto the cares which have fallen upon the few laborers, have absolutely prevented them from giving due attention to this immensely important department of a missionary's labors. The time has come when this ought no longer to be neglected. Great facilities are prepared for its accomplishment, by the partial education of so many native youths, who continue to speak with freedom their own language. Some of these give cheering evidence that they are sincere Christians, and would enter upon such a work with all their hearts. The preparation for a life of usefulness which such employment would give these young persons, is an additional inducement to commence it. For this, and the other work demanded, we now need an ordained missionary for each of the stations already occupied, and for the two that our brethren wish to take possession of.

2. The African mission need also, well-qualified teachers, male and female, for the several stations occupied, and to be occupied. Whatever may be truly said about the preaching of the Gospel as the divinely-appointed agency for the world's conversion, the experience of the past has shown that from the younger portion of any generation, the more abundant and lasting fruits of such labor have been obtained. When God led Israel out from Egypt, it was not the adults who had witnessed and understood his wonderful deliverances amidst the plagues and atthe Red Sea, and who had witnessed "the lightnings and heard the thunders of Sinai when God himself came down in power and majesty to proclaim his holy law," that were permitted to enter the promised land, but the youth alone, who, though unable to comprehend the meaning of these glorious displays of divine majesty and goodness, were afterwards trained line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, to understand the commands of God. The carcasses of the others fell in the wilderness. If then we would follow the leadings of Divine Providence, and learn wisdom from his record of the world's history, while we preach the Gospel to all, without distinction of age, sex, or condition, we shall take special pains to impress it upon the minds of children and youth, in the house and by the way, lying down and rising up. To preach the Gospel to the children in Africa, we need many well-qualified Christian instructors, both male and female.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

3. Our Mission needs also business men, to conduct the secular affairs of the Mission. In an uncivilized country, destitute of the arts, of a circulating medium, and of all but the rudest and simplest interchange of commodities, secular agents to superintend the affairs of the Mission, to perform many kinds of manual labor, and to aid in educating the people in habits of industry, are almost indispensable. Such are needed in Africa. Not only men qualified to superintend and direct the labor of others, but men and women also, who are willing to be "hewers of wood and drawers of water," to promote the interest of the Mission. A true Christian, then, whose heart God has inclined to the work, need not stand alcof from it, because he has not an education. If he is ready to labor in a department for which his peculiarities best fit him, there will be found a place for him in the widely-extended field.

This may be the proper place for a word of caution to those who contemplate the missionary work. An open door among any people does not necessarily imply a readiness to receive the Gospel in the love of it. A willingness to hear the Gospel, to weigh its claims, or even to acknowledge its superior excellence, is one thing. To embrace its principles, to fulfill its requirements, to accept its provisions of mercy, and honor God by obeying his commandments, is another and widely differing thing. The first constitutes the open door, and imposes the obligation on the Church to enter it and preach the Gospel; the last, in the economy of grace follows the preaching of the word, and depends on the influence of the Spirit of God. He who goes to the heathen, though the door be thrown wide open to all the instrumentalities he may employ, must expect to encounter the oppositions of heathenism in its thousand disgusting, horrible developments, and to battle with truth against error, light against darkness, good against evil, the foolishness or preaching against the power of the prince of this world, until God giveth the victory, and the wearied sower is permitted to reap, and bring home his sheaves with rejoicing.

The Missionary to Africa must also encounter suffering and disease. Some may at length be driven from the field, and others called to an early grave, but the salvation of a continent, and obedience to God, are worth something of suffering and sacrifice. And we firmly believe that the day of Africa's redemption will never come, until many of the sons and daughters of the Church are ready to embrace suffering for Christ's sake, and not count their lives dear unto them, if they may but honor their Redeemer in the conversion of men. A bright crown, and life eternal, await whosoever will lose his life for Christ's sake, and the Gospel. The command is, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature;" the sustaining promise is, "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the ends of the earth;" and the final award, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, enter into the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

THERE are connected with these stations, eight churches, under the charge of seven ordained missionaries, one of whom was ordained by the Congregational Association of Jamaica, during the past year.

Brainerd.—This station, under the pastoral care of Mr. Richardson, has enjoyed a very interesting revival of religion, in which the Church has been greatly blessed, and many souls hopefully converted to God. In the midst of the increased labors consequent upon this state of the Mission, Mr. Richardson's health failed, and after repeated attempts to recruit, by partially ceasing from labor, he was compelled, in July last, to ask counsel of the Mission relative to the expediency of his coming, for a season, to the United States. The Mission unanimously advised him to leave the Island at once, as the only probable course of safety; and he accordingly sailed in August for this country, where it is probable he will spend the winter.

The following extracts from his letter announcing his arrival among his friends here, will be read with interest:

"We have not left because tired of our work, or discouraged with our field. On the contrary, we never have felt our hearts so deeply interested and so greatly encouraged in our work as within the past few months. God has seemed, of late, to be opening a wide door of usefulness to us, by opening the hearts of the people, and graciously inclining them to hear and obey his messages of truthr. Soon after the annual meeting of the Mission last March, a special weekly prayer-meeting was commenced by the Mission families at this station. We felt our hearts burdened in view of the sad condition of Zion and our own spiritual leanness. We resolved to go to God in our extremity, and make special supplication for the outpouring of his Spirit upon ourselves and the community around us. Nor did our Father deny our requests or leave us to seek in vain. We found him ready to bless, yea, even coming to meet us, 'while yet a great way off.' And it was truly a blessed meeting, as "'Mid tears of penitence we knelt, And found his word was true.'

"Our church and neighborhood prayer-meetings soon began to show tokens of increasing interest. More attended, and a better spirit prevailed. Confessions for sin were mingled with cries for mercy. About this time the cholera made its appearance in our midst and commenced its fatal ravages. Two or three impenitent persons were suddenly out down, and their awful end was such as to alarm even the most careless. God's providences and spirit seemed combined for the accomplishment of a great and good work; judgment was tempered with mercy, wrath with love. From this time the interest became quite general. Almost the entire community seemed to be moved, and the work went steadily forward. Weekly prayer-meetings were held simultaneously in five or six different neighborhoods, the attendance averaging from thirty to forty, and twice that number being sometimes present. The weekly meeting for inquiries was attended by upwards of one hundred, for nearly three months previous to our leaving; about one half were youth, and the rest heads of families. Some were doubtless led by mere sympathy, and others were alarmed and excited by fear of death, although we carefully refrained from exciting their fears, and often warned them of the danger of mistaking these emotions for genuine conviction of sin. But after making due allowance on this score, we were cheered with the most satisfactory evidence of deep conviction and heart-felt penitence on the part of a goodly number. I think I never witnessed more marked and satisfactory evidence of a genuine work of grace than in the cases of some of these. The reign of lust and passion was succeeded by the mild, calm sway of reason and religion. Lips that had been filled with scoffing and blasphemy, now breathed forth in broken accents the publican's prayer, 'God be merciful to me, a sinner.' One man, who had been a bold blasphomer, and was greatly hardened, when brought under conviction was so overwhelmed with a sense of the exceeding greatness and enormity of his sins as almost to despair of mercy. .He would rise in prayer-meetings and attempt to speak of the wickedness of his past life, but tears and sobs would choke his utterance and he would be unable to proceed.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"Of the results of this work I can not speak definitely, having been compelled to leave while it was yet in progress, and before sufficient time had elapsed to test the genuineness and stability of the hopes of many. A special communion service was held the Sabbath previous to our departure, when eleven were admitted to the Caurch on profession of their faith. A large number of others are under examination, many of whom give good evidence of being truly converted to God. To leave a people under such circumstances has been a great and sore trial. We parted with mutual regret and many tears, and yet they all seemed to feel that duty required us to leave them for a season, and they made the sacrifice the more cheerfully, hoping that a few months of sojourning in our native land would so far invigorate us, that we should be permitted to return and labor among them for years to come. "The following statistics present a general idea of the condition of this station :

"The average attendance upon the means of grace has been somewhat larger, for the past few months, than was reported last year. The Sabbath-school and Bibleclasses have been well sustained, both in point of numbers and interest. The amount raised by voluntary contributions has been as follows;

| For | Ministers' support, | $87 | 53 |
|-----|---------------------|------|----|
|  | general purposes, | 60 | 55 |

"By a comparison of the contributions of the past year with those of the previons one, it will be seen that there is a considerable falling off in the amount. This should not, however, be regarded as certain evidence of a diminution of interest in the objects specified. For while there may have been growing lukewarmness on the part of a few, yet I am confident the case is far otherwise with the majority. I believe the mass of our people are more than ever convinced of the value and importance of Gospel and educational privileges. And the number of those who contribute for these objects, is greater now than at any previous time since my connection with them. Several reasons may be assigned for the deficiency in the receipts of the past year. Money has been scarce, and provisions very high. The dire effects of war upon commerce, in 'breaking the staff of bread,' and taxing the necessaries of life, have been sensibly felt. The prevalence of cholera, during the latter portion of the year, not only crippled the energies, but drained the resources of many families, reducing the survivors to actual want. In some instances both parents were cut down within a few days, and the children left dependent on the charity of relatives or friends. Upwards of twenty have died of this disease, within the bounds of our congregation; four were members of the church, and heads of families. At some of the other stations it has prevailed more extensively and fatally. It is worthy of special record, as a matter for devout gratitude and thankfulness to God, that while nearly all the mission families have suffered from its attacks, none have fallen victims to its terrible power.

"While we have been scourged, we have been blessed, and I trust can truly say, 'It has been good for us that we have been afflicted.' Before the cholera made its appearance there were evident tokens of the workings of God's Spirit upon the hearts of some. An increased spirit of mayer was manifest, and here and there might be seen an anxious soul, inquiring after life and salvation. The Tuesday-evening prayermeetings, held in different neighborhoods, began to be more numerously attended, and soon became crowded and deeply interesting. The house of God was filled on the Sabbath with a solemn auditory, whose tearful eyes and anxious countenances bespoke the presence of the Holy One. The weekly meeting for inquirers was attended by all ages, from the child of eight or ten, to the gray-haired man of seventy. We hope and pray that the good work may continue. We feel that God has been better than our fears, and that he has most signally rebuked our past unbelief. That he may be glorified, as the result, has been, and still is, our constant and most earnest prayer.

"School.—The Mount Patience school has been in successful operation during most of the year. The attendance has been so large, (notwithstanding the opening of another school at Belgar,) and Bro. Moffat's labors such-for lack of competent assistance-as greatly to impair his health, and occasionally interrupt the school. We hope the Society will soon be able to meet this, and other similar demands, by furnishing additional laborers, that those already in the field need not be crushed and worn out before their time. In February last, a new school was opened, in the house built last year, at Belgar. It has been named the 'Good Hope School,' and is under the charge of Bro. A. B. Hills. He commenced with about forty pupils, and the number steadily increased until it amounted to eighty. There being no dwelling-house for the Teacher, Bro. and Sister H. have been obliged to live at Brainerd, which is nearly four miles from his school. As this is likely to be a permanent and important out-station of Brainerd, it has been thought advisable, by the Mission, to erect a dwelling-house on the premises for the accommodation of the Teacher. A colored young man has therefore been emplyed as an assistant in the school, while Bro. Hills devotes most of his time to the work of building him a

A more detailed report of the Schools will be given in another place.

Eliot.-Mr. Thompson has not sent us a statistical report of the church at this station. From the statement received, we learn that eight members of the church have died of the cholers, during the year. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson were both attacked with the disease, as was also Miss Woodcock, who has joined the Mission since the commencement of the year. All, however, recovered.

Mr. Thompson says there has been a good degree of religious interest in the church, and some in the congregation. A number of persons who, in former years. had been excommunicated from the church, give evidence of repentance, and have applied to be restored.

The school at Eliot, under the charge of Miss Woodcock, is in a flourishing condition, with the names of more than sixty children on the roll. The contributions of money at this station have been larger than last year, notwithstanding the high price of provisions and the prevalence of the cholera. The whole amount was about $265.

Mr. Thompson reiterates the request, coming from nearly every one of our Missionaries, for more teachers to supply the necessities of the younger portion of the community.

Union Station.—Mr. Wolcott, from this station, was in the United States at the commencement of the year, but returned to Jamaica soon after. He reports the death of eleven members of the church at Hermitage and Devon Pen.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The religious interest at this station has been as great as in any former year. Eight persons have been added to the church at Hermitage, and twenty at Devon Pen. And the interest and prosperity of the school have been greatly increased.

The pecuniary contributions have been affected by the afflictions of the people, and only a part of them have been reported. These amount to $124.44.

A difficulty of obtaining land, in such portions as the people could buy and pay for, has been greatly felt, by the people about Chesterfield. Mr. Wolcott has sought to remedy this, by purchasing a large quantity and dividing it among them, in such quantities as they could pay for. A portion of the land thus purchased will be retained, and made use of for the benefit of the people generally. The Mission are anxious to take as many of the colored children as they can, under their entire control. Their strongest hope of benefiting the rising generation lies in this.

Oberlin Station,—The church at this station has also lost some of its members from the prevailing scourge. Mr. Way reports as follows:

Our Sabbath-school and Bible-class numbers about 100. Our week-day school has been discontinued for the want of a teacher for the last four months. We are still destitute.

We have passed through sore trials during the year, but through mercy have been sustained and the church has been preserved. Our hope is still in God.

Providence and Brandon Hill.—The report of these stations is given together and is subjoined. The school at Providence has been under the care of Miss Hicks. In accordance with an arrangement made with her when she went to Jamaica, she will return this fall to the United States, to spend a year here.

The church at this station now numbers forty members. Two have been added during the year. One has been dismissed by letter; four have been cut off, and three have died. Besides these, seven members of the congregation have died. The church at Brandon Hill numbers twenty-two members. One member of the church has died during the year; and one child that belonged to the congregation.

The average attendance of the congregation at both stations is about the same that it was a year ago.

The church and congregation at this station have contributed,

| For Minister's support, | $22 | 62 |
|--|------|----|
| " Teacher's, " | 20 | |
| " Church purposes, | 18 | 60 |
| And have given 55 days' labor on the station, which, at 25 cts. per day, would be, | 13 | 75 |
| | $75 | 61 |

The church and congregation at Brandon Hill have contributed for the minister's support. $26.19.

We have had forty weeks schools during the year. Miss Hicks taught thirty-three weeks, and Mrs. Hall seven. We are now without a teacher. The school has numbered 70 scholars in all. Some of the time there have been over 50 in daily attendance. The average daily attendance has been 33. A school is much needed at Brandon Hill. A few of the children from there have attended this school, the distance being five miles.

I still preach at Brandon Hill every Sabbath morning, unless providentially prevented. We sometimes feel like desponding amid the many discouragements with which we have to contend, and in view of the slow progress which we make. Yet we can not look back over the past without feeling that our labors have not been wholly in vain. There is a gradual development of the truth in the minds of the people of our congregations, and we see some of its appropriate fruits.

There seem to be two classes among the members of our churches. One class who are religious because they must be or fail of heaven. Another class who have embraced the truth, and who yield their hearts and lives in obedience to it, as far as they are able to understand it. Of the former class are some who have for years stood at the door of the church, knocking for admittance. But as we toil in this moral desert, it is refreshing to find a few who seem to have drunk of that living water, which is in them "a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Golden Vale.—A church of twelve members was formed at this station under the care of Mr. Olds, about the beginning of the year. Two more have since been added. The station has labored under embarrassment during the year, in consequence of being deprived of its most central place of worship. The use of a house for this purpose had been granted to the Mission by the owner of an estate there, with the expectation, on the part of the missionaries, that they might occupy it two years. Early in the year the owner required the possession of it. Mr. Olds then wrote:

"You will be desirous of knowing what arrangements we are making for future labors. Our people have never manifested so much interest in having the Gospel and its kindred institutions among them as now.

"There are three permanent settlements about Golden Vale. We now propose to have a chapel (temporary) in each of these places, and the people are taking hold with great spirit to accomplish the work. In the most permanent settlement, we purpose to have a building completed by Christmas, that will answer for both chapel and school-room; and we have the promise that fifty children will be in readiness for the school. I now preach at these places, alternating my labors so as to be at two of them each Sabbath. By this plan I shall not only reach all that I did before, but get many hearers that would not walk as far as Golden Vale. My present conviction is, that this arrangement will be the best permanent one for this station; and that we shall see ere long that He who does all things well has guided in this matter, and that in this instance he 'will make the wrath of man to praise him, and the remainder thereof he will restrain.'

At the close of the year, Mr. Olds reports, that small chapels have been erected at two of these neighborhoods, one of which would seat about 150 persons, and the other half that number. He adds:

"The same cause that deprived us of our chapel, also took away our schoolroom, and as a consequence our school was suspended from October to April, when Mrs. Olds opened a school at our residence, with about twenty scholars.
This number was soon increased to about forty. About the same time, we opened a school in the mountains, at one of the little chapels before referred to. We employed a native teacher, a young man of respectable attainments, and of a good moral character. This school numbers about forty-five on the list, and about thirty in daily attendance.

"Schools are much needed in this parish; there being a population of about 8000; and yet, during most of the time we have labored there, no school beside our own has existed, if we except about twenty private scholars. Nor is there any good prospect that better advantages will be afforded for the education of the rising generation, unless the same stream of benefactions that has made this small beginning shall continue to flow."

SCHOOLS.

The members of this Mission have long felt the importance of training native teachers to meet the increasing domand for instruction in the island of Jamaica. A school for this purpose was commenced at Brainerd, some years ago, under very factorable circumstances, but was soon after suspended, in consequence of some very painful developments then made. This subject has again come under the consideration of the Mission, and it was unanimously voted to recommend to the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association, to reöpen the High-School at Brainerd, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. In communicating this vote, the Secretary of the mosting wrote:

"It is proper that I should state that the present flourishing condition of our schools, together with the unusual interest recently awakened in the minds of the people on the subject of education, have led to this action. We are more than ever convinced that we see in the very encouraging prospects now opening for the prosecution of the work of instructing the youth of this island, the finger of Providence pointing to a department of Christian effort too long and sadly neglected by all classes of missionaries here. It seems to me that the idea of reaping present fruit is too much dwelt upon by many of the friends of missions, to the neglect of sowing the seed for a future harvest. How often do we hear the missionary spoken of as one who is entering a harvest-field to reap the ripening grain. True, he shall reap and bring home his sheaves with rejoicing—but not ordinarily, until he has gone forth weeping, bearing the precious seed, and sowing it beside all waters, waiting with faith and patience for the ripening harvest. Is there not danger that, in our anxiety to be cheered by present results, we may overlook and sacrifice the more permanent and substantial fruits of our labor? Should we not rather regard the heathen world as a dark and almost unbroken vullderness—covered with a monstrous growth of sin and wickedness, into which the missionary is to enter as a pioneer, to clear off, break up, sow, and cultivate, until the wilderness is reclaimed and 'become a fruitful field, and the wilderness shall blessom as the rose?'

"In reference to the opening of a Normal School for teachers here, we can furnish fifteen or twenty young men and women (from our families and elsewhere) who bid fair to be useful, and whom we are anxious to prepare for missionaries and teachers. We think, if the plan meets the approbation of the Executive Committee, that we can make arrangements for opening the school next April, (D. V.) The large day and Sabbath-schools here would afford an opportunity for those preparing to teach to gain some experience, and to be doing good while pursuing their studies. Such a school would also afford an active stimulus to both parents and children, to encourage them to go on with the work of education. It would be a mark to aim at."

The schools connected with the Mission are under the care of a voluntary school association, formed by the missionaries, for the double purpose of promoting the cause of education, and leading the people to take an interest in and support them. The following is the Report of this Association:

"In presenting to the Executive Committee the Second Annual Report of our school organization, it affords us much pleasure to be able to express our increased confidence in the wisdom and utility of the steps that led to its formation. We are more than ever convinced, that it will prove an efficient auxiliary in our missionary work. It is already giving character and permanency to our school operations, in the estimation of those around us, while it has served greatly to augment the interest felt by our own people, and to increase their efforts to bring their children under the influence of wholesome, thorough instruction. Our anniversary meeting was held, this year, at Eliot Station, August 2, and was largely attended by both parents and children from the different stations, and also by those not connected with our Mission. It was an occasion of much interest and profit. A brief opening address was made by the Secretary, on the character of the education required by the people of Jamaica, and the kind of teachers needed.

"The atternoon session was mostly occupied in listening to the Reports of the Teachers and Directors of the several schools connected with the Association, of [&]quot;The above statistics do not rightly represent the present numerical strength of our corps of teachers. Four vacancies actually exist. Mrs. Olds, Miss Hicks, and Miss Stuart are now in the United States. Mr. Sims is no longer employed as a teacher. These vacancies should be promptly filled, or much ground will be lost. The Association would therefore appeal, most wrgently, to the friends of the Mission to furnish us with pious young men and women for teachers, and with the means for supporting them. We greatly desire to extend ous operations into dark and destitute neighborhoods around us, where many are calling loudly for instruction. We would gladly double the number of our schools, had we the means at our command, or in prospect. While we are anxiously striving to make our schools, as fast as possible, independent and self-supporting, yet we feel that it would be unreasonable to expect them to be entirely sustained on the ground, while the mass of the people are poor and ignorant, and the value of education is but little understood or appreciated. It nover has been done on other missionary fields, nor will it be done in Jamaica for some years to come. Our people are doing something, and they will yet do much more. They are trying to help themselves, but they still need aid and encouragement from abroad. Shall they not have it? They are feeble children—weakly and crippled—having been well-nigh strangled in the iron womb of slavery—and they need to be upheld and led by a foster hand, until able to walk alone. There are difficulties to be grappled with and overcome, in establishing and sustaining schools in Jamaica, such as few can realize, unless they understand, from personal observation, the actual state of things. Still, good schools are a sine quanon, in our missionary work. It can not be successfully prosecuted without them. Church and school, minister and teacher, education, and religion must go hand in hand. A neglect of this principle of action has been, it seems to us, one great reason why the fruits of missionary labor, in many parts of the world, have not been more permanent and abundant. If we mistake not, the history of missions settles this point beyond dispute, that wherever schools have been most numerously established and best sustained, there (ceteris paribus) such efforts have yielded the most abundant harvest. We plead, then, for aid in enlarging and sustaining our school operations. We have witnessed the degraded and almost hopeless condition of the great mass of the adult population of this Island, and we have set our hearts upon the work of rescuing the youth from like degradation and ruin. Is it not a great and good work? And will American Christians refuse to aid liberally in carrying it forward? Are there no young men and women in the churches, who feel prompted to imitate their Master by going abroad to do good, who would love to share in the toil and self-denial of instructing these dark-browed children of ignorance and sin? If so, let them come, and verily, they shall not lose their reward.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"As the Committee are aware, we have for some years been planting and seeking to establish a Normal and Industrial School. Hitherto our degire has remained unaccomplished, for lack of means and a suitable location. Recently, however, the providence of God has seemed to open the way for securing a most desirable locality, for a merely nominal price. Richmond Estate, lying between Eliot and Brainerd, and containing upwards of 1000 acres, with good buildings, and an excellent water privilege, has been offered for sale. With the unanimous approval of the Mission, its purchase has been negotiated for, for the sum of $2400. In taking this step we have counted upon the liberality and cooperation of our friends and the friends of Jamaica at home. We have been encouraged by assurances of aid, and we do hope the results will not be such as to lead any to suppose that we have reckoned without our host! We know there are large-hearted men in the American churches, who love to devise liberal things, where great good is likely to result, and who would not hesitate to open their hands and give freely to this object, could they but see its importance as we do. To such we make our appeal. We have no means for raising the necessary funds here, save by borrowing money at a high rate of interest. But we have put our hands to this enterprise, and shall not look back. The funds must be raised! Who will aid us? If individuals can not be found, who are willing to donate the funds for the benefit of the school, a loan (for which good security will be given) will be thankfully received. Donations for the above object may be sent to Lowis Tappan, Esq., New-York, and any communications relative to the subject may be addressed to either of the undersigned, and sent to 48 Beekman street, New-York.

"By order of Association, S. T. Wolcott, Chairman.

BED LAKE STATION. ... Missionaries. Rev. S. G. Whight, Robert Layerty, E. W. Carver, O. A. Coe, Miss. Wright, Mrs. Layerty, Mrs. Carver, Mrs. Carver, O. A. Coe, Miss. Red Lake Station.—Mr. Bardwell, who has recently visited the Mission, makes the following Report of this station. Many, if not all, of the children in the Boarding-School spoken of are sustained by the payment of twenty-five dollars for each, by some Christian friends in the United States. Those who thus undertake their support will find a reward in what Mr. B. reports concerning them:

"The Boarding-School at Red Lake is in a prosperous condition, and gives promise of great usefulness.

"The School has been taught through the whole year, except a short time in sugar-making. The number of scholars boarded during the year, has been sixteen, but is now increased to twenty. The branches taught have been reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography. With two or three exceptions, these children progress as rapidly as children in civilized lands.

"The boys are all required to labor, before and after school, and the girls are required to labor in the various branches of house and needle-work. All appeared cheerful and contented, and manifest no disposition to return to the lodge. The people are beginning to feel more interest in the school. A pretty general desire has been awakened among the people to have their children educated. Many more children might be gathered into the school if we had suitable buildings for their accommodation, and the necessary help. Bro. Wright says:

their accommodation, and the necessary help. Bro. Wright says:

"'We are now fully satisfied, that the only effectual way to elevate an Indian child, is to take him into the bosom of the family, and treat him, as far as possible, as an own child. In this way only, can his affections and confidence be secured, and that deep-seated prejudice against the white man, which is propagated from parent to child, be eradicated.'

"It was, indeed, very gratifying and encouraging to me, to witness the improvement of those children. If those who are contributing their $25 annually to sustain the school, could see the contrast between the children aided by their benefactions, and those who remain with their parents; or could realize the wonderful transformation of character which has taken place in them, as a result of their benefactions, I am sure they would much sooner double their contributions. than see them placed back again in the lodge. Three of the scholars were hopefully converted last winter, and have united with the church. They appear to be devoted Christians. One young woman, (Lucy,) who has been for some years in the Mission, and is an exemplary Christian, has recently married a respectable and industrious white man. James B. Taylor, who is a brother of Lucy, has for a number of years, been anxious to visit the white man's country, and spend a few years in study. He is a professor of religion, a very steady, industrious young man, now nineteen years of age. He seems to have been entirely transformed, and perfectly loathes the heathen character and habits of his people. For years, he has been unwilling to associate with the heathen boys of his age, and hear their fitthy conversation: and he was the more anxious to come to the white man's country, that he might avoid such associations. Some good friends had made pledges toward his support for a few years, and I have brought him home with me, hoping that he may spend a few years with us, and ultimately become a useful missionary among his people. He seems to appreciate what the missionaries have done for him. One day, as we were passing a lodge of almost naked filthy Indians, James said, 'But for the missionaries, I should have been like them.'

"Four have been added to the church at Red Lake, during the year. The present number of native members is ten.

"The Indians are making some progress (though slow) in civilization. Instead of finding them starving, as in past years, I found them abundantly supplied with food. Some families have ten, some twenty, and some fifty bushels of corn. Bro. Wright says, 'We have not heard the cry of hunger in this band for the last four years. These Indians are in fact now raising more than a supply for their own consumption. The missionaries have for a number of years greatly needed some other means of grinding their wheat and corn, and sawing their lumber, than doing it by hand. I made an effort last year to raise the funds necessary to build a mill, and succeeded so far as to warrant the undertaking. They have the frame erected for a grist and saw-mill, and the dam built. Most of the labor, however, has to be performed by the missionaries themselves. The iron is now on the ground, and they hope to have the mill in opperation this fall. Bro. Lafferty is the only mechanic connected with the Mission, and consequently his labors are more abundant than his strength. He greatly needs, and must have help. If a man who is able to turn his hand to different kinds of mechanical work, can be found, who is willing to give himself to the work of doing good, he may find there an ample field for labor. If a man can not be found who is willing to give his time, we must hire one for two or three years.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"A school-house and barn must be built another year. The missionaries all need new and more comfortable and commodious dwellings. Help to do such work can not be obtained in that country, and consequently must be sent from the States. They need also a man whose business shall be to take charge of the boys out of school, to arrange their work, and work with them. It is important as fir as practicable, to keep the children of the Mission from associating with the other Indian children, and thus avoid their contaminating influence and example."

Cass Lake.—The Indians at this station are much less favorably, located than the Red Lake band. There is very little land favorable to cultivation within their reach, and consequently but little to encourage their efforts for temporal improvement. There has, notwithstanding, been a marked change for the better in their circumstances.

There have been at the station some apparent manifestations of the presence of the spirit of the Lord, and two have been added to the church.

The school has been taught forty-six weeks during the year. The number of scholars is twelve. They have now seven boarding-scholars in the school, who have made good progress.

By the advice of the Mission, Mr. and Mrs. Fisher will remove to Red Lake, to take charge of the school there, and another family will be greatly needed for Cass Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have charge of the Mission Farm at Belle Prairie, and attend to the transportation and storage of supplies for the stations above. They have two of Bro. Coe's children, and a half-breed girl in their family. The war spirit is very prevalent throughout the territory, this season. Several war parties of Ojibues have been out to fight the Sioux. One sealp had been taken, and two had been lost by the Ojibues, when Mr. Bardwell left the territory.

St. Joseph's Station, Pembina Co.—This station is located at what is there called the Pembina Mountains, on the Pembina River, a tributary of Red River, and about thirty miles from its mouth. Mr. Spencer says:

"The situation is a delightful one, affording wood, water, and pasturage in abundance; and sufficiently high to be above the fear of inundation—the great drawback to the Red River country. The town is laid out one mile square; divided into convenient building-lots, with farm-lots adjoining, commencing at the foot of the mountains, which run north-west and south-east. As nearly as I can estimate the population at the present time, four hundred reside in the village and immediate vicinity, while as many more are located along the river, within the distance of five miles. They are mostly half-bloods or of French descent, and Roman Catholics."

The Mission was commenced there at the earnest solicitation of some of the inhabitants, although sternly opposed by the priest, who is described as a man of energy, and possessing great influence over them.

"Before our arrival," says Mr. Spencer, "he began to caution his people in respect to us, and since then, from time to time he has repeated his warnings. We have, however, taken no notice of these things, but quietly kept on the even tenor of our way, assuredly gathering that the truth will ultimately triumph, and strong in the belief that by its transforming power and heavenly light, we shall be permitted to see the shackles of ignorance fall, and the night of moral darkness disappear from these minds. That this would be, under God, a work of time, requiring great faith and prayer, and persevering effort, progressing from small beginnings, we have never doubted."

Notwithstanding the opposition of the priest, and his threatened excommunication, with all the woes and penalties annexed to it, some of the parents send their children to the school at the Mission, and some of the children are placed as boarding scholars under the entire care of the missionaries. They have as many of this class as they can possibly take.

The operations of this station have been very much retarded by the absence of Mr. Barnard, consequent upon the death of his wife. Mrs. Barnard died, Oct. 25, 1853, at the Selkirk Settlement, British America, to which she had been removed for medical treatment, about three weeks before. She was, at the time of her death, 35 years of age, and had been a missionary among the Ojibue Indians ten years. As she had lived the life of a Christian, so she died a Christian's death, trusting in Christ for salvation, and calmly seeking his aid. At her request, Mr. Barnard, after her death, brought his children to the United States, and has but just commenced his return to the Mission.

Mr. Smith, who has acted as an assistant missionary at this station has also left it, the whole charge thus devolving on Mr. and Mrs. Spencer. Every thing being new, the attention of Mr. S. has necessarily been much turned toward external matters, but a beginning has been made. Six children have been taken into the mission family, and eight others regularly attend the school, from the village.

The fact that so many parents dare the powers of the priest, and notwithstanding the terrors of excommunication, intrust their children with the missionaries for Protestant education, encourages them to hope that their influence for good is being felt, and that God will permit them to overcome the prejudices of the people. Mr. S. writes:

"I am looking forward with no little desire and anxiety to the time when the truth shall be brought to bear upon their hearts in saying power. It has been remarked by an intelligent man here, who was himself reared a Catholic, and well qualified, I should think, to judge, that this people are by no means strongly prejudiced in favor of Romanism, and that, if properly instructed and enlightened, they would favorably receive the Protestant doctrines. But I do not place any great stress upon this opinion; for the more I see of the workings of this master-piece of Satan's devices, the less do I flatter myself that the difficulties will be few, or the struggle an easy one. The thought, however, is ever full of encouragement and consolation, one in which the enemies of Jehovah and righteousness can not share, that our cause is the cause of the mighty God of Jacob, and that the truth is powerful and will prevail."

One leading man in the place has been hopefully converted since the establishment of the Mission there. The station greatly needs the assistance of one or two more Mission families; but Mr. Barnard says he has sought for them in vain, since he came to the States. None can yet be found willing to go there.

SANDWICH ISLANDS - MAKAWAO.

Missionaries.-Rev. J. S. Green, Mrs. Green.

Our laborious and self-denying Missionary is still continued in his field. His connection with the American Missionary Association is not one of dependence, but of sympathy of feeling and identity of purpose. He was, we believe, the first missionary at the Sandwich Islands who relinquished his claim for support from a foreign body, and cast himself upon the affections and contributions of a people whom he had aided in raising from a condition of heathenism. Although sometimes called to endure privations, he has ever felt satisfied of the propriety of this course, and his example has now been followed by others. The Executive Committee have been happy in supplying Mr. Green with some things that can best be procured in this country; but in pecuniary matters, for the last few years, the Christian and benevolent operations of this country are in debt to his people; they having given for Free Missions and Anti-Slavery purposes more than they have received.

Soon after the formation of the American Missionary Association, Mr. Green placed himself and his mission in connection with it, that he might thus bear a practical testimony in favor of its principles, and show his sympathies in behalf of the oppressed in the United States, while laboring for the conversion of men in foreign lands. He has no sympathy with missionary bodies that will not "stand aloof from the oppressors of their fellow-men, and cease to recognize them as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ," and can hold no connection with them until they "shall refuse to admit, knowingly, the gains of oppression into the treasury of the Lord."

We have not yet received from Mr. Green a statistical report of his labors for the year, but deduct the following items from letters received from time to time.

There are five stations where the preaching of the Gospel is pretty regularly maintained, and three out-stations. At the commencement of the year, the church at Makawao contained 549 members in regular standing, and that at Keokea 201, making an aggregate of 150. On the first Sabbath of the present year, more than one hundred united with one of these churches, and about two hundred with another

The church at Keokea has been deprived of its pastor, Rev. David Malo, a native Hawaiian, who was ordained and installed over the congregation there in Sept., 1852. Fourteen months afterwards he ceased from his labors. Mr. Green says of him:

"He was an under-shepherd of great industry and skill, loving, faithful, and devoted. He was born at Kona on Hawaii, about the year 1735. Of course, he was born a heathen. As a heathen, he lived till he was some twenty-five years old. He well understood the meaning of Paul's words to the Corinthians, a passage from which I have heard him speak: "Ye know that ye were Gentlies, carried away unto these dumb idole, swen as ye were led." He grew up to manhood, in all the ignorance and sin of his forefathers, and in addition, was becoming profane and intemperate. Mr. Richards found him at Lahains, on the establishment of the mission at that place. He bedrome connected with a small school, taught by Mrs. Richards; and on her talking with him on the sin and folly of intemperance, he abandoned, at once and for ever, the practice of drinking. He united with the church at Lahains, in the spring of 1828."

He was licensed to preach in 1843, and nine years after, settled at Keokea. His people greatly mourned his loss. By the death of Mr. Malo, the church at Keokea again reverts to Mr. Green's care,

In some parts of the Islands, the influence of Romanism and Mormonism has been greatly injurious. Speaking of the field of his former labors, Mr. Green says:

"Five or six years ago, it was thought to be one of the most prosperous on the Island. There were a few Romanists there who met for worship in a small grasshouse, but the great mass of the people worshipped at our house. When I left them in 1843, I knew of no native who drank beer or other intoxicating drinks, and no church-member who was known to smoke tobacco. The Romanists now have a good-sized stone meeting-house, and the Mormons a large grass one. More people attend these two places of worship than at the regular place so dear to good old Hawaii and Bartimeus. In a part of the district, there are reported to be 303 who drink, and more than a thousand who use tobacco. Of those who drink, more than nine tenths must be natives."

Among the causes of consolation, Mr. Green records the gratifying fact that no one among his people had gone from them either to the Romanists or the Mormons.

Labors of the Year.—Mr. Green has been laid aside from the regular labors of the Sabbath but one day in the year. These labors have been directed to break up indolent habits among the people, to bring them under the influence of higher motives than they have hitherto known, "and especially to lead them to the Lord Jesus Christ for pardon and eternal life." In addition to the divinely-instituted means, the preaching of the Gospel, he has devoted the greater part of every Wednesday to teaching. His object is to lead the people away from their groveling associations, and teach them to think. The people are interested in these exercises, and some of them come great distances to attend them.

The following is Mr. Green's summary of his labors, and their results:

LABORS OF THE YEAR.

These have been so nearly like those of former years, that I can scarcely add an additional item, and say it is new. Our common object in toiling for distant strangers, whether pagan, half-civilized, or Christian, but feeble and destitute nations, is to break up habits of indolence, to rouse the mind to reflection, to furnish motives for living of a higher kind than have ever been presented to their attention, and especially to lead them to the Lord Jesus Christ for pardon and eternal life. This object I have steadily pursued. To break up indolent habits, I have labored both by precept and oxample. The people here need "line upon line, and precept upon precept," to awaken them to a sense of the importance of labor. All the motives to industry which I can draw from the word of God, and from the nature and necessities of man, I have presented and urged. I have also taught them by example to put a higher value upon their time, to husband their scanty resources, and to labor with their own hands. Though I find it slow work to eradicate the roots of indolence from their hearts, still I am thankful that I am permitted to see some good results.

To rouse the mind to reflection, and to furnish higher motives to living than have hitherto been presented, I have, with the aid of my native teachers, some of whom are faithful and skillful, done not a little to have all the children taught reading, arithmetic, geography, and writing. In addition, the greater part of Wednesday I devote to teaching. I attend to geography and the study of the maps, church-history and moral philosophy, comparative history, etc. I also improve these days for communicating as much thought as possible, that I may teach all who attend, to break up their groveling modes of thinking and acting, and give them higher motives of living. I think much of the exercises of this day, and the happy results are constantly seen. Some come more than twelve miles to attend this exercise; many eight miles or more. Had we all the helps that we need, I should be more encouraged; and were all my fellow-laborers to spend one such day during the week, I should have more hope than I now have of the salvation of the people politically, or as an independent nation.

To lead the people to the Lord Jesus Christ for pardon and eternal life, the one great and important business of the missionary of the cross, Lhave labored to give to every one a portion in due season. Only one Sabbath have I been laid entirely aside from the labors of the pulpit. At sun-rising I meet with a small congregation, and read with them the five chapters for the day in the regular course of Bible-reading; after which, I remark on some portion of what we thus read. I still meet with the main part of the congregation at Kalanikalma, five miles distant, where I have a Sabbath-school Bible-class, and where I preach at noon.

Saturday evenings, I meet a small number of the church living near our house. The monthly concert of prayer, the concert for schools, for scamen, and for the enslaved, we still observe. These have been the ordinary means of grace which we have richly enjoyed during the year.

On the death of Mr. Malo at Keokea, that portion of the field reverted back to me until another pastor should be obtained.

But amidst the labors of the year, I have had many and rich consolations. God has been gracious to us and to his people. With regard to the scourge, the small-pox, which so greatly afflicted the nation, we had only nine cases and three deaths. The people have, on the whole, been favored with good health, and fewer have died this year than in former ones. We have some defections in the Church, but fewer cases than ordinarily. I think of no one who has left us for the Romanists or the Mormons. On the whole, we have much reason to say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us. Let us be glad and rejoice in him. Oh! give thanks to the Lord, for his mercy endureth for ever."

CANADA MISSION.

Teachers .- Miss Theodosia Lyons, Miss Mary C. Bealls, and Miss Abigail B. Martin.

The Executive Committee have not found it practicable to increase the number of their missionaries in Canada, hence their expenditures have been confined to the support of a single school, under the care of Miss Lyons and Miss Bealls at the commencement of the year, and of Miss Lyons and Miss Martin at its close. Miss Bealls left Canada when the period of her first engagement was completed, and Miss Martin's health is such that she will probably soon leave. No detailed report of the school has been given.

In a former report, the Executive Committee stated that the Canada Mission was one of the most uninviting fields of labor under their care. A longer experience has not tended to change this opinion. The victims of oppression who have escaped but recently from the house of bondage, having seen the ministers of religion in alliance with the oppressor, prostituting his office to the support of wrong, have had cultivated within them feelings of suspicion not easily overcome. These feelings have been fostered and taken advantage of by a few evil-disposed and designing men, who have been willing to keep the people in ignorance to subserve their own purposes.

Missionaries of a superior class are greatly needed for the missionary work in Canada; men of controlling intellect, sound judgment, and warm hearts, so deeply imbued with the spirit of Christ that they will be willing to make the needed sacrifices, take up the cross, and labor there amidst the contradiction of sinners against themselves, till God shall give them the victory. If such can be found, the Executive Committee will gladly undertake their support; and we doubt not they will ultimately obtain a rich reward.

SIAM MISSION, BANGKOK, SIAM,

Missionaries.—Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D., Rev. L. B. Lane, M.D., Rev. J. Silshy, Mrs. Bradley, Mrs. Lane, and Mrs. Silshy. Total, 6.

About the commencement of the year under review, intelligence was received from the Siam Mission, that although missionaries resident at Bangkok had perfect liberty in preaching the Gospel there, and in travelling for that purpose into every part of the kingdom, it was yet uncertain whether they would be permitted to establish a residence, and commence a mission in other cities, or in parts of the kingdom remote from Bangkok. One of the two missionaries previously under appointment for that mission had been designated for the mission to the Copts, and the Executive Committee deemed it inexpedient to send the other family alone, until some questions had been settled that might affect the decision of the Execut. ive Committee as to the extent to which they would enlarge their operations in that field.

The labors of our missionaries in Siam have been continued through the year much as in former years; but less attention has been given to the preparation of books for the Siamese, and fewer books have been given to them. Our missionaries have been convinced that latterly, at least, the people have made but little good use of the books that have been distributed. More attention has, therefore, been given to direct efforts to preach the Gospel. Dr. Lane has made frequent trips away from Bangkok into different parts of the kingdom, for this purpose. Dr. Bradley has confined his labors more closely to Bangkok. At the commencement of the year, both Mr. and Mrs. Silsby were suffering seriously in health, and removed for a season to Singapore, to try the effect of a change of air. While there, the health of both improved, and they returned to Bangkok about the 1st of March. Prof. Silsby soon found his health failing again, and becoming convinced that neither he nor Mrs. Silsby could enjoy such health there as to permit of their laboring effectively, he concluded it to be his duty immediately to return to the United States. He left there in the spring, and is expected to arrive here some time in November.

Before Mr. Silsby left Bangkok, the Mission passed the following resolutions, and forwarded them to the Society's rooms:

Resolved, 1. That we express our judgment, that the providences of God indicate that the American Missionary Association should support a strong mission among the Siamese.

That relatively too much importance has been attached to the work of making and distributing books among the Siamese. The great work to be done at present is to preach Christ and him crucified among them.

The Executive Committee have not yet taken any action on the recommendation of the Mission, and probably will not, until the arrival of Prof. Silsby, as it is supposed he may communicate intelligence relative to the Mission and its prospects that the Committee should be in possession of, before deciding whether any, or if any, how strong a reinforcement should be sent to that mission.

It is difficult to understand the providence of God in relation to Siam, and the cause of Protestant missions in connection with that people.

The government is a despotism; and is in the hands of those who have entered the kingly office from the priesthood. The prevailing religion is Buddhism, a compound of infidelity and superstition. The government is intimately connected with it, and derives from it much of its support. And yet Protestant missionaries have, for more than a score of years, been permitted to live and labor in Bangkok, multiply for the Siamese, who are nearly all readers, arguments against their superstitions, and openly to preach the gospel of Christ in the ears of all who would hear. The missionary teachers have been invited to instruct, and are now actually instructing, in the palaces of the king, freely speaking their sentiments and urging their doctrines, and free liberty is given to them all to go everywhere proclaiming the lost condition of the people, and exhorting them to fly to Christ for salvation, and yet with scarcely any visible success among the native Siamese. Buddhism maintains its unlimited and undisturbed sway, or, if yielding at all, yielding only to infidelity, while it fearlessly, as though proud of its conscious strength, encourages the residence of its enemies at its very seat.

The missionary is very frequently made aware that many are acquainted with the letter of Christianity, the depravity of the race, the gift of Christ, his divinity and his atonement, and the necessity of repentance and faith; but the influences of the Holy Spirit are withheld, and the heart of the missionary is made sad by the conviction that the knowledge of the people will only increase their condemnation. The following extract abridged from one of Dr. Lane's letters will illustrate this:

"I met a man to whom I gave a gospel yesterday, and inquired if he had read it. 'Yes,' said he, 'I have read it, but am unable to discover what sin is. If it had said. Do not do this and do not do that, and put down its prohibitions in order. it would be well; but as it is, I see nothing.' I was giving an exhortation to him and a few others who stood by, when an old priest came along and stopped close to me. He listened for a moment or two, when he interrupted me, saying, 'Teacher! teacher! let me preach! I can speak the Siamese language better than you, perhaps. I think they do not well understand you.' He then turned, and gave a most eloquent and spiritual exhortation for about ten minutes. He at the first laid down many of the ground-doctrines of Christianity. The eternity of God, the depravity of man, redemption by Christ, and heaven or hell at last. Then he raised his voice as if to mimic the teacher's, and urged all who heard him to be wise betimes, and lay fast hold of such gracious provisions. 'To-day,' said he, 'take; for to-morrow will be what kind who can tell?' I listened to him with surprise, and was delighted with his eloquence. When he had concluded, he turned te me with an air of superiority, and said, 'Teacher, can you contend with me for the mastery in preaching?' I replied, 'You have spoken well, and if you had but a heart to believe and do as you have said. 'Ah! said he, 'not yet, teacher; not yet. It is the nature of man to have some religion, and every country has its kind. For you, teacher, to try and change the Siamese religion is fost labor. They will not take. ' He then said, 'I will take leave.' And as he went, all the rest followed his example. I turned and sat down under a tree, with a sigh in my heart and a tear in my eye, and thought, Oh! if I could speak in the Siameso tongue like that man, then I could preach to some effect. Oh! that God would raise up preachers from among this people, and let me work again in my native tongue. I was feeling very sadly on this account, but I arose and went on, comforting myself with these words: 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord.' What if this priest shall horeafter rightly use his knowledge, and die in the faith, and rest with us at last in Abraham's bosom? Gracious Lord, I would then say, I thank thee that unto me, who am the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unscarchable riches of Christ."

How long shall things remain thus? How long will the Spirit be withheld? Is that whole generation given up to blindness that they may perish? and will there be a manifestation of grace only when the children are in the place of their fathers? or is God only delaying until the way is prepared for a mighty work, that shall sweep away every thing and every power that would now, doubtless, stretch forth its hand to quench in blood the first kindlings of Christian fire in the hearts of the Siamese? These, and similar questions, press with force upon the thoughts of every one laboring for the welfare of so singular a people.

Mrs. Bradley, in connection with some of the ladies of the other missions, still teaches in the palace. She occasionally visits from house to house among the Siamese, speaking of the things that pertain to the kingdom. It is probable that her labors among the lowly may first meet a reward; although Mr. Mattoon, of the Presbyterian Mission, writes thus hopefully of an inmate of the palace. He says, that a princess, who had died suddenly of the cholers, had before, by her apparent interest in Christianity, given a fresh and hopeful impulse to the work of instruction in the palace, prosecuted by the ladies of the mission. She had once said, "I and my house will serve God, and go to heaven and be with you there." Of the sincerity and extent of her faith nothing could be positively judged; and as she had only heathen attendants in the hour of death, nothing could be learned of her last hours, except that she spoke but little, and seemed not to be conscious of the extremity of her danger.

The following little incident, taken from another of Dr. Lane's letters, shows that the people have some idea of God as an overruling providence. Dr. Lane and family had just passed through a season of imminent peril by water. He says:

"One of our boatmen is a Siamese lad, of about eighteen years. He lately came in from the country, and entered my employ. I found him entirely ignorant of the Bible and of our religion, and consequently took extra pains to instruct him. Among other things, I endeavored to impress his mind with the Bible truth, that God becomes the father of those who love and serve him, and is near to protect them under all circumstances of danger or trial. A moment ago, I stopped my pen to listen to a conversation he is now having with the stranger, at the head of the boat. After he had quite glowingly described the events of the storm of vesterday, the stranger replied, "Twas fearful truly. Did not your heart fall with fear?" 'No.' he replies. 'I was sick, that's all: I was not afraid. The God of the teachers saved us. It is written in their sacred book, that the God of the teachers takes care of his followers all the same as a father takes care of his children; and if it's like that, why be afraid? The teacher tells me that it is so truly, and perhaps it is. At least, I see that if their God had not helped us in the storm, we should all have been drowned.' The stranger replied, with an exclamation of surprise and admiration, 'And what sort of a God is it that can help when a hurricane is

One great defect in the Siamese character is the absence of all sense of responsibility to a higher than an earthly power. Though conscious that their hearts and their lives are all wrong, there is yet no sense of guilt. The gift of the Spirit, to convince of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment to come, appears not yet to have been made manifest among them. Our missionaries entreat that prayer for the descent of the Spirit may earnestly be made.

About the middle of January, 1853, the Executive Committee became aware that a difference of opinion relative to the essential character of Siamese servitude or slavery, existed among our missionaries in Siam; and that in consequence thereof, they had differed in action, on the subject of employing the subjects of that servitude to perform the needful work of their families or the mission. The first intimation of this nature that reached us, was contained in the following resolution passed by the majority of the Mission and transmitted to us:

"Resolved, That in carrying out the principles of our Association, as also our own principles, in reference to that form of slavery that exists here, we can neither employ master nor slave, to aid us in any form of labor, under any condition whatever."

This resolution was accompanied by another, disavowing, on the part of the majority of the Mission, all participation in the employment of the builder who erected Dr. Bradley's house. The Committee immediately communicated to Dr. Bradley their disapproval of what he had done, as an apparent violation of the principles of the Association, and received from him satisfactory assurances that he had not intentionally or knowingly violated those principles, and that although he did not regard Siamese servitude as slavery, he would carefully endeavor to comply with the expressed views of the Executive Committee. Having thus, as they supposed, settled this matter in full accordance with the principles of the Association, and guarded against even a seeming violation of them, the Committee did not feel called upon to report it to the Association, or make it public. During the last year, a misapprehension of the case has obtained a wide publicity, calculated to injure the Mission and the missionary cause, and the Executive Committee felt called upon to make a public explanation relative to it.

It is due to Dr. Bradley to say, that he says he has carefully studied the laws of Siam relative to slavery, and compared them with the slavery of the United States—that he is satisfied that the system of servitude existing there is not correctly denominated slavery, and that an illustration of Webster's definition of that term does not exist in Siam. There are, he says, two classes of persons held in servitude in this government:

"1st. Persons sold in servitude to pay the interest upon their own debts, or the debts of their husbands or parents. 2d. Persons taken captive in war. I had the impression, and still have, that both these classes of slaves are allowed by the laws of the land to redeem themselves by paying the principal of their debts, (the interest being always paid by their services as slaves;) that a refusal on the part of the master to accept of such sums of money offered for the third time for their redemption, gives the slave concerned a right to go free. They are all allowed to speculate and trade and make money for themselves, so long as they do not take time which their masters require. I did not regard the servitude existing in this country as absolute slavery. Hence, I did not think it necessary to employ all the means against it that our patrons employ against slavery, as found in the Southern States. I did not see any very good reason for refusing to employ a man who holds persons in Siamese servitude, provided he does not employ unrequited labor on our work; nor any very weighty reasons against his employing his own servants on our work, provided he pays them due wages while thus employed.

"Phranai, my builder, employed some servants of this kind on my house. He promised, in writing, that he would pay all such servants due wages. He affirms that he did this, and this is corroborated by the testimony of some of those servants. I refused to let out my job to a certain other Slaimese builder, because he said he should do the work almost entirely by his slaves, and would not promise to pay them more than he usually gives them for serving him. He would have done my work for nearly a hundred ticals less than the man I did employ."

The Committee were strongly impressed with the belief that Dr. Bradley supposed he was fulfilling the great law of love in what he was doing in this matter, but they were aware that our other missionaries viewed that servitude differently, and wishing to avoid even the appearance of complicity with oppression, they enjoined it upon him to refrain from any such acts in future. We confidently hope that the practice of the Mission will be in conformity with the principles of the Association.

It may not be improper to add, that either through a misunderstanding of the feeling of the friends of Free Missions, or from some other cause, there is danger that the question of hiring slaves may assume an undue relative importance, so that when this shall be done away, the attention of the Christian public will be turned from an evil of greater magnitude that lies behind it, without which the lesser one could not for a moment exist. The great evil is that of recognizing slavery as having an innocent and rightful existence, and of counting as Christians, and suitable partakers of church privileges, those who are voluntarily connected with it in the relation of slaveholders. On these points we believe our missionaries in Siam have never swerved. The Executive Committee greatly regret that there has been any occasion to doubt the correctness of the practice of one of them on the other point.

HOME MISSIONS.

THE success of our Home Missionary operations during the year should inspire us with true and deep-felt gratitude to God who has smiled upon the labors of his servants.

While it is not in the vastness of numbers, nor the popularity of a cause that promise of immortality is found, it is ever matter of joy when true principles find increasing numbers of advocates, and the providence of God conspires to give them prominence and power. The principles of this Association are evangelical, reformatory, liberty-loving, and humane, in accordance with the law of God and the Gospel of Christ. The times are auspicious for the reception of these principles, in greater harmony, and in truer proportions, than heretofore. In political life, the power of freedom is at length felt, and ecclesiastical bodies and benevolent institutions either welcome liberty and humanity, or give unmistakable evidence that their claim can not be long resisted or evaded.

It should be noticed, with thanksgiving, that, while the country has been visited with the pestilence, and at some stations of our Home Missionaries great mortality has prevailed, not one of the missionaries has died, though some few have suffered from sickness for a time.

The outline of Home Missionary operations may be seen in the following

GENERAL TABLE:

Showing, in parallel columns,

- 1. An alphabetical list of missionaries.
- 2. The names of churches and missionary districts aided.
- 3. Dates of commissions, or time of commencing labor.
- 4. Months of labor performed since the last report.
- 5. Additions to the churches by letter.
- 6. Additions to the churches on examination.
- 7. Number of church members.
- 8. Amount of aid pledged for a year's service.
- 9. Number of church members pledged to total abstinence.
- 10. Amount of contributions to benevolent objects.
- 11. Number of Sabbath-school pupils.
- 12. Other particulars.

EXPLANATIONS.

In this table are appended to the names of the missionaries, in the first column, the following abbreviations to designate the auxiliaries by whom they have been employed, namely:

W. H. & F.

For the Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association at Cincinnati, Ohio.

N: W. H.

For the North-Western Home Missionary Association at Chicago, Illinois.

In several instances we have been obliged to give the entire number of all the Sabbath-school scholars in several churches and districts reported by a missionary instead of the number connected with each school; also, the number of members in two or more churches, in a few instances, is given together.

We omit, with few exceptions, statements in the Table on the advance of sentiment and action on the subjects of Anti-slavery, Temperance, Maine Law, etc., now so universally reported by our missionaries.

They have labored, with few exceptions, in the North-western States and territories, and in Kentucky and North-Carolina, and we are now commencing missions in Kanzas.

Most of the missionaries are pastors, and some have several churches under their care. A small number are missionaries at large, evangelists, traversing large sections of country, preaching to many feeble churches, and to all people as they can have opportunity, and aiding in the organization of new churches. During the year our missionaries have established many churches and have labored extensively in promoting revivals of religion in their own and among other denominations.

The results, as near as can be ascertained from the reports of missionaries, are as follows:

The number of members of the churches, under the care of our missionaries, is

The additions, during the year, to the churches by profession of faith are 283, and by letter from other churches, 287.

During the year considerable numbers of the churches and stations have been visited with refreshings from the presence of the Lord. Revivals are reported by the missionaries, and upwards of four hundred souls, it is believed, have, under their ministrations, been converted to Christ.

Nearly all the members are pledged to total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, and, as a whole, constitute the truest anti-slavery churches in the country. Twelve of them have erected houses of worship during the year, some of whom have received aid from the Congregational Building-Fund.

The number of Sabbath-school scholars connected with the missionary churches and stations is 5218.

The contributions to benevolent objects, (not local,) reported by the missionaries amount to $3701.66.

STATES EAST OF OHIO.

From our general Table, it will be seen that only twelve of our missionaries have been under commission this year in States east of the State of Ohio. The necessities of many weak churches in those States are fully appreciated, but the overwhelming claims of the West and the South are so much felt by our contributors, that no very considerable or relatively greater sum could be expended at the East by the Executive Committee with their concurrence.

The Puritan Congregational Church, of Sandwich, Mass., in view of their increased ability, in October last, at the time of the expiration of the commission of their pastor as our missionary, voted to sustain him without aid. They have since been blessed with a very precious revival of religion.

We have now but one missionary in New-England. He is located at East-Berkshire, Vermont. The large number of French Canadians residing in the town, and subject to Gospel influences, together with other circumstances, give to this field and to the efforts of the church and our missionary, peculiar interest. We present from his annual Report the following extracts:

"There is almost a constant drain of the New-England population, by emigration to the West. One-sixth of the members of the Congregational Church here, have removed from the place and taken letters of dismission during the past nine months." This produces a depressing influence upon those that remain; and, as you can conceive, it must affect the minister and his family more or less, especially where the church and society are small. But still our congregation on the Sabbath holds its own, and rather increases. Our Sabbath-school more than keeps its numbers good; it has received a fine accession during the past few weeks—in part from French families who reside here. There is a large population of French scattered over this section, who are permanent settlers; and then there is a constant influx of French from Canada—persons who come over the line to obtain work. Nine-tenths of the hired persons in this part of the State are French. The French here are rather inclined to Protestantism. They are not directly under Roman Catholic influence now. They have been so long here that the parents understand our language tolerably well, and most of their children, from their association with Yankee children, can talk the English language fluently.

"I think this place the best location for a mission designed to benefit the Canadian French that can be found anywhere on the line between the United States and the Canadas, provided there can be a public school connected with the mission."*

In the State of New-York, the St. Faul's Street Congregational Church at Rochester, under the care of our missionary there, was blessed with a revival of religion during the last winter. The united heads of several families were among the converts, and some twenty persons were added to the church. Two other churches in this State are now enjoying the precious results of revivals that occurred early in the year, previous to the commissions of the ministers by us, and their prospects are now cheering.

There are some sections of this State specially requiring the labors of faithful evangelists, and there are also numbers of feeble churches that should be aided. It is hoped that evangelical Christians of different denominations in the State, and especially that churches of ample means in the vicinity of those churches requiring aid, will make efforts to supply their deficiencies.

Our missionaries in Western Pennsylvania, occupy a field of much interest. In some districts prejudice has been general, and opposition peculiar. Not enly the fidelity of the missionaries and that of their churches to anti-slavery, Temperance, and practical Christianity, but their presentation of pure evangelical doctrine, brought upon them the ridicule and special hostility of the varieties of errorists abounding in the region. Yet in these circumstances they have constantly gained in influence—their congregations have increased—some souls have been converted to Christ, and the prospects are encouraging.

OHIO, INDIANA, AND MICHIGAN.

THE number of missionaries who have been under commission in these States, is 22, of whom 13 have been under the direction of the Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association, our auxiliary at Cincinnati.

In Ohio, there have been employed 17; in Indiana, 1; and in Michigan, 4 missionaries.

OHIO.

Ohio, being the oldest State of the North-West, is generally well settled, has great political power, and possesses much wealth. Her large cities, Cincinnati at the south, and Cleveland on the north, together with other commercial emporiums of less size, are among the surest indications of the thrift of her large population. Her direct intercourse by steamers and other vessels on the lakes at the North, and on the Ohio river South and South-west, together with the main Railroads connecting with the East and the West give to her citizens great facilities. Her institutions are comparatively matured, and bear the impress of the founders of the State, who were largely from New-England, New-York and Pennsylvania, and to some extent, at the South-east, from the border slave States. A considerable foreign population is found in her cities, and scattered over various sections of the State.

She has the influence of Colleges and other seminaries of learning, and common schools long established, and all varieties of religion and character are found in her diversified population.

Important as some intelligent minds in Ohio may regard the high culture and moral elevation of the masses, and her relations to the country, it is evident that the love of wealth, and the stupefying tendencies of the moral, political and religious errors and practices prevailing, prevent the just appreciation of her responsibility. Bordering as Ohio does for several hundred miles on slave States, and possessing the means of exerting immense power upon slavery, the whole State should be moved to an effort to influence her neighbors to freedom, and to protect her own citizens from the violence and demoralizing influence of slavery. Recent events indicate that Ohio will soon take stronger ground on this subject. The missionaries of the Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association, our auxiliary at Cincinnati, have done much to awaken a right spirit on this subject, on the temperance question, and the Sabbath, and in opposition to every iniquity. The American Reform Tract and Book Society, at Cincinnati, might exert a vast influence against slavery and other moral evils throughout the country, could its funds be greatly increased by its friends in the State and elsewhere.

In some instances, revivals of religion have taken place during the year, in connection with the labors of our missionaries in this State, and the hands of the true-hearted have been strengthened. The continual emigrations to the far West operate sadly against the interests of feeble churches, and often are the cause of their requiring aid in the support of their ministry.

^{*} A mission was, he says, established there for the French Canadians a few years since, but failed from the unfitness of the principal.

One of our missionaries writes, Nov. 1853:

"Our church has been much encouraged by the aid furnished by the A. M. A., and also by the promise of $300 from the Cong. Ch. Building Fund, to assist them in building a new house of worship.

"Our Sabbath-school has also been larger, more uniform, and more interesting than before. A weekly prayer-meeting has been sustained during the summer.

"I have usually preached or lectured from two to five times during the week, including the Sabbath exercises; have heard a class of elderly ladies in the Sabbath school; superintended our centre district school some six weeks, last spring, teaching some two and a half hours a day, thus finishing a term for a teacher who was dismissed. Have been chairman of the town Board of Education Committee on books to be used in the schools throughout the town; and appointed by the Board to visit all the schools in town, report to the Board the state of the schools, and recommend any changes. I receive but little for this; yet I have consented to do it, because it brings me so much in contact with the children, and gives me an influence over them, and for their good.

"My forenoons I aim to devote to study; my afternoons and evenings to visiting, manual labor, reading, attending meetings, &c.

"Pardon me if I have been too particular in this report. It occurred to me that you wanted to look in upon your missionaries, and see how they spent their time."

From a missionary's report:

"In the commencement of the year, there was a partial revival of religion in the neighborhood, which resulted in the addition of some members to the church. Considerable interest was manifested in it by the members of the various denominations of Christians. The people of this town are generally in favor of the temperance cause, and the Maine law. One of the articles of our church requires that no member shall either use or sell intoxicating drinks. The church is decidedly anti-slavery, and deeply sympathizes with the slave. Its separate existence was originated by the anti-slavery question. We have a weekly prayer-meeting, in which the cause of the slave is not forgotten. Almost the entire population of this place is of eastern origin. Our people are favorably disposed towards morality and religion; and many of them are pillars in the churches. But the young do not come up to the standard of the fathers. Too many of them are characterized by gayety, frivolity, and fickleness. Indeed, the characteristic of many townships of this region, in this day, is instability and changeableness.

"Much patient labor, and larger baptisms of the Spirit, are needed to revive the languishing piety of these places."

Another missionary writes:

"The temperance cause is strong, and the anti-slavery cause has but little opposition. There is but one place in the township where liquor is sold, and that secretly, and only in small quantities. The spirit of caste is pretty well exorcized from the community, and entirely so, I believe, from the church. The monthly concert for the heathen, as well as for the slave, is regularly kept up, and the outward morality of the people here is as good, perhaps, as could be found in almost any place.

"Our congregation, in accordance with the recommendation of our Synod, has established the practice of keeping a 'poor fund' for the relief of their own members who may providentially be brought into circumstances of want; thus removing one of the strongest temptations for uniting with secret societies."

Another missionary reports:

"My time has been occupied in preaching in several places. For more than four months after my commission, I employed a portion of my time in P., about twenty-four miles from this place, in a free church. I continued to labor here until Brother K. took charge of the church. During my labors there, in connection with Brother K., we held a protracted meeting which resulted in a precious revival. God's people were greatly blessed and strengthened, and some eight or ten were hopefully converted.

"I have two places on R. Creek, which is emphatically missionary ground; no part of the West has been so neglected and overlooked as this. Satan has been active enough in doing his part, for the people have been taught any thing but the truth—Campbellism, or Newlightism, and any thing but Christ and him crucified. We have commenced a Sabbath-school that promises much good; they have also a temperance organization. I preach also at the V. Furnace. This is a region of iron ore, and furnaces have been erected and are going up in all directions: families are coming in from all parts. At this place they have collected about twenty dollars for a Sabbath-school library. This is doing well for this class of people. There are some warm friends of the temperance cause; no drinking allowed about the furnace. There are a few Roman Catholics here. We have been much hindered in our work for lack of a suitable house of worship. One is now raised and will soon be finished. Few places have stronger claims for Christian sympathy and aid. They will have preaching of some kind. Shall they have truth or error? Society is in a forming process, which makes Christian effort doubly important. All the places I have mentioned have families and individuals belonging to anti-slavery churches who greatly desire a pure Gospel to be preached unto them."

INDIANA.

We have but one missionary in Indiana. Its entire southern boundary is the State of Kentucky. Its contiguity to a slave State gives it additional interest as a missionary field. The cause of freedom and also of temperance is advancing. Colleges and schools are promoting general intelligence, but with all the varieties of the population there are found evils abundant which the Gospel only is adapted to remove.

FROM OUR MISSIONARY IN RANDOLPH COUNTY.

"There are also other points where I expect to organize new churches shortly, on free principles. My dear brother, there is a great work to be done here; and the prospects of usefulness are constantly widening and increasing. There is an increasing interest on the subject of religion at all the points at which I preach. In my visits and labors, as a missionary, I have much to endure. In order to meet my several appointments, I travel, on horseback and on foot, over 700 miles quarterly, and preach, during the same period, over 50 sermons. In order to meet some of these appointments, I am obliged to travel, some days, more than 20 miles, and preach three times.

"The country is filling up fast, and the settlers are mostly from the eastern and southern States. There is a deep and growing interest felt in Indiana, on the subject of temperance, and we will no doubt pass a Maine law at the next session of our Legislature, and also one for the observance of the Sabbath, which is now much desecrated. The anti-slavery sentiment is strong, and rapidly on the increase among the churches and people.

"Much attention is paid to education. The colored people have two settlements in Randolph county, and at present number several hundred, possessing some of the finest farms in the county. They also have a Seminary of learning, and land connected with it, which the students cultivate. The Rev. Mr. Tucker, a Congregational minister, has had the charge of it for several years past. He is well qualified for that station, and has made great sacrifices in the discharge of his duties as principal of it. The last term, which has just closed, the number of students, white and colored, has been upwards of eighty."

MICHIGAN.

We have employed in Michigan four missionaries. The population is largely from States east and south of it, though made up in part from foreign immigration. Notwithstanding her literary and Christian institutions, and in the main a corresponding degree of intelligence and moral influence, there is an amount of ignorance, error, and immorality which demands the efforts of the good to remove. The location of Michigan in contiguity with Canada, the Lakes, and the West, gives it importance not only in a commercial point of view, but as a field for missionary effort and influence. Her principal city, Detroit, is enriched not only by an enlarging commerce, but by some men who possess the missionary spirit, sympathize freely with the slave, and delight in the opportunity to pass the panting fugitive along to Canada and to provide for his comfort and establishment. It is a pleasant thought that now as the great Central Railroad is conveying its thousands of passengers through the State, East and West, and is connected with lines from the South, the fugitives are coming as on the wings of the wind to be passed over to her Majesty's dominions, the home of the free.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

One missionary in Eaton county, in describing the destitution and need of missionary labor in that region, says:

"There is no house of public worship within ten miles, belonging to any denomination whatever. The Congregational church here have taken measures to secure a lot, and erect thereon a suitable place of worship. Nearly all our members are in quite slender circumstances, and have taxed themselves fully up to their ability for the erection of the house. We have nearly $1100 subscribed for this purpose.

"The people are generally moral, in the common, loose acceptation of the term; but there is very great laxity in the observance of the Sabbath. Scarcely a pleasant Sabbath passes that we are not startled by the report of the hunter's rifle while on our way to church."

Another missionary, in Genesee county, writes:

"A very strong anti-slavery sentiment prevails in our Association; and, at our meeting in June last, strong anti-slavery resolutions were passed. The same might be said of most of the Associations in the State. At the meeting of the General Association of Michigan last spring, at Detroit, this feeling was very manifest, and nearly universal among its members. The American Missionary Association was spoken of, and recommended to the patronage of the churches.'

WISCONSIN, AND MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

The Association has had under commission in Wisconsin, during the year, sixteen missionaries, four of whom have Welsh churches, and preach to their brethren in many places in Welsh, and also to various congregations in the English language. A number of revivals of religion have been connected with the labors of our missionaries. Several churches have been organized, and a number of houses of worship have been erected or are building. The institutions of religion and morality are generally regarded with an increasing interest, giving much encouragement for the future, notwithstanding the many powerful opposing influences. Much is doing for education and for Sabbath-schools. Many interesting and striking cases of conversions, of old and young, have been reported; backsliders have been reclaimed-and the family altar has been set up in many households. The year has been signalized by great progress in the cause of Temperance, and by universal efforts in behalf of the Maine Law.

The change that has taken place on the subject of slavery generally in the free States, since the passage of the "Nebraska and Kanzas Bill," has, in connection with the attempt to enforce the "Fugitive Slave Bill," and to inflict its "pains and penalties "upon citizens of Wisconsin, aroused the people to a determined hostility to slavery; and neither to the church or the state in Wisconsin, can the slave power now look for support.

The missionaries who have been laboring in darker times for the slave, are now rejoicing in the confidence that the moral and political power of the State will hereafter be wielded for the overthrow of slavery in the nation.

The increase of the population by immigration is rapid. A large proportion of the immigrants are from the eastern States. The German population is large, particularly in the city of Milwaukee, and the Roman Catholics are numerous. To a great extent the foreign population exert an influence against the Sabbath. temperance, and evangelical religion; but the Welsh, and not a few other foreigners, heartily sympathize with our institutions and religion.

In the late struggle for the Maine Law our missionaries contended manfully. One of them writes:

"The strength of the opposition lay in the cities and villages. Money and liquor were used freely to obtain votes; and threats and abuse were freely used to intimidate the friends of law. Our foreign population, with honorable exceptions, especially among the evangelical protestant Christians, are opposed to the Law. In the contest, divine truth has been brought in conflict with avarice and deprayed appetite: it has pressed minds seldom reached; great principles of law have been explained and applied to existing evils, and conviction followed in their application to the liquor traffic, so that now we can apply them to slavery and other forms of sin with great effect. Abundant evidence has also been given in this contest of the value of a faithful gospel ministry: also, that the church, under God, can mould the public mind at their will, and that with confidence in God, and the power of his truth, 'one might chase a thousand, and ten put ten thousand to flight."

We add two extracts from the correspondence of our Welsh missionaries:

"During the last four months, I have preached in twelve of our small churches, and held conference and prayer-meeting in the week time. My visits were welcomed everywhere, as a general missionary.

"Our Association contains eighteen churches, and according to the Report on the Narrative of Religion within our bounds, we have five hundred and two members in good and regular standing; the increase for the last year is one hundred and three. Our late meeting continued for four days. The audience was very large; from one thousand to twelve hundred present. We were favored with four ministers from other States, and were in all thirteen ministers. Twenty-three sermons were delivered and a conference held.

"The Americans-native-said that the Welsh were more numerous than they had supposed, and that we had the pure Gospel in its simplicity. The power of God was visible. The preaching was marked with love to immortal souls, earnestness, and simplicity. We hope the seed sown will bring forth fruit to the glory of God and the salvation of many souls.

"I have been engaged in preaching at the dedication of four meeting-houses. The first, six miles south of Racine, in the country; another at Exonia, six miles east of Watertown; another at the Blue Mounds; and the other at Dodgeville. These meeting-houses are complete, and they are all paid for.

"We have over ten thousand Welsh scattered in different settlements in the State, and the majority are much attached to the Gospel ministry."

Another missionary writes:

"A Welsh Congregational Church was organized on the 19th and 20th of April at Dover. It was a melting time. Fifteen united in covenant with the Lord, and with each other, and more are expecting to unite soon. The Lord has indeed been with us at Dover. Many of the most profane and profligate are now rejoicing in God, and are sitting in their right mind at the feet of Jesus. The devil has had entire control of the place. It was proverbial for its various kinds of vice and wickedness. But now what a change! The streets are still on the Sabbath, except at the hour of meeting, when they are thronged with people going to worship God, on his blessed day. While we are worshiping in the schoolhouse, the crowd is so great that many of the brethren retire to private houses, and hold prayer-meetings for the blessing on the word.

"Three miles east of Dover, where I have been preaching, the Lord has poured out his Spirit, and several are converted to God. The Lord has indeed turned away our captivity; the waste places are built up-blasphemy is turned to praise -cursing to praying-night to day-and the blessed day of the Lord to visit his people has come."

MINNESOTA.

WE have but one missionary in this territory. Emigration to Minnesota is rapid and large. Not only are the emigrants from the Atlantic States and from Europe, but they flock from the older States of the North-west, as if determined to be on the utmost verge of civilization. This tendency and the consequent rapid increase of the territory imposes upon the friends of Christ the duty of immediate effort to aid the population with the institutions of the Gospel.

OUR missionary at TRAVERSE-DES-SIOUX, under date of Dec. 2, 1854, after giving an account of the organization of their church-Free Presbyterian-the week before, under favorable auspices, writes:

"At the first meeting of the church-session, some three were received on examination, making in all thirteen members at present associated together for the worship and service of God in this place. The communion of these friends of the Saviour on Sabbath was solemn and deeply interesting. Jesus, the master of the feast himself, was evidently with us, feeding, comforting, and strengthening his

"There are others who contemplate uniting with us so soon as they shall have obtained letters from the churches whence they came.

"There are also many others in our midst who have attended the means of grace. and have seemed to be very near the kingdom, whom we do hope ere long to see submitting themselves to God, according to the Gospel, and professing their faith in

"Oh! for a gracious out-pouring of the Spirit. You will no doubt feel a deep interest in this little nucleus-this oasis in the desert. To some it would seem like a day of small things with us; but to the eye of faith, there is no feature of it little or despicable, unless it be the means, and even that renders the power of God the more conspicuous and glorious. To Him be all the glory."

In March, he writes:

"For some months, I have been preaching to respectable and attentive congregations at La-Lure, nine miles below this, on the opposite side of the Minnesota River, every fortnight, on Sabbaths. I wish you could send a missionary to that place. I have recently visited Mankato, a town fifteen miles above this, on the opposite side of the river: it is a place of great promise. In respect to the importance of that place ultimately, there can be but one conclusion. * * *

"Where are all your men, looking for a place, or waiting for a call? Get hold of them, dear brother, and SHAKE THEM, and tell them for me that it is all place out here, and that every breeze brings a call, whether it comes from the north, south, east, or west of Traverse-des-Sioux."

FROM THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE MISSIONARY.

Nearly six hundred dollars are subscribed for the erection of a house of worship at Traverse-des-Sioux. This is about the extent of our ability to help ourselves. until inspired afresh by aid from abroad and from above.

Our church-now consisting of twenty-three members-has been gaining a deeper and stronger hold upon the confidence and sympathy of the people generally of this section of country, and the prospect of our enlargement, at no distant day, appears good.

There is no other church organization as yet within fifty miles of this place. The people who come in pursuit of homes in these parts are generally moral: a good share of them are, or rather have been, professedly religious.

Comparatively few of the emigrants to this part of Minnesota are foreigners. It is, however, true that we have representatives from almost all parts of the European world, some of whom are Catholics.

Although great progress has been made in respect to the general observance of the Sabbath, during the last twelve or fifteen months, still Sabbath desecration prevails to an alarming extent here and throughout the Minnesota Valley.

Our distinctive principles as a church, touching American slavery, shares the interest and sympathy of the best portion of the people here; and the public sentiment is, that THIS is not the clime for slaves.

The temperance cause has been blessed here, and the unanimous voice of its friends is. "Give us a Maine law." We anticipate warm times at the October

A good share of interest in the cause of education is manifested by the people generally, but as yet the country is so new and so sparsely settled, that few schools have been sustained during the past year. A double amount of public lands has been appropriated to school purposes in this territory—the hope of Minnesota.

The monthly concert is observed by this church with interest, and the slave has not been forgotten at the throne of grace.

Worldly-mindedness, claim and claim-making, town-making, and speculating in lands, stock, etc., infidelity and universalism, are rife, while all sorts of schemes to make money and seize upon property, even at the sacrifice of the great principles and rights of society, are laid and prosecuted to a fearful extent throughout this country, into which the tide of emigration is pouring from every quarter of the God speed the right and rebuke the wrong.

ILLINOIS AND IOWA.

In these States the Association and its auxiliaries have had under commission

In Illinois the number was 39, of whom 22 have been under the direction of the North-Western Home Missionary Association at Chicago. To this auxiliary the State of Illinois, especially, is greatly indebted in every important religious, moral, educational, and benevolent interest. The rapid advancement of this great Prairie State within a few years past in population, agriculture, commerce, and railroads, taken in connection with its geographical location and the influence of its principal city, Chicago, gives it peculiar advantages as the focus of the North-west, and the high-way of travel for the multitudes pressing to that wast region of country.

The population is mainly composed of emigrants from the Eastern and Middle States. The German population is large, and foreigners of almost every nation are scattered over much of the State; very many of whom are Roman Catholics. In the southern part of the State a large proportion of the people were originally from Kentucky, Virginia, and some other of the slave States. As might be supposed, a State, and comparatively new country, made up of such a variety of classes and people, must be a field for extended missionary effort. Here are found evangelical Christians and churches, and all other forms of religion; and every kind of irreligion. Here are colleges and schools, and already, at many points, is found a high degree of intelligence and civilization; and here, again, is ignorance and demoralization. As in most of the States, spiritualism, semi-infidelity, and, in some instances, unblushing infidelity and blank atheism, exist. In these circumstances—which are in the main the same in all the West-how great is the work to be done, and how difficult the labors of the Christian missionary | But progress has been made. Society has made advances in education, morals, religious privileges and influence, and in temperance and human rights. To all this the home missionary has contributed largely. Houses of worship have been erected in several places where our missionaries are laboring, revivals of religion enjoyed, and several churches formed.

We make some brief extracts from the reports and correspondence of the mis-

FROM A MISSIONARY IN OTTAWA COUNTY.

"We have been specially blessed for the last two months. Our congregations have greatly increased; the attendance at our weekly meetings more than quadrupled; the spirit of prayer for Zion's prosperity, and for growth in grace, has been fervent and persevering; a few of the old members were led to abandon their former hope, and to seek the Lord with all their heart; all the members, save a very few, have been greatly revived; 13 have united with the Church-2 males and 11 females; 2 by letter, 6 by profession, and 3 by examination. These last have been professors, but had lost their membership by long absence from their churches. Six adults have been baptized, and 2 infants. This encouraging state of things still continues, and we pray may always continue, increasing more and more, until this divino leaven shall leaven this entire city."

FROM THE ANNUAL REPORT OF A MISSIONARY IN CLARK COUNTY.

"There have been no revivals of religion in this region for some years past, and the state of morals is very low, and exceedingly painful to the mind of the true Christian; but a restraining influence has been manifestly exerted by the regular preaching of the Gospel, and the calm and steady influence of some Eastern emigrants. There is much less of profanity and Sabbath-breaking. Some individuals who have been accustomed to labor in the harvest-field on the Lord's day, have this year desisted from it. Just before the harvest commenced, I preached expressly upon this subject, and the result has been good. There is a general call for the Maine Law, except from the Irish Catholics, and a few sordid money-seekers. The anti-slavery cause is becoming strong and popular. The position of professors of religion in our denomination is, No fellowship with slavery, either in Church or State. And this position is gaining popularity among all classes. There is a considerable number of foreigners residing in this vicinity; most of them are Irish Catholics. But these are probably not increasing in numbers; while the largest share of immi-gration, owing to the better prospects in relation to society, and the improved prices of land and produce, is from enterprising Eastern people.

"Educational interests are increasing, and good district schools, with some high-schools and colleges, are in successful operation.

"There are many townships of land in this region which are being rapidly settled with an enterprising and prosperous population. We should in these places gather churches, which, in a few years, would become self-supporting, if a missionary could be employed among them who could for a time be almost entirely supported by your Society, and who would be willing to devote his time to such

FROM A MISSIONARY IN EDGAR COUNTY.

"The subject of temperance is at present exciting unusual attention in our State. We hailed the Chicago Convention, as we had done the great movements which led to it, as the dawn of a brighter day. We expected there would be a fresh rallying of the temperance host, and so it is. The liquor dealers are themselves among the prophets, and actually predict the passage of the law at no distant day; they have heard how the casks are made to empty their contents directly into the gutter, and are suspicious that the new 'Trap' is a real Yankee notion, most unlike the old one, which the 'liquor-rats' used to enter and leave at their pleasure. They begin to utter a lamentable cry-Alas! alas! for our business, our ruined business, for in one hour so great riches has come to naught!"

FROM A MISSIONARY AT LARGE.

Kendall Co., is a village of some importance, it being the centre of quite a large section of rich prairie country. But the Gospel has hitherto had but little hold on the people, the greater part of whom are any thing but religious. Last spring a Congregational church was formed, numbering only 7 members; but they were of the right sort. Soon after the organization of the church, the services of Rev. - were secured to them, under your auspices. We had many things to contend with, yet the church has gone forward, and now numbers about 20 members. There had been considerable interest, and a few hopeful conversions before I came here, though, on account of peculiar difficulties, it had partially subsided. One difficulty has been the want of a place to meet in. I have only been able to occupy the school-house three evenings, and once on a Sabbath.* As there appeared to be no convenient place to hold meetings, I decided to leave for some other place. Just at this juncture, a good Methodist brother offered us the use of a couple of large rooms, in a house which he was finishing off for himself, agreeing, also, to furnish a stove and fuel, if we would only go on with our meetings. This offer we could not decline, and from that time our meetings have been going on with increasing interest. Some of the most wicked opposers have already become the subjects of grace, as we hope. Last evening, about a dozen persons took the attitude of inquirers, most of whom were deeply convicted of sinone or two crying aloud for mercy, as lost sinners. One man, who has been a very loose liver, for years, opened his mouth in prayer for the first time.

"Our difficulties in regard to a place of meeting have led us to devise a plan for building a house of worship."

IOWA.

In Iowa we have had under commission but five missionaries. With a fertile soil, lying between the Mississippi and the Missouri, and soon to have lines of railroads across the State, Iowa will vie with the favored Western States in commercial advantages, facilities of travel, and productive industry. Her inhabitants are from all sections of this country and from Europe. In the southern and western sections, many are from Missouri and Kentucky.

The emigration to Iowa for the last year has been almost incredible, fifty thousand having passed into the State during the autumn only of 1853. In the present infant condition of this State, her literary institutions are really in the forming process. Peculiar interest is given to Iowa by the fact that it is bounded on the south by a slave State, and by Nebraska on the west. A great missionary field is here opened, and the cry is, "Come over and help us." It is a source of special satisfaction that the cause of freedom has received an impetus in this State, as well as throughout the West; a spirit has been awakened which will defeat the bold and iniquitous measures of the supporters of slavery; while its friends are aroused to united effort and vigilance.

One of the Missionaries in his annual report, after stating the organization of another church, and that preparations were making for the organization of others. and also the fact that several churches were about to erect houses of public worship that had, through his instrumentality, obtained aid from the Congregational Fund, remarks, "The Fifty Thousand Dollar Fund, I am confident, is doing as much for the West as any similar amount ever expended in a benevolent enterprise:" and then proceeds with his report:

"On my field there has been no revival of religion. The excitement about railroads, and consequent rise of property, has absorbed public attention and choked the preached word. It has, however, been beneficial in various ways. It has greatly increased the immigration of families of more property and character than we had previously had. The tone of morality and of religious and moral enterprise is rising. Our congregations are increasing, and I think the signs are more favorable for a general revival than for two or three years past. Our State election has just been held. A prohibitory law and the Nebraska Bill were the principal issues in the canvass. From all parts of the State reports favorable to the cause of truth are received. The Governor-elect, with representatives to Congress, and a majority of the Legislature, are in favor of the Maine Law and opposed to the Nebraska iniquity. A United States Senator favorable to these views will be elected.

"In this State, and throughout the West, there is reason to believe that the wrath of man, as displayed in the Nebraska outrage, will praise God and benefit man. Our community is composed of people from every part of our country, and large numbers from England, Ireland, Germany, and the Canadas. The native American population are chiefly from the Eastern States. My Sterling congregation is mostly from England and Canadas. In Sabula, the influence of native Americans predominates. But the American population all over the West, whether it predominates in number or not, is sure to do so in influence. One intelligent American does as much to give character to society as five Irishmen.

"The Catholic hierarchy will do all that intrigue and cunning, combined with insolence and arrogance, can do to give character to Western society. But they will not succeed. Intelligent foreigners soon become American in their habits and sympathies. Those not intelligent can exert little influence, and can not prevent their children from growing up under the influence of American institutions. The Catholic Church has ruled the world once, but not in such an age as this. The influence exerted on foreigners that come here, and the influence of these foreigners on friends at home, is one of the most encouraging features of the home missionary work. I might enlarge on other aspects of the work, but have not time at present. The principles of the Association are daily gaining ground at the West. They will soon, I trust, be adopted and acted on by the mass of Christians of all denominations."

Another missionary writes:

"Our little church here has been favored with a gentle refreshing from on high, and several are entertaining hope as the result. There are but few among us who are not professing Christians; and but one of those over ten or twelve years of age, who were here at the time of the greatest interest, remains without hope.

KENTUCKY AND NORTH-CAROLINA.

In Kentucky we have three missionaries and three colporteurs.

The natural advantages of Kentucky are great for agriculture and manufactures, and by her extended facilities of river navigation, for commerce, and were slavery abolished, and the masses of her population educated, she would take rank among the first States in the Union. With education, morals, and true religion, she would be free indeed, and would exert a mighty influence on all the slave States for the abolition of slavery. From this fact, and considering also her relations to the North-west, no State should be more the object of attention and of Christian and anti-slavery effort.

There is a marked tendency to freedom in Kentucky. The efforts of the Emancipationists, and the influence of Cassius M. Clay, notwithstanding the violence with which he was assailed at first, and his life endangered, are signs of promise, as well, also, as the freedom with which our missionaries and the United Brethren now preach against slavery, and establish and sustain churches on anti-slavery principles.

Rev. John G. Fee, in Kentucky, has been providentially called to lead in the missions; disinherited by his father, who is a slaveholder, on account of his antislavery principles and action, he has given himself to the missionary work. Mr. Fee, in a recent letter, gives an interesting account of a public debate between himself and a lawyer, judge, etc., in Campbell county, on the slavery question. It lasted four days, and was conducted with great decorum and undisturbed interest. Other missionaries are preaching in the State, one of them having appointments in thirty places. They state that the distribution of antislavery publications increases the number of their congregations.

Our missionaries in Kentucky and North-Carolina, in addition to their labors in preaching, are engaged in lecturing and debating on the subject of slavery, showing its sinful character and destructive influence, and the duty of the Christian Church

Our colporteurs in Kentucky are engaged in distributing Bibles to slaves and others, and religious and anti-slavery publications to the whites, and are for the most part well received.

In Kentucky there are eight churches, and six in North-Carolina, formed on the principle of non-fellowship with slaveholders. The "United Brethren" have twelve churches in Kentucky of the same character.

It is now proved that in some at least of the slave States a free and pure Gospel may be preached, and the sin of slaveholding can be rebuked. Christians who love the souls of the slaves, of their masters, and of the great mass of the people, who are not slaveholders, must aid freely in this glorious work. It is by such missions that we are ultimately to give the Gospel to the millions of slaves at the South. In view of their increase, at least 70,000 souls a year, and the terrible condition of the slave population, destitute of the Bible, and denied the use of letters, are we not, as Christians and as anti-slavery men, bound to give them the Gospel as well as to seek for them the enjoyment of liberty?

Mr. Fee writes:

"Since my last report, we have organized one more church, received ten persons on profession of their faith in Christ; and the size and interest of some of our congations have been increased. A part of the time Brother D. Worth, of Felicity, Ohio, has been laboring with me; realizing, what has for years been proved, that ministers from free States can labor here, and preach unsparingly against all known sins; especially where free churches are already organized, and the public mind, to some extent, is prepared for such a gospel.

"Will not more such laborers come?

"Also, I have been, for several Sabbaths in succession, preaching in East-Maysville. Maysville has a population of near 5000; is the county seat of Mason county, which has a population of 14,060 white persons, 4284 slaves. The congregations have been small, yet larger than in our commencement at any other point. They have been increasing regularly in size and interest—composed of a class of persons respectful, attentive, hopeful.

"From the churches in the interior we have letters of an encouraging character. Fields are opening for the establishment of more free churches. One more minister, a native and resident, has come out from his sectarian and pro-slavery connections, and taken Free-Church grounds. Two more are expected. Recently I have learned that the "United Brethren in Christ" have some twelve small churches in the western and south-western part of the State. These, also, have no fellowship with slavery. What do these facts prove? That a whole Gospel can be preached in the South; that churches having no fellowship with slavery, caste, rum-selling, and war, are organized, and have fair prospect of success.

"Now, shall they be sustained, increased in number, and enlarged in membership? Men and means, with the blessing of God, will insure success.

"And if there is any one thing that will stay the progress of pro-slavery propagandism, it is the establishment and maintenance of anti-slavery churches, churches which shall constantly manufacture a public sentiment against it.

"Little religious feeling as our people have, still they revere the Church—a church that is humble and faithful. They regard it as the oracle of God. The Church as established by Christ, (it had no slaveholders nor whiskey-sellers in it,) was the 'light of the world.' But he said, "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness.' The true Church was designed by him to be the salt of the world-to save the world. The Church forms public sentiment; and public sentiment, law. 'Judgment must begin at the house of God.' Is there a true patriot in our land? one who truly loves his country? In no way can he so effectually benefit it as by purifying its religion, and establishing institutions, which, as arteries, shall carry the healthful blood to every part of the system—the body politic—imparting thereby life, beauty, and vigor. Is there a philanthropist in our land? one who loves his fellow-men? There is no way by which he can so effectually break the thraldom of his fellow-man, and elevate his condition, as by helping to preach a gospel which, by the authority of Heaven, opposes drunkenness, war, caste, slaveholding, and oppression in all its forms. Are there Christians in our land? men and women who love God, and pray for the extension of his kingdom? Will they not deem it a privilege to toil and economize that they may have means with which to sustain and enlarge the operations of organizations, which, like the Missionary Association, with prudent foresight, yet with a hearty spirit, carries an uncompromising Gospel to the very haunts of vice, and in the midst of op-

Mr. Fee expected to take a part in the anniversary exercises of the Association, New-York, May 11, but was unable to do so, without failing to fulfill appointments previously made. He wrote to the Committee a letter designed to explain his absence, but it did not reach us so as to be read at the meeting. He was then holding a series of meetings in Madison county. The following extract from his letter will be read with faterest:

"Here the churches are in need of special help. The fields are rapidly opening for a free and whole Gospel. I have most ardently desired and prayed for this day, when interior Kentucky would be so opened that the people there would be willing to hear the gospel of impartial love and freedom.

"The day is already at hand, when, in the less slaveholding districts, the people are not only willing, but greatly desirous to hear me; and though you are scarce prepared to receive it, yet men of soberness and truth tell me, that nine tenths of the ministry in the denominations around, do not have as large congregations as come to hear the feeble man who was, in the years 1846 and '47, consured by the Synod of Kentucky, (N. S.,) denounced by the pulpit and the press of the land, and waylaid, stoned, and clubbed by the rabble on the way-side. To God be all the praise! Had it not been for his special providence and grace, I should have fallen ere this. The things which have been chiefly instrumental in opening these fields, in this and adjoining counties, have been the labors of C. M. Clay, and the reading of the Anti-Slavery Manual, published years since by myself, and scattered here by C. M. Clay, and others. In a religious point of view, the tracts on the Sinfulness of Slavery, and the Duty of Non-fellowship with it, written by myself, and published and scattered by your Association, through her colporteurs and other friends preceding them, have been useful and efficient in preparing the way. I have met with many persons who say, until they read the tract on the Sinfulness of Slaveholding, they thought that, some how or other, from what they had heard from preachers, God had at least tolerated slavery. But now they believe the Bible gives no sanction to the iniquitous system. Others say they had always felt that slavery was wrong, but never until they read the tract on 'Non-fellowship with Slave-holding,' had they thought any one guilty for remaining in church-fellowship with slaveholders; but now they never intend to fellowship the sin in church relations. The call we send to you for more tracts will speak more fully on this point.

"We now need more praying, kind, discreet, faithful ministers. But we believe that the truth of Christianity, and the highest good of the true Church of Christ, and the cause of human freedom, require that those who are really Christians—members of the body of Christ, should be united. We believe sectarianism is wrong. All of our free churches are organized on this basis, and are of this belief. Sectarianism is a great barrier to the progress of true reform. Send us ministers who are first true, spiritual men, with a righteous practice, and who are willing to drop the shibboleths of party, and agree to tolerate those differences of opinion among those who are Christians, which are not inconsistent with Christian character. We do not want union at the expense of fundamental truth and righteousness. James says, 'The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable.' We want purity with unity. How else shall we meet the Scripture injunction of 'Coming up as one man to the help of the Lord against the mighty?'

"God is fast opening the way for the spread of fundamental Christianity—supreme love to God and impartial love to man. Twelve months since, most of the friends of freedom here were willing only to say, 'I am an Emancipationist;' most of these were in favor of gradual emancipation with colonization. Some of these have read articles in the newspapers on the sinfulness and inexpediency of colonization. The enemies of freedom would attempt to heap odium upon the friends by calling them 'abolitionists.' This only served to awaken greater interest. Argument forced the friends of freedom to the consistent position of ceasing all oppression—of doing to men as they would be done by—of giving to the slave freedom at once, and that too upon the soil, in the land of his birth, or choice. Now, many cheerfully and publicly take the name of 'Abolitionist' instead of Emancipationist.

"Under their persecution they are much united, and with Southern zeal, they stand by their friends to the very last. The sword, the bowie-knife, and pistol will give way to the power of truth, and to a holy trust in the special providence of find.

"Brethren, now let us be united and step into this wide and effectual door which God is opening. 'According to our faith so shall it be unto us.' 'Let us not despise the day of small things. God can take the weak things of this world and confound the wise.' We entreat your help."

With Mr. Fee's letter above, came the following appeal from fifty-five citizens of Kentucky:

APPEAL.

TO THE MEMBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION:

You seek by your efforts, under God, to convince the American people, and especially the Southern portion of them, of the sinfulness of slaveholding, and the duty of refusing fellowship with this and other sins.

In this work you have to contend with fifteen hundred millions of dollars invested in slave property. You have to contend with a moral sense stultified by habit and long-established association; with a public sentiment educated by the popular press, ministers, and other speakers, to believe that slavery is instituted by God, or at least tolerated by him. You have also to contend with a public sentiment prejudiced against the anti-slavery movement by distorted facts and exaggerated tales concerning anti-slavery men and associations.

These errors must be corrected, as they may be, by the press, the ministry, the living speaker, and the talking friend. All these have their relative advantage

By printed tracts or documents, we can have access to thousands who can not be reached by the public speaker. These documents correct error, remove prejudices, and awaken, under God, in many, strong desires to hear for themselves; and thus they advance the cause of truth. Here in the interior, every organization has been preceded by the scattering of anti-slavery documents. They are the great harbingers of reform.

There is another encouraging fact. It is this. The continual agitation of the subject of slavery, politically and ecclesiastically, has awakened in the minds of the people an increasing desire to read and understand for themselves. The great mass of them, especially in the non-slaveholding districts, are not only willing but desirous to read. This is God's providence. Shall we improve it?—avail ourselves of the opening, and obey the call? If we do not, awakened desire will grow weary with disappointment, and give up the struggle, and aversion will follow present negligence. Now is the time for action.

Another fact. The circulation of these documents is followed by increasing calls for free-church organizations and ministers to supply them.

Now, in the infancy of our movements, and sparseness of men and means, we must look to the friends of humanity and righteousness abroad for aid in our struggle. Send us aid—documents showing the political, the social, and especially the moral wrongs of slavery, and the great error of fellowshipping the sin in church relations. Send us such as you have been sending us—tracts carefully written, full of facts and arguments, and touching appeals. We have here colporteurs and other zealous friends, who take great pleasure in actively and judiciously circulat-

Under God we hope, we expect to succeed. Help us.

(Signed by fifty-five names.)

At a later date, Mr. Fee wrote:

"The past two months have been a season of much labor and mental anxiety. I am much worn, as the Apostic says, 'with the care of all the churches'—especially with my proposed change of field of labor. This presses hard on me, and on my wife—the sacrifice of friends and privileges; it is to us very great. But some one must go. The interest of the cause demands it. At the Glade, friends told me I need not make an invitation for persons to join, unless I would first consent to come and labor there. After much study and prayer, I have decided that the interest of the cause demanded that I should come. I said to them I intended so to do. I then preached for several days in succession at that place. As a result nine persons joined; and after several days of prayer and inquiry, on giving evidence of converson, all were received; three were baptized, the others had been pre-

"From this place we went to many other apointments in Madison, Rock-Castle, and Garrard counties. At all of these we made short visits. At almost every place we were encouraged by a larger number of persons in attendance, and more interest than we expected. The Kentucky people have not been trained to go to church during the week; it is a Sunday business. If we get from one to three hundred persons on the Sabbath day, we think we are doing well for Abolitionists in a slave State. I certainly believe that whilst slaveholders, and their allies among political tricksters, are making death-struggles for the extension of slave territory, and are desirous to suppress agitation, yet the very efforts of slave propagandists have awakened in the minds of the people a desire to read and hear, so that they may know what these men are doing. This, together with the agitation in church, gives us access to the ears and eyes of many of the people. Also the people are not now so alarmed at the mad-dog cry of abolitionism as formerly. They find these people not blood-thirsty fanatics, as first represented. Thousands are reading. This removes projudice, and awakens interest. Give us documents.

"On my return, I found the Church here and in Bracken steadfast and working. Their prayer-meetings are well attended, and each of the Sabbath-schools larger and more interesting than they have ever been."

Mr. Fee writes July 27:

"The 15th of this month closed another year's labor as missionary under the care of the American Missionary Association. It has been one of toil and increased care, but of increased interest. Of interest, because the fact that acts of open violence have ceased furnishes a demonstration that even slaveholders are feeling that here a place and the privilege must be granted to abolitionists to express their honest convictions, and freely discuss whatever involves the interests and duties of man-of universal man. Of interest, because the people are daily throwing off the restraints which have been imposed on them by the slaveholding oligarchy. Though demagogues rejoice over Nebraska bills, and slaveholders are vigilant in extending slave-area, yet the hope of success lies with the people. These are showing daily more willingness to hear and read. The continual agitation of the question of slavery in Church and State has awakened in them a desire to hear and read for themselves.

"This is the whitening of the harvest. May the Lord send forth laborers into the harvest.

"During the year the two principal churches over which I have a pastoral care, have plastered and seated the church-edifices in which they worship. The congregations at Bethesda, in Bracken Co., have a small increase; the Sabbath-school has increased in size and interest.

"The congregation at Glenville, Lewis Co., has a larger increase. Our congregations are quiet and orderly, beyond most other congregations, in both counties. These are hopeful indications. They show that, however unpopular our doctrines, the people respect our feelings; their consciences seem to say that we are right, and they respect the place of worship.

"We have raised several collections this year for aid of ministers who have visted us. Also for church expenses, and for the American Missionary Associa-

"We have had a few cases of discipline. Most of the members stand firm. Our number is diminished almost every year by removals; yet we feel an abiding and increasing conviction that the work, with the blessing of God, can and will succeed in Kentucky."

We give a few extracts from the Reports of our Colporteurs indicating some of the incidents of successive days' labors:

"--- I have visited and re-visited this month, in addition to the seven days of labor reported in my last, one hundred and ninety-one families, sold them fifty-six volumes, supplied four slaves that could read, with Bibles, and three with Testaments, and one poor white family with a Bible, besides circulating a large number of religious and anti-slavery tracts and documents.---To-day had a conversation with a Northern man, who advocated the pro-slavery doctrine; but when I interrogated him, he acknowledged that if every person would act out the commands of our Saviour, slavery would at once be done away. One, with whom I have been laboring said: 'The slaveholder is guilty of daily robbery.'——Supplied two slaves with the word of God, and distributed anti-slavery documents. Some gave me a cool greeting. - Sold nine volumes; had conversation with some old pioneers, who acknowledged the great wrong of American slavery, and much lamented its having been admitted into the Church.-Had conversation in the presence of some young persons, on whom I tried to make lasting impressions, by quoting appropriate portions of the Scriptures, which seemed to have a good effect on their minds .-Conversed with some Israelites indeed, in whom I found no guile. One, whose father had liberated his slaves, (to one of whom I gave a Testament,) said: 'The sin of oppression is of such magnitude, that there is no promise in the written word of God for those who are guilty of slaveholding.' Another mother in Israel made due acknowledgments of the evil of slavery, and that the Church, by nurturing and fellowshipping the sin, had lost the influence she once exerted. - Found some who are seeking after truth in good earnest. This was very pleasant to me, and I tried to make some good impressions.

"- One who was formerly an enemy to our cause, has embraced our sentiments and joined the Free Church, with his companion, since I first visited him. He invited me to read and pray with him.—Some are tending to our position. One slaveholder, while conversing on our missionary operations, said: 'It is ridiculous, and a scandal, to be paying money for missionary purposes in heathen lands, while we have hundreds and thousands of heathen in our midst.

- One slaveholder and his abettors abused me grossly, and said: 'You are in a dangerous place here, and if you don't want to be tarred and feathered, the sooner you get away the better.' I remained calm and talked mildly to them, until they became quiet and appeared to be ashamed of their abuse of me. I then left them, asking God to forgive them.—Had conversation with a colored minister, a slave, and presented him with a copy of Sacred Songs.—Found quite a number of professed Christians, and among them were two slaves, who seemed to be enjoying the life and power of religion. - In one district which I have lately traversed, there is a prospect of organizing a church on our free principles.

"- Met with a colporteur, who supposed that I was acting under the direction of the same Society that commissioned him, and seemed to think that I was violating my instructions by circulating the Bible and tracts, and documents other than the Tract Society's publications.

"—— Our supplying the slaves with the Bible is of late affecting the minds of good citizens favorably to a considerable extent. One sister recently said to me: 'All the slaves ought to be taught to read and to be supplied with the Bible.' I am rejoiced that the donations to the American Missionary Association for the 'Slaves' Bible Fund, are increasing. The slaves receive the Bible with marked thankfulness, and but few in Northern Kentucky refuse to allow their slaves to have the Bible. Those contributing to the 'Slaves' Bible Fund' seem to be 'remembering those in bonds as bound with them.' May the Lord bless them in their work of mercy; may the time come when all may worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, and be permitted to train up their children in the fear and admonition of the Lord."

NORTH-CAROLINA.

We have but one missionary in North-Carolina. His labors have been extended and have been much blessed of the Lord. Several interesting seasons of revival of religion have occurred during the year in connection with his efforts and those of his brethren. We hope to do more soon in this State, as the way opens for other laborers to enter the field.

The relations of North-Carolina to the other slave States give it singular interest. Connecting with Tennessee on the west, they, together, form the line of division between the northern and southern slave States, and with Kentucky have more elements favorable to freedom and progress than the States south, and more than the larger sections of the slave States north of them, so devoted to the breeding system and the sale of their own people.

Our missionary thus writes:

"This year opens with encouraging prospects. The anti-slavery sentiments of our people are gaining ground, I believe, in this part of the country. The cause of temperance is advancing in some sections, though more efforts, perhaps, are now made to spread the curse of intemperance than at any former period, in some

"We have had forty-five accessions to the church since my last communication, and more than that number of converts. Those who have joined us are all from the world, with the exception of three from Protestant Methodists.

"There is now a prospect of organizing two small churches where I have

"It is very desirable on all accounts that our anti-slavery principles should continue to advance, for it is heart-sickening to see the poor slaves driven to market like brutes-parents torn from their children without mercy, and compelled to drag out a miserable existence in the rice-swamps, or on the cotton-plantations. In passing to my appointment some time since, I saw a number of slaves marching through a small village with their driver. Two or three slave men were playing on their violins to keep up the appearance of merriment. They would, however, have looked but little worse, I presume, if they had been going to the gallows. Hundreds, and even thousands, are being driven to market.

"Our meetings are well attended, and God is reviving his work."

From his annual report:

"We have had a revival of religion among us recently. Some eighty or ninety profess to have experienced religion, and several have joined the church, and our prospects are encouraging.

"Some houses of worship are building, and others contemplated will, I trust, be built after awhile.

"There are a great number of pro-slavery churches in this State, that exercise an evil influence against us which is greater than that from the world; but among them there are some who are friendly to our position, and attend our meetings.

"We labor under great difficulties for the want of a press to make our sentiments known more fully. When we wish to vote for a governor, president, etc., we can not get our tickets printed by the presses here.

"The facilities for education are tolerably good; the free-school system is in operation, and all white persons may secure learning. But the colored population, whether bond or free, are by law prohibited even reading the word of God. There are, however, some slaveholders who teach their slaves to read, notwithstanding the laws against it.

"The state of society is better than might be anticipated. Most of our laws are excellent for the protection of the people and of property. Good order usually prevails at our meetings, and disorderly persons would, as a general thing, be put down, and the laws be executed."

KANZAS.

The history of the "Nebraska and Kanzas Bill," passed by the last Congress, and the attempt to open the free territories of the North-west to slavery, revealed a depth of perfidy for which the country was not prepared, and aroused anti-slavery Christians to the importance of endeavoring by every proper means to defeat the objects of the bill, and to secure freedom for those territories.

There have been for some years past in this territory, missions among the Indians, sustained by the Roman Catholics, the Methodist Church South, and by the Bantists, and Friends: the two last named have ever been anti-slavery, and true to freedom. The Methodist mission is under the direction of the Rev. Thomas Johnson, a slaveholder, who was the pro-slavery delegate to Congress, and earned for himself, at Washington, no enviable reputation in using all his influence to secure the passage of the "Nebraska and Kanzas Bill."

The Rev. C. B. Boynton, and T. B. Mason, Esq., of Cincinnati, have been on an exploring excursion in Kanzas. They give interesting and satisfactory accounts of the country, and urge the organization of Christian churches to go out with their ministers, or to have missionaries sent with them.

The Executive Committee early determined to send missionaries to Kanzas and made an appeal for funds, which has been responded to in part. Three missionaries have been appointed, and one or more is on the way, and a number of others stand ready to go if the funds can be provided for their support. They will engage in laying the foundation of civilized Christian society, and will oppose the efforts of slaveholders to introduce slaves there.

The emigration to Kanzas, under the patronage of the Massachusetts Emigrants' Aid Company, the New-York Kanzas Emigration League, and the Kanzas Emigration League of North-western Ohio, and other Associations, has commenced with great promise. The emigrants now in Kanzas are reporting encouragingly, and the number going is swelling daily. Kanzas must be free. How important the character of the first settlers! The Church must spare to Kanzas some of her best members, and some of the most talented and pious of her ministers. Churches should be formed, and go out with pastors. The religious element must preponderate. Kanzas is geographically the very centre of this country, and may yet be near the centre of its population.

GENERAL VIEW.

In the preceding remarks we have sketched very briefly the separate fields of our missionaries, and have given some extracts from their reports and correspondence, together with a statistical summary of some of the results of their labors. In order, however, to a more comprehensive view of the field and the objects sought, a variety of matters connected with the subject should not pass without notice.

The Christian and the philanthropist can not contemplate the vast Western field of our missionaries, with its rapidly-increasing population, and the darker field of the slave States, but with the deepest concern.

It is estimated that the annual emigration to this country, from the Old World, is half a million. The greater portion of the emigrants seek homes in the West and North-west. There lie the germs of empire, and compared with its prospective population and power, the East sinks into insignificance. Her mission, however, is great—that of laying foundations of religion, education and freedom, and sending a healthful emigration of her sons and daughters with these high purposes to the West and South-west.

Our missionaries labor in the midst of great obstacles. Intemperance, Sabbath-breaking, Popery, infidelity, and errors of all sorts abound, and the love of wealth on the part of many professors of religion, and lukewarmness prevail there as in other parts of the country. They are preaching the Gospel. This is the great work; applying it to all, and opposing it to all sin, personal and public, seeking by the aid of the Holy Ghost the conversion of sinners, and the sanctification of the Lord's people. They are promoting Sabbath-schools, education, temperance, antislavery, and righteous government. The West is more thoroughly anti-slavery than the East. The missionaries and the churches have contributed toward the triumphs of freedom and the Maine-law principles in their late elections.

Although our missionaries are generally placed above positive want, living as they do on very scanty salaries, they are sometimes, from the want of sufficient accommodations in their dwellings, and other comforts, especially in sickness, subject to sufferings, known to but few of those who sustain them by their contributions. In some instances, their families are large, and unless they are aided by donations of clothing and other needful articles, their families experience great difficulty and exposure to suffering.

The Divine blessing appears to rest upon the labors of our Welsh missionaries in Wisconsin, and upon their body of churches. Their ministers generally seem to possess much of the love and zeal of their devoted and eloquent brethren at home. They, as a body, take great interest in our Association, love its principles, and are among the most decided opposers of slavery.

There are some 60,000 families of free colored people in the slave States of this country, and a number of slaves sufficient to constitute 600,000 families, were they by law permitted to sustain that relation, who are denied the use of letters and of the Bible.

The declaration long since made, that every family in the United States, once destitute of the word of God, had been supplied or had the power to obtain it, could never have been true in regard to the colored population of the South.

We have never yet learned of any appropriate measure being adopted by Bible Societies to supply this population. The system of distributing the Bible in this country, exclusively by auxiliaries, adopted by the American Bible Society, must, from the nature of things, fail at the South to meet the case of the colored population. The officers of the auxiliaries there are generally from the influential classes, who are mostly slaveholders, and are the makers and supporters of the laws forbidding the colored people, bond and free, the knowledge of letters

Were our children and other relatives in the terrible circumstances of these our colored brethren at the South, who supposes that we could for one moment listen to apologies for not attempting to give to them the Bible other than by committing the whole matter to slaveholding auxiliaries of the Bible societies?

If Bible Societies would be true to God and immortal souls, they must adopt a policy suited to meet the extraordinary obstacles which slavery interposes to the circulation of the "Word of Life." Something effective must be attempted. Christianity and humanity require that it be done without delay.

At this period of our national history, when gigantic strides are made to extend the inhuman and anti-republican system of slavery to its utmost capacity, and to consecrate the fair heritages of freedom to this never-satisfied monster; when, after so long a time, the moral sense of the people is aroused, and alarm is felt from the demands of slaveholders, and the Church and ministry more extensively begin to show signs of life in regard to the sin of slaveholding, every thing in the field of our missionaries having a bearing upon the subject not only comes necessarily within their observation, and is subject to their action, but is also of great interest to those who sustain them in their labors. From the geographical relations of the North-western States to the slave States, and especially the southern portions of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, and the general influence of slavery upon these districts, demoralizing the people, discouraging general education and the prevalence of pure Christianity, it is obvious that they present an important field for Christian effort. When, also, the object of securing freedom to the slave States contiguous is taken into view, it is a matter of astonishment that no more has been done to sustain Christian anti-slavery missionaries there.

The great providential mission of the age is THE MISSION OF EMIGRATION. God, through natural causes, is moving and transplanting nations and races of men to lands better adapted to their development and improvement. We have looked with wonder and admiration to the events connected with the early settlement of this country by our Pilgrim fathers and others. The landing of the Pilgrims was a leading event, and embodied strong materials with which to commence the new empire. The descendants of the various early colonies have multiplied and spread out over this great country, and at various periods limited emigrations from Europe have variegated and given new zest to the increasing force of our population.

But now, after the lapse of two centuries from the time of our first settlement, the work of moving from the Old World to the New is fairly set in, and hundreds of thousands from Europe, and tens of thousands from China, rush to our shores. Struck with the mighty movement, we exclaim, the hand of God is in it! The natural increase of our population, rapid as it is, seems not sufficient to carry out some vast design of the moral Governor of the world, and this country must be filled with a rapidity which no human forecast could have anticipated. Can it be to destroy us? Is it not rather to test our principles and to tax our energies in one great and continuous effort to lead these multitudes to Christ, that they may be blessed through us, and we be blessed with them and their posterity? Let no man's heart fail him through fear, but let him "trust in the Lord and do good."

At the time of the American Revolution there were 3,000,000 of people in this country, and in 1850, there were near 25,000,000. The population has doubled every twenty-five years. It will be seen that, should the population continue to increase in the same ratio for a hundred years, in 1950 there will be 400,000,000 of people, and were it possible for slavery to exist and increase its population after the same manner, there would be some 70,000,000 slaves. But this can never be. Slavery has in itself fearful elements of destruction, and we are in the hands of a just God, who can, if, as a nation, we persevere in oppression and other iniquities, give us up to corruption and violence, arrest our increase and overshadowing prosperity, and by his judgments bring us to nothing.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

When in the world's history did there cluster such interests around a nation? Never, since the Christian era, has the Church in any country had such a work to do, with motives presented so powerful, and facilities so great. The present is full of wonder, and the future, as it fises in vision before us, fills us with awe. With alternate fear and hope we tremble, till, mastering the difficulty by faith, we cry, 'Lord, what wilt thou have us to do?'

If we would accomplish, under the direction and blessing of God, the great and glorious things of his promise, we must work with his Gospel and adhere to its principles of righteousness and love. The exigency is great, and he is but a novice who supposes that this nation can be saved, or the Church be prepared to go forth to the conquest of the world to Christ, if there be a compromise, at any point, with sin, or silence upon any iniquity of the age. The occasion calls for personal holiness in those who engage in a work so pure. The missionary phase of Christianity is the most lovely and unselfish; it draws upon the noblest sympathies of our nature, constrains us by the love of Christ, and teaches us to rely upon his word and spirit for success. It calls for our imitation of Christ, and demands the sacrifice of ease, reputation, property, and life itself, if need be, in this glorious service. On this altar of faith and love may we lay ourselves and our children. No richer legacy can we leave our children than this noble service; to no higher glory need we train them than to unite with us and with Christ in the blessed work of emancipating this land and the world from sin. Let it be our aim by our Home Missions, and by all instrumentalities, to secure in this country such a Christianity as with confidence we can impress upon the world, and from which we can, through its great Author, look for the salvation of the soul and the early dawn of the millenial glory.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Missionaries.-Rev. S. V. BLAKESLEE and Mrs. BLAKESLEE,

Mr. Blakeslee's mission is to the foreign population of San Francisco. A missionary to the Chinese, who had formerly labored in China, arrived in California, and commenced his labors there a little before Mr. Blakeslee did; Mr. B. has, therefore, devoted more attention to other foreigners than he at first intended. In the early part of the year he wrote:

"I believe more fully than ever before, that if the foreigners here are to be Christianized, it must be through the English language. In the Spanish, a Roman Catholic literature prevails, and where the language goes, Romanism goes with it. In the French, a papal and infidel literature obtains and extends with it. In the German, a mystical, neologistic religion is the pervading spirit, and everywhere accompanies it. In the English, there is found a deep, religious, earnest, Protestant literature, which is extended over the world.

literature which is extended over the world.

"When you determined to establish this mission, it was your opinion, and mine also, that here, where foreigners, heathen and Romanists, were thrown into immediate contact with enterprising, earnest Americans, the influence thus brought to bear upon them would tend strongly to remove their national prejudices, and open their minds to the reception of new truth; that in these circumstances, should the missionary of the cross meet them in kindness—visit the sick, assist them in their difficulties, instruct them in his language, and teach them the love of the Saviour, he would be more successful in winning them to Christ, and, through them, many-of their own countrymen, than he would in any other position. After a year's labor on the ground, I have not been led to change this view. I find the attachment of foreigners to their old habits and customs greatly weakened. They are freed from their national prejudices, and appear willing candidly to examine whatever they find opposed to their former views."

At the close of the year, Mr. B. writes:

"It is now a little more than a year and a half since I arrived at this place, to labor under your commission. I have endeavored faithfully to do the work of a minister of Jesus Christ to dying men; but as I look back upon the time that has passed, I am compelled with pain to ask, 'Who hath believed our report, and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?' Yet I know that He who must give the increase, even when Paul plants and Apollos waters, can and will order all things to the promotion of his own glory and the salvation of souls. I can not say that my labors have been lost. There are many who have appeared to listen attentively to the words of truth, of a Saviour's love, and the plan of salvation through a crucified Redeemer, who have never before heard the simple story of the cross. Many Bibles, Testaments, and tracts have been circulated among the thousands of foreigners here, a portion of which have been carried to their native countries; there, perhaps, by the grace of God, to kindle a flame of love to Christ that shall spread abroad, and prepare mulitudes for the blessed day of the Lord.

"This field I believe to be one of vast importance; but for the purpose of fully improving it, much more must be done than has yet been done, and in a somewhat different manner. The inducements to immigration are such as to insure a steady flow, till the whole land shall be inhabited. Whence is this immigration to come? Only in part from the other States. They are too far from us, and find inducements to stop nearer. But Asia, with inhabitants surpassing in number all other portions of the earth together, is but a little way from us. China, with a population near twice that of all Europe, is only about two thirds farther from us than Liverpool is from New-York. The immigration from there already is such that it is computed that about one eighth of our population is Chinese, and the excitement among them on the subject of emigrating hither is greatly on the increase. Japan is just ready to contribute its quota, while the internal distractions in Spanish America, combined with other influences, will cause a steady influx of inhabitants for years. What ought we, what must we do for them? They come with their own habits, customs, and religious prejudices, which they, to a great extent, retain; and the result is, their influence now is, and will be, most debasing. Let Asiatic heathenism become here organized, with its polygamy and general licentiousness; let Roman idolatry become extensively established, and its votaries gain that control in our politics which they are earnestly stuggling for; let the masses of foreigners, rendered stirring and influential by intercourse with the Americans. unite with the abandoned of our own country, and they will constitute an overwhelming majority in the community, who shall scoff at vital Christianity and the religion of the Pilgrims as priestcraft and superstition. This must be the case unless the Gospel of Jesus Christ shall be embraced by these foreigners, and their multitudes be brought to rejoice in its blessed truths, its rich experiences, and its ennobling influences. Americans must elevate and Christianize them, or be dragged down to their level."

The labors of Mr. Blakeslee during the year have been of a varied character and very arduous, without having the efficiency that might have been hoped for, if he could have had a few more thousand dollars to expend in securing facilities for a more concentrated effort.

Larger expenditures will be required for the Mission during the coming year, or some change must be sought in the direction of its labors.

MISSION TO THE COPTS, EGYPT.

Missionaries.—Rev. C. F. MARTIN, LAZARUS S. MURAD, Mrs. MARTIN.

The determination of the Committee to undertake a mission among the Copts in Egypt, was announced in the last Annual Report. The missionaries under appointment, it is hoped, will sail from New-York early in October, for their field of labor. Mr. Martin was ordained to the work of the ministry on the 25th of June last, in the Church of the Puritans, New-York, of which he is a member. The charge delivered to the candidate, by Rev. Mr. Thompson, was published by request. The following extracts are taken from his introduction to it:

"Rev. Dr. Paulding, of Damascus, the worthy missionary of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, expressed to the writer his earnest approval of a mission to the Copts, whom he had visited, and his intention to commence such a mission himself, if no one else should volunteer.

"Rev. Mr. Lieder, of Cairo, had under his instruction, at one time, 18 young men designed for the Coptic priesthood. After the evangelical teaching which he gave them, they all refused to enter the corrupt ministry of their own church; but as Mr. Lieder was not authorized to encourage secession, his school was relinquished, and thus an opportunity was lost of securing a reformation like that of the Nestorians and the Armenians.

There is need of an untrammelled American Mission at Cairo."

Mr. Lazarus S. Murad, a Syrian, who was for many years connected with missions of the American Board in that country, has been appointed an assistant missionary, and will accompany Mr. and Mrs. Martin. He speaks a number of the languages of the East, including the Arabic and the Turkish; has visited Egypt, and become acquainted with many of its localities, and the habits and customs of the people; and having long had an abiding interest in the work of missions, and some experience, his addition to the mission will, we hope, be a great advantage to it.

The Gospel was doubtless introduced into Egypt in the time of the Apostles. In the fourth century the Christian religion was the prevalent religion of that country, and continued such, somewhat corrupted, indeed, by the superstitions of the old worship and the heresies of the times, until the Arab invasion in the seventh century; since which time Egypt has been for a spoil and a prey—first to the Arab, and then to the Turk.

The Copts are the native Christians of Egypt, claiming to be the unmixed descendants of the old Egyptians. Their number can not be accurately learned, but it is variously estimated from 100,000 to 300,000, forming about one-fifteenth of the population of Egypt.

Their spoken language is the Arabic. They retain also the Coptic language of the Shemitic family, which has marked affinities with the Hebrew, and in which they have an early version of the Scriptures, and their liturgies and church services. A considerable portion of their males can read and write this, while to the females it is almost an unknown tongue.

Their religious condition calls for our sympathy and earnest effort. In ecclesiastical organization, doctrinal belief, and modes of worship, they are supposed to have departed less from the New Testament standard than the Roman Catholics; yet their religion is formal and corrupt, and in practical morals they are often behind the Moslems. Their clergy are, many of them, ignorant and bigoted, with little or no knowledge of the Bible, and not unfrequently exhibit all the degrading influences of monasticism; yet there are a few, especially of the younger Copts, who seem to know something of spiritual religion.

The experience of English missionaries there shows that the people may readily be made to see how far they have departed from the simplicity of the Gospel, and gives hope that a reformation may be looked for, if the missionaries are prepared to encourage secession from corrupt organizations, and the establishment of pure Christian churches. Fraternization with the corrupt Christianity found there has been tried, and failed; the people themselves rejecting it, after learning the truth as it is in Jesus. There is among them a desire for Christian missionaries, and there is no hindrance to the circulation of the Scriptures. It should, however, be borne in mind that the work of converting to God a people sunken in formalism is one of great difficulties; the seed must be sown in tears, and the fruit waited for with long patience and much prayer, until the God of the harvest shall give the increase. Thus sought for, the harvest will come, for the Mouth of the Lord has spoken in.

AUXILIARIES.

The Penobscot County Missionary Association held its seventh annual meeting at Banger, Maine, Feb. 1, 1854. The receipts of the Society for the year reported were $339.65. The resolutions passed affirmed the duty of the Church to preserve the Gospel in its purity, and spread it untarnished over all the earth, for the glory of God and the salvation of men. James Allen, of Banger, was reëlected Treasurer of the Society.

The Reports of the Western Home and Foreign Missionary Association, at Cincinnati, and of the North-western Home Missionary Association, at Chicago, are mostly embodied in the Report of the Treasurer and the Report on Home Missions (of this Association) already given.

The Association at Cincinnati have expressed a desire to transfer all their missionaries to the direct care of the parent Association, and relinquish to it the responsibilities of that field. A change has been also proposed in the operations of the Association at Chicago, so as to have all the commissions to our Home missionaries issue from the parent Association.

"THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY."

The monthly circulation of this paper, which is the organ of the Association, is 19,000 copies. It is sent gratuitously to donors of the Society's treasury, and at the request of any friend of missions, will be seut for a limited period to any one so far interested in the Society's operations as to be willing to pay the postage, and read it. The columns of the paper are not exclusively occupied with intelligence from our missions, but give occasional items of interest from those of other societies, and discuss the principles in accordance with which all missionary operations should be conducted. In so doing, it sometimes appears to be in antagonism with other missionary publications, but it is only in the support of a principle which the Executive Committee believe to be important to the purity of the mission-cause. Thus far the paper has been a valuable agency in enlarging our receipts and in increasing the number of our friends, and is the most economical agency in our employ.

To correct a misapprehension that prevails in some quarters, it may be proper to allude to a discussion that has appeared in its columns during the last year, on the question of caste, polygamy, and slavery, as connected with the cause of missions

At the time of the formation of the American Missionary Association, those who were active in it felt that "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind" demanded of them a frank and explicit avowal of their reasons for withdrawing from the organizations with which they had been connected, and commencing a new one. This was done in a statement then believed, and it is still believed, to be in the strictest conformity with matters of fact, and which was not disputed in any of its essential features for nearly six years. Among the topics thus brought forward were those of caste, polygamy, and slavery, in their relations to missions already existing. The last topic being one of constant and pressing importance, has been frequently introduced into the Missionary, in the hope of contributing something to the effort made to purify the Church and the work of missions, and to remove the crushing weight under which the oppressed slave was perishing.

The first of the topics above named, that of caste in the Indian churches, has seldom been alluded to, except when the original statement of the Society has been denied, by persons speaking officially in behalf of the Society implicated, and the denial accompanied by implications, covert or open, of malicious falsification, or inexcusable ignorance. When thus assailed, through an attack upon our original position, the Association must either confess its former error, or vindicate its statement, or lie under the imputation of being slanderers of their brethren. The first of these alternatives it could not do without sacrificing truth; the welfare of the Society and its missions would not allow of the last; the only thing which could be consistently done was a vindication. This has been made.

CONCLUSION.

In concluding their Annual Report, the Executive Committee would renew the expression of profound gratitude to God for the prosperity with which he has crowned their labors, and the approval he has accured for their principles. Eight years ago, the Association was formed by a little company of earnest, faithful brethren, assembled in a lecture-room at Albany, New-York. Discarding what they believed to be defective in existing usages and methods of missionary effort, they planted themselves firmly on the principle, that every known violation of the law of love was inconsistent with the spirit of Christ, and when persisted in, disqualified for membership in his household; and instituted arrangements for gathering and sustaining churches in heathen lands, that should exclude the sins of caste, polygamy, and slaveholding, by the terms of admission, or by disciplinary process.

The position then taken was comparatively new: the men who were willing to avow it were two in number and feeble in resources, but, confident that their position was in accordance with the word of God, as well as the dictates of sound reason, they entered heartily on the work of making it practical. The providences of God have wrought continually in their favor. The income of the Society, being about $12,000 the first year, has increased to nearly $50,000, and its supporters have increased in about the same ratio. Concerning the application of these principles to polygamy and caste, it is hoped that no more need be said; but slavery is continually aggressive, demanding new fields for its operation, and a more unquestioned standing in the Church. The feeling is, however, fast increasing, that slaveholding is prima facie evidence of an unregenerate heart, and must not find a footbold in Christ's Church, and that missionary bodies should bear a practical testimony against it.

We can not conclude our report of the doings of the year, without reverting for a moment to the work yet to be done, and the entire inadequacy of the instrumentalities at present engaged in it. The whole work to be accomplished is revealed in the command of our Master, when, having finished his mission on earth, and about to ascend to his Father, he enjoined it on those who had known the gospel of salvation, to go "into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." The heathen at this day probably number 700,000,000; and not only this generation are perishing in all their grossness and their sin, but fifty generations before them have, since the command was uttered, travelled the same dark road, and made the same dreadful end. They have been born in sin, nurtured and trained in the practice of the abominations of heathenism, have adored and worshipped every imaginable personification of vice, and died with the heavy load of their sins upon them. To every successive generation of the professed followers of Christ, the command has been repeated, and upon them rested the responsibility of engaging in the work to the extent of their ability.

The duty of evangelizing this generation rests alone upon the Christians of this generation. The many millions of heathen men, women, and children now living, ought to have the Gospel preached to them. They are fist passing away, and in less than half a century ninety-nine hundredths of them will have gone to their account. The American Church has done something to reach them. In all her branches she may have sent out five hunded male missionaries, or a thousand, including males and females, sent to heathen lands, less than one to a million of those that are to be reached in the fulfillment of Christ's command. The good that these can accomplish in half a century, would bear no comparison to the work needed to be done, even to counteract the evils thrust upon the heathen by lands called Christian.

There is another aspect of the work that will pain the truly Christian heart, in view of the inadequacy of the instrumentalities engaged in efforts to obey Christ's command. The number of missionaries sent out from this country every year would but little more than supply the spiritual wants of the annual increase of those born to an inheritance of slavery here at home, and all the American missionaries now in heathen lands, would not supply the wants of ten years' increase of that population. The demands of the heathen in other lands can not be met without an increase, by many hundred fold, of the men and means engaged in it. If the Christians of this generation would give the Cospel to the heathen now liring, where one missionary goes out from this country at least five hundred should go, and for every dollar used in this work five hundred dollars would be needed.

The agencies employed are then inadequate. There must be a sudden bursting forth by thousands from all parts of the Church. Men and women of strong faith and warm hearts must not only send, but go, and the wealth of the Church must be consecrated to this crowning glory of Christianity on earth, the conversion of the world to God. Not ministers only, but laymen, in all departments of life, must go in companies to exhibit the spirit of Christianity, and furnish examples of men of all orders and occupations, laboring with an eye single to the glory of God.

A part of this work (oh! how small a part!) is to be undertaken by the American Missionary Association. How much shall be performed this year depends not so much on the Executive Committee as on the members of the Association, and will be determined by their contributions, their personal exertions, and their prayers. The providences of God indicate the necessity of a great and vigorous effort. May his wisdom guide in the kind and degree of it, and his blessing crown its accomplishment.

CHRIST THE CONQUEROR.

A SERMON,

PREACHED BEFORE THE

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION:

AT ITS

EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY,

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT;

SEPT. 27, 1854:

BY REV. SILAS MCKEEN,

BRADFORD, VERMONT.

CHRIST A CONQUEROR.

REVELATION 6 : 2.

AND I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering and to conquer.

To whom is this description of a royal, just, and irresistible conqueror to be applied? Not to any of the Alexanders, Cæsars, or Napoleons who have caused the nations to tremble through fear of their victorious armies, and so often drenched the earth with the blood of its inhabitants, but to one infinitely exalted and glorious; the King of kings, the Lord of the whole creation. That our adorable Lord and Saviour is the august personage intended will manifestly appear by comparing this passage with some others of like character which are, undoubtedly, applicable to him only. The coincidence between this passage and that which is plainly addressed to the Messiah in the fortyfifth Psalm is remarkable: "Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O Most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the hearts of the King's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre." In this passage, which is in the epistle to the Hebrews directly applied to Christ, he is represented, as in our text, to be a mighty king, distinguished for righteousness, riding majestically forth, in martial array, with his sword and sharp arrows, to subdue and triumph over his enemies. Again in the one hundred and tenth Psalm the inspired writer, celebrating the victories of the Messiah, says, in a solemn address to Jehovah: "The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many countries." In accordance with this prediction, John affirms: "I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse, and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True. and in righteousness he doth judge, and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written that no man knew but himself. And he was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called The Word of Gop"a name peculiar to the Lord Jesus. All the armies of heaven are represented as following on white horses, clothed in fine linen, clean and white; the word which proceeds from his mouth is as piercing as a sharp sword; he rules the rebellious nations as with a rod of iron; his enemies he tramples with irresistible power, as the grapes in the winepress are trodden; and on his vesture, and on his thigh, where hangs the warrior's sword, he has his name written, "King of kings and Lord of lords."

The great Captain of our salvation, then, must be the illustrious personage, the invincible conqueror, described in the text; and the hieroglyphic is designed to point out the continued progress of his gospel, the gradual and final accomplishment of his design to bring a rebellious world into manifest subjection to the government of God.

Christ viewed as a Conqueron, will constitute the theme of this discourse. And we shall be led to consider these three distinct but closely-connected topics, namely, that men have universally risen in opposition to the moral government of God; that Christ has been divinely commissioned, and is abundantly able, either to reduce them to willing obedience, or to destroy them; and the way in which he executes his high commission, and extends his mighty conquests.

I. Men have universally risen in rebellion against the moral government of God.

Is proof demanded? Proof of the same kind may be adduced as you would bring to establish the fact of general rebellion in any revolted province of a civil government. In such case you do not expect an open declaration of hostility from every individual; or overt acts of hostility from those incapable of committing them; but you regard the general conduct of the people. If this indicates a prevailing determination to resist the laws; to set up an independent government; or to go over to some other already established; if you see the people generally living in open rebellion against the government to which they owe allegiance, refusing to accede to any overtures of peace; you, without further inquiry, pronounce that a revolted and rebellious province.

Such proof, and stronger, may be brought in confirmation of the fact of man's rebellion against God; for we have, in this case, not only all the ordinary evidences of rebellion, but the testimony of Jehovah himself. In the light of the divine law, the rebellion of man is flagrantly manifest. That law, written by the finger of God on the tables of stone, and by his Spirit impressed on the human heart, is the great rule of man's duty, in all ages and countries. This law, in substance, requires that we love him with all our hearts; and our neighbor as ourselves; that forsaking all idolatry, we should worship him in spirit and in truth; that turning away from every act of fraud, of lewdness, of violence, and false witness, and covetous desire, we should do unto others as we would have them do unto us; in short, that we should invariably abstain from all which is wrong, and do all which is right and best. Universal obedience to the divine law would immediately convert this world of sin and sorrow into a paradise.

Do men, generally, yield the obedience which God thus demands? Do they, naturally, feel and conduct as he requires they should? No; they refuse to love and worship him; they refuse to love their neighbor as themselves, and to do to others as they would have others do to them. The hearts of the sons of men are so fully set in them to do evil, that, in order to preserve any peace or security in the community, those who have any thing to lose find it necessary to provide locks, and bolts, and bars to keep their treasures from being stolen, and themselves from being disturbed in the hours of night by the villainous. Severe laws are enacted, penitentiaries prepared, and other means of punishment provided, and courts for the trial of criminals instituted, that the well-known depravity of the human heart may be, in some measure, restrained. For this array of laws, and courts, and means of punishment, there would be no occasion, were not men rebels against God. They not only rebel, but justify themselves in rebellion. They complain that God's requisitions are unreasonable, and the penalty of his law unjustly severe. They condemn him, that they may be righteous. They show a disposition to overthrow the divine government entirely; saying, "What is the Almighty that we should serve him?" Nay, more, they have consecrated themselves to the service of the great Adversary of God; and are resolutely occupied in promoting his cause. Are they not, then, enemies to God and rebels against his government? Of this, the deplorable violations of every command of the decalogue, in lands enlightened by divine revelation, and the gross idolatry, the degrading vices, the shockingcrimes which prevail all over the heathen world, are sufficient proofs.

This testimony of existing facts is strongly confirmed by the divine oracles. The whole scheme of redemption through the mediation of Christ implies that men have revolted from God, and incurred his just condemnation. If men were not unreconciled, there would be no occasion for Christ to send forth his ambassadors to beseech them to become reconciled to God. If they were not depraved in heart, and unfit for heaven, there would be no need of being created anew in righteousness and true holiness, before they can enter into his kingdom. "We have before proved," says the Apostle, "both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin ;-that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God." "The carnal mind is enmity against God; it is not subject to the law of God, neither, indeed, can be." Now, as anciently, "The heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing; the kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us."

Numerous, beyond example, then, are the hosts engaged in this most daring and wicked rebellion. The four hundred thousand warriors led forth by Napoleon to subdue the Czar, and the multitudinous hosts which met and overwhelmed them; the thousand thousand with which Zerah, the Ethiopian, invaded Israel; the five millions which Xerxes gathered for the conquest of Greece; the two hundred thousand thousand horsemen with their breast-plates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone, which John saw in his vision marshaled to slay the third part of men; nay, all the armies which ever met in deadly con flict, in all ages and countries, are not to be compared, either in numbers or power, with the hosts which are now on earth combined in rebellion against God. With the exception of the comparatively few who willingly bow the knee to Jesus, the whole mass of mankind, who are capable of such service, including both sexes, and persons of every rank, from the most humble to the most august and powerful-yes, the whole world, are engaged in opposition to their adorable and sovereign Lord; are boldly trampling on his laws, and setting his authority at defiance. Were his thoughts and ways like those of men, all would be crushed at once by his omnipotence, and thus made to know that he is God. But as he is infinitely compassionate, as well as just and mighty, he extends to his rebellious subjects most gracious conditions of reconciliation and forgiveness before he proceeds to plead against them with his great and terrible and strong sword.

II. Jesus Christ has been appointed by God as a Mediator between himself and his rebellious subjects, with authority and power to bring them into subjection to their rightful Sovereign.

"There is," said the Apostle, "one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus." In this capacity he has received dominion over the creation, especially over this world, to make for himself a willing people; and to subdue and destroy all those who persist unto death in their rebellion. That Christ, as Mediator, is the King of all the earth, Lord of the whole creation, angels, principalities, and powers being subject unto him, and that he has been exalted to this high station that he might save a great multitude of Adam's apostate race, and bring all things to the grand and glorious result which will be witnessed by the assembled universe in the day of final decision, is entirely evident from the Scriptures. In the second Psalm, the kingly office of Christ is thus solemnly announced by the eternal Father: "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion .- Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." "Unto us a Child is born, a Son is given," said the prophet Isaiah, "and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful. Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace; and of the increase of his government, and of his peace, there shall be no end." "God," declares the Apostle, "hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father." Jehovah hath sworn by himself, the word hath gone out of his mouth in righteousness, not to return, that unto him every knee shall bow.

With this supreme and absolute dominion over all the earth, over all the angels of light, and powers of darkness, and the elements of nature, Christ, as Mediator, has been invested, that he might carry into full execution all the purposes of God respecting the Church, and, indeed, the whole race of man. All power in heaven and in earth is committed unto him. He is almighty both to save and to destroy. No movement, no dark design of his enemies can be hid from his view; the darkness and the light are both alike to him; he knows the thoughts and hearts of men, for he is absolutely omniscient. The infernal powers are subject to his control, and can do nothing against his cause except what he, for wise and holy purposes, is pleased to permit. The life, the destiny of every living thing, depends on his will; and whatsoever he desireth even that he down. He will reign until he shall have put down all rule, authority, and power now opposed to him; until he shall have delivered all his chosen from the power of sin, the curse of the law, the wrath to come, and raised them to a state of everlasting felicity and glory;—until all his enemies who refuse to submit willingly, shall be stricken down, by the sword of his justice; and the whole earth be filled with the renown of his universal and glorious victories. Were his enemies ten thousand times more numerous, strong, and determined in their opposition than they now are, he could with perfect ease subdue them all. What he has already done, affords abundant proof of his ability to execute the great work which he has undertaken; and he is now, as evidently as in any past period, going forth conquering and to conquer.

Let us consider

III. How Christ executes his high commission, and extends his mighty conquests.

This he does both in a way of grace and of justice; extending for giveness to those who yield obedience to him, and executing condemnation and wrath upon those who reject his overtures of mercy. In many of the prophecies respecting the glorious reign of the Messiah, promises to the righteous, and judgments on the wicked, are strangely mingled together. "With righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth.-And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness.-The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath." "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." Such is the current language of prophecy respecting the grace and justice of the Messiah's reign. It is but right that those who will not avail themselves of the benefits of Christ's mediation, should be taught by woeful experience how fearful a thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God without a Mediator.

In order that rebels against the Most High might become reconciled to him, and he to them; might receive his forgiveness, and be adopted into his family as his sons and daughters; it was necessary that his law should be honored, the perfect rectitude of his government vindicated; and the way of life be opened by an atoning sacrifice, on the part of the Mediator, adequate to the demands of law and justice. Without the shedding of blood—the atoning blood of Immanuel—there could be no forgiveness, no salvation for any of the human race; but justice, unmingled with mercy, must have been glorified in executing condemnation and wrath upon every transgressor. This indispensable sacrifice, the great Redeemer, in the fullness of time, offered up; and by his death opened the way for pardon, and life eternal, to be offered to sinners on terms the most gracious.

On the ground of his atonement he calls to the ends of the earth to look to him and be saved. While he declares to transgressors their guilt and the justice of God in their condemnation, he assures them that, on their exercising godly sorrow for their sins, and that faith in him which works by love, and purifies the heart, they shall be restored to the divine favor, and become heirs of the kingdom of heaven; their sins, however numerous or aggravated, shall all be blotted out, and God will lift on them the light of his countenance, and give them peace. He sets before rebellious men the strongest motives, both in the way of warning, and of gracious recompense, to depart from evil, and become reconciled unto God; and thus, by the truth, made efficacious by the Holy Spirit, he overcomes the obstinacy of the human heart, and makes for himself a willing people in the day of his power. Men are not compelled to submit; they are not violently drawn to Christ; but are convinced of their need of salvation; they see that there is salvation in no other, and are effectually inclined to come and cast themselves entirely on his mercy, with full purpose of heart to do his will. Thus are the conquests of the Prince of Peace extended, and converts to righteousness multiplied.

The great Captain of our salvation is abundantly able to enlighten the darkest minds, to subdue the hardest hearts, and to extend, at will, his conquests by his own immediate action, without the use of any human agency; but it is not his pleasure to do so. He knows that it is for the benefit of his people to be actively devoted to him; to pray, and give, and labor, and endure hardness, for the promotion of his cause in the world; that free and full exercise should be given to all their Christian graces; and, therefore, as their leader and commander he requires them to come forth and consecrate themselves to his service. He assures them that whatever sacrifices they shall make in obedience to him shall be openly acknowledged, and divinely recompensed in the last day. Nor does he send them forth to war against gigantic opposition unprepared, or alone; but furnishes them with the whole panoply of God; with all the armor needful either for assault or defense; and, marshaled in gospel order, he leads them forth to conflict and to victory. He leads them forth to contend against the errors, the prejudices, the evil habits of sinners manfully; not with carnal weapons, but with spiritual, which through God are mighty to pull down the strongholds of Satan, and to bring the thoughts and affections of sinners into obedience to Christ. In this way his followers become intimately united with him, and with each other, and are made to feel that all are engaged in promoting the same infinitely important cause.

Our glorious Commander stations large divisions of his forces at home in Christian lands, to maintain the ground which has already been acquired; to encourage and strengthen each other in well doing; and to send forth well-furnished companies of volunteers into remote regions, where Satan has long reigned with undisturbed dominion. He has commanded that his gospel should be preached, that the terms of peace with God should be extended to every creature. Some of his soldiers he sends forward as pioneers to survey the countries to be conquered; and others, in greater force, to plant there the institutions of religion, and take possession in the name of Him unto whom the heathen, in the covenant of redemption, have been given for an inheritance.

In prosecuting this great work, our adorable Lord makes use of good parental instruction and government; of schools conducted on Christian principles; of the counsels and example of pious friends; of the resources of the learned; of the pen of the able writer; the power of the press; the wide circulation of periodicals, tracts, and books, replete with gospel truth; especially of the Holy Scriptures, and the faithful preaching of the Gospel in the various languages of the nations; of the prayers and liberal contributions of his people for the prosperity of his cause; in short, of all their good offices to enlighten the minds of the ignorant and turn them from the ways of sin and death unto righteousness and everlasting life. He finds full employment for all, in every station of life, who love him and desire the prosperity of his kingdom. He turns the counsels of the wicked headlong, and causes the very wrath of man to praise him, and to turn out for the furtherance of the Gospel.

In the use of such means as these, rendered effectual by the mighty operation of the Holy Spirit, the Gospel has had free course, and been glorified in the conversion unto God of vast multitudes of Adam's apostate race; and will, in time to come, be attended with success still more glorious. What has been done is but a specimen, an earnest, of immensely greater victories yet to be achieved—it is but as some successful assaults of an invading army on the outposts of a great empire, in comparison with carrying the war with resistless power through the heart of it. The divine oracles affirm that "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn to God—that all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him; for the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governor among the nations. All kings shall fall down before him. All nations shall serve him. The nation and kingdom that will not serve him shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."

Many wicked nations, once powerful, have been already utterly wasted; and all who follow their example must share in their doom. As the king in Zion is mighty to save, so is he to destroy. All the elements of nature, all the appetites and passions of the human heart, all created agencies in the universe, from the most humble to the most exalted; the life and destiny of every enemy to his government; are all absolutely subject to his will. By the pestilence which walketh in darkness, or the destruction which wasteth at noon-day; by the lightning, earthquake, furious storm, or other mighty destroyers of life, over which man has no control; by the dangerous propensities of human nature which drive men into vicious and ruinous indulgencies, and crimes ending in destruction, especially by the ravages of war destroying the conflicting powers; it is perfectly easy for the Lord of all to cut off his enemies, or to leave them to destroy themselves. Indeed, by the ordinary work of death, numerous millions of those who refuse to obey and honor God are yearly brought down to the grave.

It is evident from the prophecies that a terrible destruction of the enemies of the Most High is yet to be witnessed. In the book of Revelation, the Son of Man appears, throned on a white cloud, with a golden crown on his head, and a sharp sickle in his hand, with which he reaps the earth; the vintage is cast into the wine-press of the wrath of God, and blood flows forth even unto the horses'-bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs. In the victories of the King of kings, whose vesture is dipped in blood, all the armies of heaven participate; and an angel standing in the sun calls aloud to all the fowls that ply in the midst of heaven, to come and gather themselves together unto the supper of the great God, to eat the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great; that is, of all the wicked who are not willing to submit to the divine government. When Satan shall be loosed from his imprisonment of a thousand years, he will again go forth 'to deceive the nations in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; the number of whom will be as the sand of the sea.' But while they are coming up on the breadth of the whole earth, and compassing the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; fire will come down from God out of heaven and devour them all. Then shall the Lord and Judge from whose glorious presence the visible heavens and earth shall flee away, appear on his great white throne, and the whole race of man, summoned by the trump of God, shall stand before him to be judged; every man according to his works; when all who have loved and served Him shall be welcomed to the joys of his kingdom; and who have refused to obey the Gospel be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power.

When all these things shall be done, when the great purposes for which Immanuel was inaugurated King in Zion shall all be accomplished, in the salvation of his people and the destruction of his enemies, then will he return his royal commission, resign his mediatorial kingdom to the Father, that he may be all in all. God grant that we may then be found among those who obeyed and honored this most illustrious Conqueror on earth, and are destined to dwell and rejoice with him in glory for ever.

In view of these facts, it deeply concerns all who have not yet made their peace with God to avail themselves of the mediation of Christ without delay. Are there any such now present? You have grievously sinned, have enkindled against yourselves the divine displeasure; the sword of justice, uplifted in the hand of Omnipotence is ready to cut you off. The fatal stroke is for a moment withheld, that it may be seen whether you will, or will not, come to Christ that you may have life. You are placed in circumstances of thrilling interest; compassed about by a great cloud of witnesses, both visible and invisible; your eternal state in happiness, or woe, unutterable, may be decided by your present choice! Your season of probation will soon, and may at any moment, be terminated. Do not tempt the Lord Jesus to depart from you. Do not purpose in your heart to have nothing to do with him; for he has, and will have, something to do with you. He will cause you either willingly or unwillingly to submit to God. Do it willingly, and you are eternally blessed. But wait until the sword of his justice shall strike you through as incorrigible rebels, and better for you would it be had you never been born. When peace with God may be secured on terms so exceedingly gracious, "Why will ye die?"

It is plainly the duty of all who acknowledge Christ as their supreme Commander to consecrate themselves heartily to his service, in faithful and courageous efforts to promote his cause in the world. All men are bound to obey and honor him. Their unwillingness in no degree absolves them from the obligation. But his own people, who have been not only redeemed by his blood, but renewed by his Spirit, and received into the most intimate relationship with him, who have openly and solemnly engaged that they would be the Lord's and serve him, are under peculiar obligations to fight, manfully, the good fight of faith. 'If any man will be His disciple, he must deny himself, take up his cross and follow him. Ye are my friends, he says, if ye do all things whatsoever I have commanded you. Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?' Surely every one who has united himself with any division of the great army of the Lord of hosts is sacredly bound to be devoted and faithful, even unto death.

It is not necessary that all should belong to the same denomination of Christians, that all should serve under the same earthly leaders, however wise or good; or perform altogether the same services. While we have but one Supreme Commander, and but one general cause promote, yet, as the field of conflict covers the whole world, and the work to be accomplished is exceedingly great and complicated, the King in Zion has seen fit to marshal his army in many divisions, and subdivisions, each with its appropriate leaders; not to contend with each other, but to act with a more extended and effective energy in carrying through all nations the triumphs of the cross. For any one of these divisions of the host of our common Lord to claim superiority to all others, and to look with an evil eye on kindred organizations for the promotion of the same cause, would be arrogant presumption. All, like the ancient tribes in the wilderness, should move on harmoniously together, sympathizing in each other's necessities, and rejoicing in each other's prosperity. If you can render better service to the common cause, in one than another of these battalions of the Lord of hosts, then unite with it; and cling to it; but with a spirit of genuine benevolence towards all your fellow-soldiers, of whatever name or station. Without the spirit of Christ we are none

The American Missionary Association, whose Eighth Anniversary we now celebrate, is founded on the broad and firm basis of the Gospel. It is not confined to any one denomination of Christians, but invites the coöperation of all the truly evangelical. Its membership consists of all such, who contribute to its funds, and are free from slaveholding and other immoralities. Its Board of Management, or Executive Committee, is not constituted of a few individuals with legal powers to perpetuate themselves, without accountability to the contributors who furnish them with their means, and who, of course, might be slow to listen to the voice of petition for any change in their conduct of missions; but is directly appointed from year to year by those for whom they act. If they treat their supporters cavalierly, and having grown strong with the means which the charitable have put into their hands, say, "If you do not approve of our management, you are at liberty to withdraw from us;" the remedy is easy. This Association extends its help to the destitute and perishing not only in foreign lands, but in our own country; to those in bonds, so far as practicable, no less than to the free. With slaveholding it has no fellowship. From the supporters of this great system of cruel oppression it asks no assistance; it appoints them to no office, either as managers or missionaries; nor approves of their reception any more than of polygamists or the adherents of caste or idolatry, or the practisers of any other immoralities, into any of its missionary churches. It gives no countenance to the idea that it may be a duty to receive such, on a profession of their faith, with a view to reform them: It aims to build up churches which will be an honor to Christ in the presence of all nations.

For such reasons as these, in connection with the fact that God has been pleased greatly to prosper this effort, both in our own country and in foreign lands, the officers and members of this Association cordially invite the cooperation of all who are like-minded. If any judge that they can better promote the cause of Christ in connection with any other organization, may God prosper them in well-doing. There is room and work enough for all. We have no wish to see any good means for promoting the Redeemer's kingdom fail for want of support. While we earnestly wish that all other societies for propagating the Gospel would decidedly discountenance every thing inconsistent with it, both at home and abroad, we pray that the blessing of God may attend his truth, wherever and by whomsoever dispensed; and that his devoted missionary servants, by whatever society supported, may see his work prospering, gloriously, in their hands. May any errors into which some of them have fallen be corrected, entirely and permanently, and all, with one mind and heart, labor strenously together for the advancement of that kingdom which consists in righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. The labor of building even on the sure foundation with any other than genuine and indestructible materials, will in the end prove to have been worse than in vain, for in the great day "the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is."

It may be thought that a course so radical and straightforward, though essentially right, is inexpedient—that it will excite opposition, and be less likely to accomplish its object than one more conservative and conciliating. But the spirit and power of the Gospel must be brought to bear directly against the most inveterate forms of human wickedness, however shielded by popular favor-and the sanctions of law, be the consequences as they may. It is not to be expected that Satan will surrender his strongholds without a mighty resistance. It becomes the soldiers of the great Captain of salvation to be strong, and quit themselves like men. "Give me," said Dr. Thompson of Scotland, in his great, last speech against slavery, "give me the hurricane rather than the pestilence. Give me the hurricane with its thunder and its lightning and its tempest. Give me the hurricane, with its partial and temporary devastations; awful though they be. Give me the hurricane with its purifying, healthful, salutary effects. Give me that hurricane, infinitely rather than the noisome pestilence, whose path is never crossed, whose silence is never disturbed, whose progress is never arrested by one sweeping blast from the heavenswhich walks, peacefully and sullenly, through the length and breadth of the land, breathing poison into every heart, and carrying havoc into every home, enervating all that is strong, defacing all that is beautiful, and casting its blight over the fairest and happiest scenes of human life; and which, from day to day and from year to year, with intolerable and interminable malignity, sends its thousands of hapless victims into the ever-yawning and never-satisfied grave."

In well-directed efforts to promote the kingdom of Christ in the world we must persevere, with patience. He will, assuredly, conquer all nations, but in his own time and way. His conquest of the world is not represented in the Scriptures as sudden and miraculous, as coming upon men unexpectedly, like a clap of thunder in a clear sky, or the sudden outbursting of a volcano, but is beautifully symbolized by the mustard-seed which grows up into a large plant; the leaven which silently but effectually extends its fermentation; by a river perpetually increasing as it flows onward; or the light of the morning, which almost imperceptibly increases in brightness from its earliest dawn to noon-day; or the complete success of a righteous warfare after a long struggle and many hard-fought battles. In this natural but effectual manner, the spirit and blessings of the Gospel have hitherto been extended, and are undoubtedly to be extended in times yet to come. Christ may and will give unusual efficacy to natural causes, as the complete success of the great work which he has undertaken shall require; but not in any such way as to exempt his soldiers from self-denying, patient, and persevering efforts to overthrow the kingdom of Satan and bring the whole world into subjection to himself. The victor's crown is only for those who fight manfully the good fight of faith. But, "let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." He that overcometh will be signally honored, and gloriously recompensed by the Judge of all, in the day of final decision.

The work of securing our own salvation and promoting that of others, of evangelizing the benighted nations, and bringing them from the thraldrom of sin into the glorious liberty of the Gospel, is one of immense magnitude and difficulty; which can never be accomplished but by the united, strenuous, faithful endeavors of the followers of Christ; attended with the mighty operation of the Holy Spirit. Still there is no occasion for discouragement. The King in Zion, unto whom all angels, principalities, and powers are subject, in whom all the fullness of the Godhead dwells, is our Leader and Commander; the decree has gone forth from the throne of the Eternal Father that unto him every knee shall bow, that all nations shall serve him; innumerable multitudes have already been brought to receive him heartily as their Lord and Saviour; and, gathered up from the ruins of human apostasy, are shining and rejoicing in his heavenly kingdom; countless numbers of others, while refusing to yield to his authority and accept of offered mercy, have perished from the way, when his wrath was kindled but a little; the good work of extending abroad the glad news of salvation is at this time going forward with glorious success; and the King of kings, followed by all his mighty hosts, is marching through the earth conquering and to conquer. Why, then, should we be discouraged by any array of opposition? Let the enemies of the Lord Jesus oppose themselves, if they will, to the flowing of the rivers; the shining of the sun; the revolutions of the earth bringing day and night, summer and winter; or seek to abolish any other law of nature which the Almighty has established; but think not to arrest the progress of Immanuel's conquest of the world. His glorious cause must and will prevail. The greatest obstacles, the mightiest array of opposition, he can overcome with infinite ease. Why, then, should we yield to despondency?

We have at all times the strongest motives to press onward. By the example of our devoted missionaries, who have gone, and are going forth to labor, and suffer, and die for the salvation of the perishing; by the holy lives, self-sacrificing efforts and martyrdom of the apostles and primitive Christians; the authority, the compassion, and promises of God; by the wonderful love and sufferings of our exalted Saviour who laid down his life for our redemption, and whom we are most sacredly bound to obey; by the worth of hundreds of millions of immortal souls who must have the Gospel speedily or be for ever lost; by our own hopes of heaven, let us be aroused to put forth our strongest and most faithful endeavors to extend his kingdom and glory in the world. Let us pray, and give, and labor, and endure hardness, as the devoted followers of such a glorious leader should. Never was the missionary field so open before, or the prospect of the conversion of the world so manifestly encouraging. No good effort will be in vain. And let us work while it is day; for the night—the long night of death—cometh.

When all Christ's incorrigible enemies shall be subdued and put under his feet; and all who shall have been made willing in the day of his power shall stand in robes of righteousness, with crowns of glory on their heads, before him; when his great work of mediation and of conquest shall be fully accomplished, and he in the presence of the assembled universe shall give up the kingdom to the Eternal Father, and receive his highest approbation, if we may but hear him say to us, 'Well done, good and faithful servants, enter ye into the joy of your Lord,' abundantly rich and glorious will be our recompense. Amen.

MINUTES

NINTH ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Association met in the Baptist Church, Chicago, Ill., September 26, 1855, at 10 o'clock, A. M. In the absence of the President, Hon. Lawrence Brainerd, F. D. Parish of Ohio, a Vice-President, was called to the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. John Rankin, of Ohio.

Rev. S. G. Wright, of Ill., was appointed Recording Secretary, pro tem., and Rev. J. E. Roy, Assistant Secretary. The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read and approved.

The following Committees were appointed by the Chair, namely:

Business Committee.—Rev. F. Bascom, Ill.; Rev. J. A. Thome, Ohio; Rev. G. Whipple, N. Y.; Rev. O. Emerson, Iowa; Rev. W. Cochran, Wisconsin; Rev. E. Andrews, Mich.

Committee on Nominations,—Rev. L. H. Parker, Ill.; Rev. S. G. W. Rankin, Conn.; Rev. S. H. Dwinnell, Wis.; Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, N. Y.; Rev. A. M. Richardson, Ohio.

The Business Committee reported in part, as follows, namely:

- 1. Reading of the Treasurer's Report.
- 2. Devotional exercises until time for recess.
- 3. Reports of the Secretaries.
- 4. Sermon by Rev. J. A. Thome, in the evening.
- 5. Wednesday morning, devotional exercises at eight o'clock, to continue one hour.

The above report was accepted and adopted.

The Annual Report of the Treasurer, Lewis Tappan, was read by the Secretary for the Foreign Department, who stated that the Treasurer was unavoidably detained from the meeting. The report was approved and referred to the Executive Committee for publication.

A season of devotional exercises was then enjoyed, after which the Association took a recess till 2 o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Association met at 2, P. M., and was opened with prayer.

The Secretary of the Foreign Department presented an abstract of the report of that department, during the reading of which, he introduced the Rev. A. M. Richardson, lately connected with the Jamaica Mission, who gave many interesting facts in regard to the Mission in Jamaica, after which, the Secretary of the Home Department read abstracts from the Annual Report of that department.

A communication was received from the "Young Men's Association" of Chicago, tendering the use of their Library and Reading-Room to the Association, during its sessions; whereupon, a vote of thanks was returned for their courtesy.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The Annual Sermon was preached by Rev. J. A. Thome, from Acts 17: 22, 23—Paul in Athens.

THURSDAY MORNING.

A meeting for prayer and conference was held, commencing at eight o'clock, and continuing till nine, at which time the meeting was called to order for business. The Corresponding Secretary for the Foreign Department finished reading the abstracts of the Annual Report, after which, he introduced Rev. William J. Shuey, of the United Brethren in Christ, who had recently returned from an exploring mission in Africa. He made interesting statements in regard to that field of missionary labor. The United Brethren propose to open a mission station, near the Mendi Mission, and to cooperate with the American Missionary Association.

The Business Committee reported a series of resolutions, which were accepted. Numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 were discussed and adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That our thanks are due to the great Head of the Church for the means that have been generously furnished the past year to carry forward the Missionary work.—Ja larger amount than that of the preceding year, notwithstanding the pecuniary embarrassments of the country]—for the prayers that have been offered for the success of the Association—for the general health of the Officers and Missionaries—and for the beneficent results of their labors; and that it is carnestly hoped that with the renewed prosperity of the country the friends of Missions will enlarge their desires and increase their benefactions so that the number of missionaries may be multiplied, and the operations of the Association greatly extended.

Resolved, That we are greatly strengthened and encouraged by the increasing feeling throughout the land that reformatory Missionary Societies are Indispensable—that the principles and measures of the American Missionary Association have been gaining the confidence of the people of God—and that the seal of Divine approbation has been placed upon the instrumentality that has been used to advance the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom.

Resolved, That we assure the Missionaries and Teachers in the employment of the Association, that they have our sympathy in all their labors and exposures, and our prayers for their health, unity, spirituality, and usefulness; that they have the sympathy and congratulations of a numerous body of Christians of different denominations; and that fervent prayers are offered that they may all have confidence in the Divine promises, and be cheered by the declarations: "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." . . . "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." . . . "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless ceme again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Resolved, That past success encourages us in prosecuting the work of Missions, and maintaining in Kansas and other Territories exposed to the corrupting infuences of Slavery, and also in the slave States, an unpolluted Gospel, the circulation of the Bible and reformatory tracts, and in urging Christian people to afford liberal aid in the prosecution of these labors, so useful and necessary to arrest the progress of infidelity and oppression, and save these Territories and States from ruin, and the perpetrators of crime and sin from the judgments of the Almighty.

Resolved, That all complicity with slavery on the part of Missionary Boards, Benevolent Societies, ecclesiastical bodies, ministers and churches, should be deplored by every friend of God and man; and that the purification of the Church from the corrupting influences of the great sin and crime of the nation, by refusing Christian fellowship with every one who holds his fellow-men in slavery, and by the fearless and uncompromising inculcation of Gospel principles, and their maintenance by consistent practice, should be the desire of every friend of Christ.

THURSDAY, P. M.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated by the Association and the congregation present. Rev. John Rankin made the opening address, and officiated in the distribution of the bread. Dr. Edward Beecher followed in an address, and in the distribution of the cup.

After the conclusion of this exercise the Association was again called to order for the transaction of business. Resolutions Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 were read, discussed and adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the Association approve of and sanction the establishment of the Marquesas Mission which has been effected by the Committee within the past year, being persuaded that extraordinary providences, which have opened that new field, have laid before us a call not to be slighted, and that they furnish a pledge of God's favor and support for the undertaking.

Resolved, That the relinquishing during the year of the Mission among the Chinese in California be sustained by the Association in view of the reasons assigned by the Committee for this measure.

Resolved, That the Home missionary field of our vast country claims the increased attention of every Christian and philanthropist, and that the smiles of God upon our Home Missions should encourage us in this work, while the multiplied destitutions of the field press us to the most earnest and prayerful efforts to give the Gospel, with all its institutions, to the entire people.

Resolved. That the thanks of this Association be presented to the Trustees of the First Baptist Church of Chicago for the use of their house of worship kindly granted to the body; also, to the families of the city, whose hospitality has been extended to the members and friends of the Association in attendance at its annual meeting.

Resolved, That the Deports of the Servettees which have head head before the

Resolved, That the Reports of the Secretaries, which have been laid before the Association, be approved, and referred to the Executive Committee for publication. Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to the Rev. Mr. Thome for his sermon, preached last evening, and that he be requested to furnish the Executive Committee with a copy for publication.

The Committee on Nominations reported the following list of officers, and recommended their election for the ensuing year, namely:

TRUESDAY EVENING.

The services of the evening were commenced with prayer by Rev. Mr. Goodman, of Illinois. Addresses on Home Missions were then made by Rev. S. G. Wright, Agent of the Illinois Home Missionary Association, and Rev. O. Emerson, Agent of the American Missionary Association for Iowa. Addresses on Foreign Missions were made by Rev. J. P. Bardwell, of Ohio, and Rev. A. M. Richardson, lately from Jamaica.

The Association then voted to adjourn to meet next year, at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee. After prayer, the congregation were dismissed with the Apostolic benediction.

Is presenting to the Association and the Christian public their Ninth Annual Report, the Executive Committee are reminded of the words of the preacher: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." Since our last annual meeting one of the Vice-Presidents of the Association, Hon. Wm. Jackson, of Massachusetts, has passed from the scene of his earthly labors, and entered into rest. We have also to report the decease of two of our female missionaries, Mrs. Spencer, of the Ojibue Mission, and Miss Winters, of the Mendi Mission.

Mr. Jackson was a member of the Convention that organized the American Missionary Association, and, although averse to assuming office of any kind, was chosen its first president, which office he held up to the time of our last annual meeting. At that time, admonished, as he said, by the increasing infirmities of age, he declined a reëlection, although he consented to be placed on the list of vice-presidents. As he was an early and constant, so was he also an active and liberal friend of the Association. He took pleasure in attending its annual meetings, and in induoing others to attend, in visiting the Missionary Rooms, in circulating the monthly paper, in presenting the objects and intelligence of the Society at Monthly Concerts, in soliciting funds, and in praying for the welfare of the Association and its missionaries. In his last sickness he sent his dying message to the officers of the Society, telling them they were engaged in a good work, and exhorting them to perseverance. On a former occasion he said, in reference to his having been President of the Association for eight years: "I appreciate the honor of holding that office more than of any office I ever held." Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

During the year just closed, five missionary laborers have for the first time joined their missions in the foreign field, three have returned to their work after a short time spent in this country, four are now on their way to new fields of labor, and eight are under appointment, expecting soon to depart for their several missions.

The Treasurer's Report shows an increase of $4632.38, or about 93 per cent over the receipts of the previous year. The number of Life Members, which was last year 1159, has been increased 228, and is now 1387. Twenty-two thousand copies of the American Missionary are sent out monthly from the office of the Association.

MENDI MISSION.

Stations .- KAW-MENDI, BOOM-FALLS, AND GOOD-HOPE.

Missionaries.—Rev. Geo. Thompson, Rev. J. C. Tefft, Rev. John S. Brooks, Doctof T. G. Cole, Daniel W. Bueton, Edward Herey Grerk, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Tefft, Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. Bueton, Mrs. Grern, Miss Hannal More, Miss Mass Miss Suran Wolsey, Miss Jar Winters. Under appointment, David J. Lre, M.D., Mrs. Lee, M.D., Miss Sarah J. Wintosh, and Miss Hannah Howes.

Three Native Assistants.

A reinforcement for this mission sailed from New-York, January 23, and landed in Sierra Leone, February 26, from whence they soon after sailed for the mission stations. The party consisted of Rev. J. C. Tefft, Mrs. Tefft, (formerly Miss Lovisa Sexton,) and Mrs. Burton, who were returning to the missionary field, and Miss Susan Wolsey, Miss Susan Teall, and Miss Jane Winters, who then first joined the mission. They were accompanied by Wm. J. Shuey, David C. Kumler, and David K. Flickinger, from Ohio, ministers connected with the churches of the "United Brethren in Christ." They were deputed by the Missionary Society of their denomination to visit the Mendi Mission, with a view to ascertain by personal observation and inquiry whether the, field about that mission is a desirable one for the commencement of foreign missionary operations by that denomination. Two of these brethren, Messrs, Shuey and Kumler, have since returned, and reported to their Board in favor of establishing a mission on the Jong River at Mo-Kelli, near one of our stations, and recommending a plan of cooperation in the work of African missions with this Association. A Committee of that body has been appointed to attend the Annual Meeting of the Association, and authorized to complete arrangements for perfecting this plan of cooperation. Mr. Flickinger remains in Africa.

Miss Teall was united in marriage to Mr. J. S. Brooks, at Kaw-Mendi, in March.

Miss Winters died at the Mission House, Kaw-Mendi, May 4, 1855, after an illness of ten days. During the few weeks of her life in Africa, she engaged in labors for the welfare of the Mission with an energy which no unacclimated person could long put forth. Letters from the Mission, written while she was yet in health, had warned the Executive Committee that we must expect soon to hear of her decease. She had generally enjoyed vigorous health in this country, and feeling entirely well, it was impossible to persuade her that she could not endure as much there, of both mental and physical labor, as she had been accustomed to undertake here. Possessed of an energy that knew ne fatigue, ardent, and entirely self-sacrificing in her zeal to do good both to the bodies and souls of others, to her this error proved to be a fatal one, and she soon passed beyond the field of her earthly labor.

For the sake of Africa and its missions, and those who may contemplate laboring there, we are constrained to make an extract from letters received from the missionaries. One of them says:

"She erred strangely, disregarding the experience, advice and warnings of her associates, yielding without reserve to the intoxicating influence of the climate, and deceiving herself by supposing that its exciting influence was the full glow of health and the flow of natural spirits. She has not been alone in her fatal delusion; too many have gone down to the grave while, but a few hours before, they supposed that they were never more healthy, or better able to endure labor."

It should, however, be noted, that with her peculiarly ardent temperament, her views of her own physical ability, and her sense of duty, to have sat down in comparative idleness while surrounded by the multitude needing her labors, would have induced a feeling of condemnation more dreadful to her than the idea of death. Her language when leaving our shores seems to have been almost prophetic: "First to Africa, then to Heaven."

KAW-MENDI STATION.

This is the oldest station of our African Mission. It was established by Mr Raymond, and for many years was conducted by his labors, aided only by such native Africans as he could call to his assistance. The site was selected not because of any peculiar advantages it was supposed to possess, but because the country was then engaged in war, and this was the only place that could be obtained which promised facilities for getting into the interior, towards the Mendi country, for which the first missionaries had started. The continued prevalence of wars for a long time confined the labors of our missionary to that locality, and made it the principal station of the Mission, giving it a comparative importance above that which its natural advantages would have secured for it.

During the year now reported the number of missionaries at this station has been quite too small for its wants, rendering it impossible for them to give that minute attention to the habits and manners and spiritual necessities of individuals connected with it, that the missionaries desired. Yet the blessing of God has attended their labors; His Spirit has been poured out there. Numbers have professed conversion, and some have united with the Mission church.

At this station, Mr. Thompson writes, there has been a large farm of 100 acres under cultivation, all by hoes, furnishing work for the school-boys and the people. The products of the farm, consisting of cassada, cocoa, sweet potatoes, arrowroot, yams, etc., have furnished in part food for the Mission, and enabled them to supply the wants of some of the hungry natives who have come a distance of from 15 to 30 miles to buy cassada for their subsistence.

School.—The school at this station has numbered 100 scholars, nearly all of whom are wholly supported by the Mission. Many of them profess to love God, and give promise of future usefulness. Mr. Thompson says: "They are making good progress in study, and are our great hope for the future spread of the Gospel throughout the country." The cost of the support and education of each scholar has been recently estimated at $30 per annum. It was formerly supposed that it could be secured for $25. Annual contributions for the support of one scholar each have been made by many Sabbath-schools, and by some individual Christians in this country. An increase in the number of such donors would facilitate the operations of the Mission.

At the close of the year the school numbered but 80 pupils, some having been removed to other stations. During a part of the year it has been taught by native Africans not competent to instruct the more advanced scholars; yet the Executive Committee have very gratifying evidence of its great importance. Good American teachers are now greatly needed; and several male teachers could be profitably employed at this and other stations. It is evidently impossible to supply the spiritual wants of Africa wholly by missionaries sent from abroad. There must be adequate efforts put forth to train native youth intellectually and religiously, that thus they may be fitted in their turn to be instructors of others-preachers of righteousness, and missionaries of the cross to the millions of their own countrymen. It would be manifestly unwise to attempt to accomplish this work by removing any considerable number of this class from their own shores to be educated in Christian lands. As well might we attempt to cultivate the soil of Africa wholly by means of imported laborers, or with the aid of the few that could be brought from that country and taught agriculture here. For the physical and moral cultivation needed on that continent laborers must be trained and qualified for the work on the ground. Only thus can the supply be made equal to the demand, or the proper qualifications of the laborers be best secured. As a necessary means to the preparation of this class of laborers, teachers thoroughly furnished mentally and spiritually must be sent from this country in numbers sufficient to commence the training of some hundreds, from whom those properly endowed may be selected for higher cultivation. These considerations, taken in connection with the fact that the mental training given in missionary schools is a good preparation for the proper understanding of the truths of the Gospel, and the equally evident fact that the greater number of converts in heathen lands are taken from the ranks of the young, and those below the middle age of life, magnify the office of a teacher for a mission school, and show the importance of selecting the supply from the best and most consecrated talent to be found in the Christian Church.

The church at Kaw-Mendi, as reported last year, numbered fifty-three members. The first of November the number was sixty. The first Sabbath in January, eight more were added to it, and a class of twenty or more met weekly for religious instruction. The letters last received report the addition of seven members, three of whom were adults, the first Sabbath in July. The number added to the church during the period embracing the first Sabbath of July, 1854, and the corresponding Sabbath in 1855, was thirty-four. Three had been excommunicated. The number of native members in that church is now seventy-two. At their last communion seventy-three members, including the missionaries present, sat together around the table of the Lord.

Mr. Thompson states that the revival mentioned in our last report continued for some time after. For the space of three months he attended religious meetings every evening, and ceased only from a failure of his strength. Since then there have been many seasons of great refreshing from the presence of the Holy Spirit, and some striking exhibitions of Divine power.

Miss More, writing from this station early in the year, says:

"We have been permitted to enjoy a revival of God's holy work on the hearts and consciences of sinners around us, for which we give God the glory in being permitted to be co-workers together with him. Oh, glorious boon! Inestimable privilege! All the older girls in my school are hopefully pions. Am-I not richly compensated for my toils and labors of love among them, for my weariness and painfulness, my watchings and fastings, the knowledge I have imparted to them, the love unfeigned I have manifested towards them—warm, I think, as a mother toward her own offspring?"

In another letter, under date of January 2, 1855, she says:

"Thanks to a kind Providence, I am now comfortably well, and what is better, most happy in my labors. How can I be otherwise, when reaping such a harvest of souls? We had a watch-meeting which continued till near one o'clock New-Year's morning. It was a deeply solemn meeting, in which groans, prayers and tears were mingled, and ascended, as we trust, as incense before the altar of God. Numbers took the anxious-seats, and some expressed the hope of salvation. Eight were propounded last-Sabbath for admission to the church. The good work has been progressing since last May, and every communion season has witnessed the increase of this flourishing vine, planted by the right hand of Jebovah, in this wilderness, and which he has watched over till the present time. Though it has sometimes brought forth wild grapes, still we have also the genuine fruit. Permit me to say, we do not tell you the breadth or extent of the good work in progress, and can only say we thank God for what our eyes have seen and our ears have heard of his rich salvation; and bless him that we are permitted to be co-laborers in so noble a cause.

"Pray much for us, that we may be spared till our places can be filled."

OUT-STATION AT MANYA.

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

On the 18th of January, Mr. Edward H. Green and wife (Sarah Mar-gru Green, one of the Amistad Captives) opened a small school at Manya, on the Hahoo River, (see map.) They commenced on the inside of the barricade, having a promise from theking, who had long been pleading for a mission there, that a chapel and teacher's house should be built at some place agreed on, outside, but near the town. The parents there are expected to support their children entirely.

The latest intelligence we have received concerning this experiment was dated April 3. A few extracts made by Mr. Thompson from the letters of Mr. Green, will indicate the grounds he has for the encouragement felt by him. We sometimes fear to publish such extracts, as we do also the intrusting of such a work to men whose opportunities for religious and mental culture have been so limited, lest, being lifted up with pride, they should fall into condemnation of the devil; but we know not how to avoid it.

The school was opened on the 18th of January; on the 22d there were six scholars, and on the 31st, eight.

Feb. 13, Mr. Green wrote:

"The people are much interested in all our work on Sabbaths and week days, and say they would be very sorry to have us go away. We have had very interesting meetings the two last Sabbaths, at Hahoo and here. The Spirit of the Lord was present, and the people have very different feelings with regard to God's word and worship."

On the 20th: "It gives me much pleasure to write about our work here, and to state how the word of God is working in the hearts of the people. You said that many prayers were offered for us at Kaw-Mendi. God has heard and is answering those prayers. I have adopted the plan of having Mrs. G. or Isaac (a boy sent from K. M. as Sherbro interpreter) read a portion of Scripture morning and evening, in Mendi or Sherbro, and then I preach on what they have read, which seems to interest them more. On one Sabbath the Spirit of the Lord was present.

After meeting I had prayers at my house. Mrs. G. told the people of the sufferings of Christ for sinners, and for them. While she was talking, a woman came and wished to speak to her. We called her in, and she said she wanted to know what she must do. She said: "I am the head woman for 'Boondoo medicine,' and since you preached about the punishment those will receive who trust in these foolish country ways, something has troubled my heart, and I do not know what to do with my medicines," (country fushions or conjuring implements.) Mrs G. spoke to her about Jesus, and pointed her to the case of the people of Ephesus, Acts 19: 7-19, and prayed with her. On the following Sabbath, the people of Hahoo came here to meeting—and, after meeting, asked me to go over and preach to them in the evening. We went. Much people were present to hear the word of God, and many acknowledged that their gods were not able to save them, and that they had troubled themselves too much to keep their gods, instead of having a God to keep them. The next Sabbath they came to Manya; we had a large congregation. We had to get a new Barre, and many spread their mats all around the Barre. Spirit of the Lord was present, and it was to me as a little 'heaven below.' believe the Spirit will do its work, and I am encouraged when I think of the promise of God in Is. 55: 10, 11.

On April 3d: "It is with feelings of joy and praise to God, that I write to you that the Lord has, in a rich measure, blessed our labors here. On Sabbath we had a very interesting meeting, and an old woman was inquiring what she must do to be saved. She broke down all the idols in her house, and her children think she is mad. I generally have prayers with her, morning and night, in her house, and vesterday, she herself prayed! How pleasing to hear her telling God that she is wicked, and has a bad heart, but now she is determined to serve God, and leave off all her country fashions!"

The following extracts from a letter written by Miss More, before the arrival of the missionaries last sent out, may give some insight into the privations and toils of missionary life, as well as its rewards. She writes:

"It is now almost a year since I have seen the face of a white female. But why speak of this? Before, when all the sisters died, who came out with me, I was alone sixteen months. I only allude to it, that such as mourn over my loneliness may know that very little time has been taken to brood over-it; indeed I have scarcely found time to feel myself alone.

"My dear sisters in America, whether located in Sunny or Shady-side parsonages, know very little of the trials of their missionary sisters, with untaught, unclad and barbarous natives for their only domestics. Delicacy would shrink from the attempt to describe their filthy habits. Just figure to yourself a female missionary located in an African wild, among savages who reside in kraals, or in mud huts, without chimneys, windows, or floors, destitute of clothing, whose chief fur-niture consists of a mat to sleep on, a pot to cook rice in, a wooden bowl for water, and a calabash, or cocoa-nut shell for a drinking-cup.

"For the last year, not a day has passed but putrid sores of some description have been dressed in this Mission-house, and usually by me. Sometimes I bathe half a dozen sick children, in my dressing-room soon after I rise. This morning I bathed five, and dealt out twelve doses of medicine, administering most of it with my own

"I have sometimes had twenty in the house sick at once, and, God be praised, death has not taken away any of them! But most of them have, as we humbly trust, become the subjects of Divine grace. Truly this has been a year of the right hand of the Most High. Though brother Thompson and myself have found plenty to do, we have done it joyfully; for the Lord, in thus blessing our labors, hath rewarded us an hundred-fold.

"It would have gladdened your heart to attend our meetings, which have been much of the time kept up every evening through the week, with five services on the Sabbath. Glorious seasons have we witnessed, when our chapel has resounded with the prayers and groans of prostrate sinners begging for mercy-anxiety exhibited in every gesture. At such times it has been my privilege to go among them, and tell them, in the most simple language, of that blessed Saviour, who left all the glory of Heaven, and came down to earth, to seek and to save even the vilest of sinners, inviting them to throw themselves unreservedly on his arm of mercy, and often kneeling and praying with them. Then to see them give up de-pendence on a fleshly arm, and yield themselves to God, to be used in his service, whenever and wherever he sees good they should labor! It would warm and cheer the friends of our Mission, to hear them speak of the preciousness of that dear Saviour, who is no respecter of persons, but is just as willing to save the ignorant, the despised, the outcast, the poor slave, as the rich or noble. Then they wonder at that love which sent missionaries, not merely to redeem their bodies from bondage, but to lead them to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world.

"Many of our scholars tell us they are in haste to get their education, in order to go and tell their people about this Saviour, and beg of them to renounce their idols, their country fashions, and charms, their gree-grees, their devil-bush, their fetiches, their Mohammedanism and polygamy, with a host of attending evils.

"Does any one think me unhappy in such labors of love among this benighted people, or that I wish to go home and recruit my failing health? To such I answer: No! I can not leave, till my call from God to go is as plain as it was to come. The children of the school call me mother, and write to me from the other stations, addressing me as their 'missionary mother at Kaw-Mendi.' Heaven seems quite as near from this place as America. Death to me has lost its terrors; I rather look forward to it as an entrance into rest—even that rest which remains the for the people of God. Still it shall be my aim to toll on, and finish the work God has assigned for me in his vineyard, that whenever he calls for me, my work may be done, and well done."

BOOM-FALLS STATION, (Mo-Tappan.)

The reopening of the Boom-Falls station, near Tissana, was mentioned in our last report. Since then a church consisting of five members has been formed there, four of whom came from the church at Kaw-Mendi; the other was baptized and received on profession of faith. Dr. Cole has been associated with Mr. Brooks in labor at this station and its neighborhood, during a small portion of the year, but for the greater part of the time Mr. Brooks has been alone. He was ordained to the work of the ministry in March last, and at a meeting of the Mission held that month, Mr. and Mrs. Tefft were appointed to that station with him.

The death of the chief Braw, and the succession of a chief supposed to be less favorable to their work, or to the preservation of peace, gave some anxiety to the Mission at the beginning of the year. Of the deceased chief, Mr. Brooks says:

"A happy understanding and friendship had been established between him and the station. He felt both an interest and a pride in the success of all its plans. He had become most ariently enlisted in the cause of peace, and earnestly desired to settle all the difficulties which he had aided in creating, before he should be called from time. The poor old man, with strength scarcely sufficient to raise himself to his feet, would plead most eloquently and earnestly with his tribe to yield their prejudices and submit to peace. He lived to dispatch his oldest son, with three attending chiefs, to his enemies with an 'olive branch' and a peace-offering in their hands, and words of friendship on their lips. The joy of the old man's heart as he returned to Mo-Tappan, (where he was residing during the session of the 'purror,'*) and reported, while sitting around the evening fire, the progress and triumph of peace, was full and enthusiastic. As the old chief closed, he raised his hands, touching the ends of his fore-fingers together, saying with much feeling, 'So have I lived with my enemies,' and then locking them fast together he exclaimed, 'So we now live.' This was almost his last act. The next day he went to the river to batche, but, overcome with weakness, stretched himself upon the sand, and soon became speechless. The next day he was no more."

This station has in its neighborhood several very considerable towns, under the control of different chiefs, and often hostile to each other. The jealousies of these chiefs and their people increase the great desire of the missionaries to extend missionary labors to all their towns, not only for the promotion of the spiritual interests of the people directly, but as a means of preserving the peace of the country. Accordingly, they have held religious services or opened schools in six of them. Of the region of country immediately about Boom-Falls, Mr. Brooks says:

"Here is a centre of influence created chiefly by natural causes. The Boom river, breaking up into frequent rapids, obstructs navigation above, and the colonial trade and the interior centre here. By the laws of this district, colonists can go no higher up to traffic, and from the fact that goods of some sort can always be found here in exchange for produce, the traders from the interior seldom go farther down. A larger population is thus collected here than is to be found in other districts, and a three-fold field of labor is presented—the colonists with their Bible and prayer-books, the 'strangers' from the interior, and the natives. Sumbwea, Mo-Bungo, Tissana, Mo-Foogi, and this place, should be regarded as one station, and under one set of missionaries, who should reside at this place, and at each we must have a school."

In another place, after speaking of the strong probability that many of the youth educated under the joint influences of the location and the mission would engage in trade, and go into different parts of the country, and of the strong motive thus given to labor for their conversion, Mr. Brooks adds:

"These youth are to hold influence in the country, and have the government of it. The leading families, or portions of them, of several petty divisions of interior tribes, as well as the principal families of Boompey and Looboo, are located here. We must undertake in earnest their education. There is nothing in the way to prevent our doing all we could reasonably expect."

In describing their labor in erecting a missionary building, Mr. B. says:

"This region has nearly all of it been under cultivation within a few years, so that timber is scarce. Only in tangled swamps and rocky ravines can it be found. The poles for small rafters we have been obliged to bring a mile and a half on the shoulders and heads of men. The cutting of these has caused an additional expense for clearing miles of foot-path in the jungle. Saw-logs have been got at an equal disadvantage, and, after an almost fruitless effort of days, we have been obliged to erect our saw-pits on the spots where the trees fell.

"Our school has made commendable progress. The number of pupils is 12. Two have been with me a year and a half, the others about a year. The school at Mo-Bungo is a recommendation of the plan for schools at the towns about the station, exceeding our most sanguine expectations. The pupils of the school are all punctual in attending meeting on the Sabbath, and are as quiet and orderly as children usually are.

"Meetings have been sustained at Mo-Bungo with a good degree of interest. Do not understand too much by this. It is encouraging to see a heathen man or woman catch a single thought of God, or of their own souls. It is to be remembered that this people have no higher notion of sin than personal injury. Theft they regard as honorable and worthy of praise if dextrously done. To steal well is regarded as a trade—an accomplishment worth laboring for from youth to manhood. Female virtue is an article of traffic, bought and sold by fathers, mothers, husbands, and other relatives, with or without the consent of the parties most interested. Falsehood and lies are praiseworthy when successful, and drunkenness is the mark of high life."

At a later date Mr. Brooks writes:

"Our meetings are sustained, interesting and promising as usual. We have held them at Mo-Tappan, Mo-Bungo, and Tissana, and recently we have added Mo-Foogi, Sumbwea, and Mo-Colong."

Writing about the calls for missionary labor, Mr. Brooks says:

"Bar-Colong is more and more earnest in his request for a mission at Mo-Bwavi. I wish he could ask you, once or twice, as he is accustomed to ask me: 'When are you coming to teach my children? Can't you come this year?' I'would like to see if you could put him off."

In another connection, before he recommenced his labors at Tissana, after describing the services of the Sabbath, Mr. Brooks writes:

"While resting on my camp-cot, a man from Tissana entered my room with a cutlass in one hand, and a small parcel in the other. The Sabbath-flag was drooping over the house, and he should have known it was no time to visit me. I entered into conversation with him, first reproving him for his disregard of our Sabbath rules. But his answer! Oh! how it grieves me to think that the poor man had any ground for it! It stung me as a reproach, paining my heart, and bowing me in the dust before God.

"'When,' said he, 'you first came here, we kept the Sabbath, for you preached to us every Sunday. Now you have taken the Sabbath away from us because you no longer preach to us. We would hear you now, but you will not come. You like Mo-Bungo people better. We watch you. You do not love us as you used to.'

"What words! Though they are full of selfishness, jealousy and envy, yet they grate on my ear and burn in my heart. If we are to avoid the appearance of evil, what shall be done? My heart is fixed. I am provoked to a good work. By the blessing of God, Tissana shall have the stated preaching of the Gospel."

In Mr. Brooks' letters we discover the evidences of a great anxiety lest some wrong inferences should be drawn from his communications. He thinks there is so much danger of misconstruing statements made relative to a missionary field that he trembles at the thought of writing them. He says:

"Friends in America view the scenes described, but lose sight of all other circumstances and relations, or supply their place with erroneous ones, which so change the real facts in the case, by false colorings, as to make an impression wholly unlike what we would convey. On this account, I fear to make statements or representations to others than those who have had experience enough to know how to understand them. In all the circumstances which discourage there are also many modifying ones that are truly hopeful, which we do not, and could not, fully present; and should they be mentioned, they could not be appreciated but by such as have had experience in a mission field. This is also true of all hopeful circumstances. Why then should we not fear?"

Among the trying circumstances of his field, Mr. Brooks mentions the renewal of the slave trade near him. He says:

"Within the last two months the slave trade has been renewed in this district. Not less than a score of cances freighted with goods for slaves, have landed at Sumbwea and Momando, and opened their factories. Almost every day am I pained at the sight of the price of human beings borne by my door. Within the two last weeks, goods for not less than forty slaves have been carried through this since could not supply themselves with tobacco, and makes them feel their consequence in an unusual manner, and at the same time awakens their old passion for the slave trade, and for war, which is the only support of the trade and of the slavery that exists here.

"The very low price at which slaves are sold shows that the trade would be blotted out of existence in a few years without war. A boy or girl of twelve to sixteen years of age, is sold among the people of the country for twelve bushels of salt, worth no more than £1 l6s, or for the same quantity of rice, worth about the same price. To the traders, for twelve bars of tobacco and one cutlass, or twenty bars of tobacco with one bar pot, a human being is sold. What a fact to record, that a human being is of less value in market than a cow. That a man or woman is bartered and sold for from eight hundred and fifty to one thousand leaves of tobacco! Yes, more than this, a circumstance occurred within my personal knowledge, of a sprightly, intelligent girl of twelve or thirteen years of age being sold or exchanged for a goat and three young kids. And another of an infant being sold for a yard of white cotton cloth! These are the fruits of war."

Among the means resorted to by some of the leading men of the country to get slaves, either to supply the market or pay their debts, Mr. Brooks mentions the following, and specifies several instances where native young men have been entrapped by it. The wives of some of these men will dress themselves up in their most attractive attire, and, "perfumed, oiled, and painted," go about among the more respectable young men, and, by their affability and freedom, tempt them either to make some improper proposals, or to give them some slight present. So soon as they can accomplish this, the matter is reported to their husbands, the young men are seized, a "palaver" is made, and if they can not prove themselves clear, they are either taken as slaves, or made to redeem themselves by furnishing slaves as substitutes. Mr. B. says he knows one woman who in four months has thus led away ten young men.

Pleading for a reinforcement, he says:

"Now, estimate, if you can, the opposing force against the Gospel. Weigh these circumstances in scales with the influence of a single laborer in the cause of the Redeemer, and tell how much more must be added thereto to exactly counteract the efforts of a lone messenger of peace? Solve one problem more: What degree of opposition in the forms above noticed, will render it politic to reinforce the station with an evangelist or two?"

GOOD-HOPE STATION: SHERBRO ISLAND.

The commencement of this station on the Sherbro Island was reported last year. It has since been under the care of Mr. Burton, assisted by Miss Aldrich. Mrs. Burton returned to Africa and joined her husband in March last. Dr. Cole has spent a part of his time at this station, and a part at the Boom-Falls station. There has been no ordained missionary residing at Good Hope. At the commencement of the year the school numbered 12 scholars; February 1, it had increased to 20. Most of them are from 4 to 10 years of age, three only being older than 10. These are given to the mission by a written agreement from their friends, to be under the entire control of the mission for from twelve to sixteen years, according to their age. Mr. Burton writes that he sees that the children improve. His hopes for the country depend almost wholly on the conversion and religious training of the young. An ordained missionary is greatly needed at this station.

Some attempts to revive the slave trade in this vicinity, also, have been promptly met by the British consul. Mr. Burton wrote in a letter received some months since:

[&]quot;A few days ago the British consul captured two slave canoes, with eighty-nine slaves. The slaves were packed in the bottom of the canoes, and sticks tied across on top of the seats, to keep them confined. The owners intended to fight with poisoned arrows, but Mr. Hanson shot the first man who attempted to resist. The rest yielded without resistance."

BURNING FOR WITCHCRAFT.

Near the commencement of the year Mr. Burton wrote that he had, in connection with the British consul, rescued five persons from probable death, who were under torture for witchcraft. They had suffered eight or ten days before it came to his knowledge. The rest we give in his own words:

"I then hastened to the spot and found three of them. One, a woman, some thirty years of age, was burned till there is hardly a place on her body that is not a putrid sore. Her left breast is perfectly roasted; also, the whole of her right arm and left leg. The other two, a man and girl, are not so bad. The man had a heavy chain fastened to his neck; the girl had one ankle fastened in a log. I begged and entreated the woman who inflicted the torture to release them, which she finally did, and I took the man and girl in the boat to the Mission-house. I then went to Mr. Hanson, and he went with Mr. Nathan and myself to the spot. We concluded it was best to remove the other woman, and Mr. Hanson applied to the native chief to get the two who were at another place, a short distance off. I brought the poor woman to the Mission, and the chief sent a man for the other two, who brought them here. We have the five at the Mission. One of the last two has a young child, born during this torture. The woman who is burned so badly, I think can not live. I hope the others will."

About a week later Mr. B. wrote that they were all better.

Mr. Burton thus describes a portion of country a little north of Sherbro Island, on the mainland, and the desire of the chiefs for missions:

"The Bargroo river has suffered more from war since we came than any other section of the country near here, and is now in a state of confusion and alarm. I visited several towns—three of them important barricaded towns—and was received with much kindness, and treated with all the attention that the people could extend. I conversed much with the chiefs and people respecting the condition of their country, and told them of our desire to establish schools among them, and help them 'hold the country' in quietness and peace. They listened with great interest, and expressed (without an exception) a strong desire that we should establish a mission in their part of the country, assigning as a reason 'that where there is a mission no war can come; for,' they say, 'ever since the mission has been at Kaw-Mendi no war has ever troubled that place.' At one place I met a number of chiefs, who were collected together for the purpose of settling some palarer, and among them was the chief of Mahno, a town on the Mahno branch of the Bargroo river, which I wished to visit. He voluntarily sent a man with me to his town, with instructions to the person whom he had left in charge during his absence, to show me all of the country that I wished to see, and told me that I might have any place that I wanted for a mission.

"The Bargroo river is a much better stream to navigate than any of the other rivers which empty into the Sherbro, having a channel of sufficient depth for vessels of large size to pass nearly to the hills. The Mahno river is about the size of the Passaic at Newark, in New-Jersey. At the town of Mahno, and for some distance above, it passes between the hills. About two miles above, there is a fall of about four feet in the river at low tide, but at high tide cances and boats can pass without any trouble, and go, as I was told, far back into the country, without any obstruction. I saw one small stream of sufficient size to propel a saw-mill, and the timber of that region is abundant.

"It is my opinion that that is the most important field to occupy immediately, of any now open before us. I am sure that a mission would do more towards making peace in the country than any other influence that could be put in operation there. There should be at least two stations opened on the Bargroo river, and one at Welah, immediately. But the men and money are wanting! "Oh! how I wished that God's people at home might have the situation of this unfortunate land so represented to them as to produce the same impression on their minds that it did on my own, as I passed from town to town, and witnessed the desolate and sunken condition of the poor people, for then there would certainly be means enough provided to establish schools all over this land!"

The latest intelligence from this mission bears date in July. The brethren all importune earnestly for an increased number of missionaries. They are almost crushed by their responsibilities. At least three more male missionaries are at once needed to man the stations already opened, or about to be opened, to say nothing of the numerous demands made upon them for commencing in some of the numerous fields all around them. The most pressing need is for ordained missionaries, well furnished in all things; the next, for well qualified teachers, who could take upon them the care of some of the religious exercises and the religious meetings of the stations. Secular agents are also needed to take charge of some of the necessary business of the mission.

The following extracts from a letter from Mr. Brooks, brings to light some of these wants:

"I will here say of the out-schools, that the experiment, thus far, has been successful. All, and more than it promised our sanguine hopes, has been realized, and my confidence in such efforts is greatly increased. They are to the station, what reflectors are to a light, multiplying its influence greatly. Planted around the principal station, they are miniature missions, and keep alive the light of truth, in the face of the heathen. I feel confident in recommending that such schools be multiplied.

"Our meetings have been irregularly sustained. Our hopes were bright that we could keep up meetings at the places where they had been opened. We now, in review, weep over our disappointment. Most truly men are mortal! Zeal too often fails by fast driving! So it has been with us. When Brother Tefft joined me, we reviewed our fields together, and laid our plans. Scarcely had we fairly got into the work, when Brother Tefft began to fail. In a few days more I was on my bed. Dear brother, our field is too large for us: we may toil to the utmost of our strength, and yet there is work undone at our door. I am now obliged to confine my labors to Mo-Tappan alone, conscious that I am equal to no more, on account of which I am distressed by messages from Mo-Bwavi, informing me that the school children are idle, waiting for school, and asking when the teacher will come back? or if I have forgotten them? Again, Mo-Bungo people frequently ask: 'Why don't you come over to keep Sunday any more? When will you commence the school again? The children are becoming impatient.' Tissana, Mo-Foogi, and Sumbwea join in turn, charging me with forgetting them, not loving them, or stirring up my feelings in some other way.

"I feel it hard to live so, hard to see children out of school, that long to go, people without the Gospel, who would hear it; it is hard to be invited by the heathen to come and preach to them, and not be able to do so; it is hard to be accused of disregard for a people, because I do not, and can not preach to them. What shall be done? Brother, shall we tug and toil on, and get hardened to the Maccdonian cry? or, shall we stop our ears, and refuse to feel for those we can not serve? or shall we continue to hear, till our hearts and zeal ride down the body, and it find a rest in

"Oh! that Christians could feel or comprehend the magnitude of the heathen harvest. I do not suppose this is a riper field than a thousand others, within as many miles on every side of us. The fields are ripe, and ready to harvest; if the church will not reap, Satan will: what is not saved in the Lord's garner, must perish."

Mr. and Mrs. Olds and Miss Stuart have been absent from the Mission during the entire year. Mr. and Mrs. Moffatt, on account of ill-health, were obliged to leave the Mission in February, and two others are newly appointed, and have not yet joined the Mission.

Rev. A. M. Richardson's and Mrs. Richardson's names, which were on our list last year, have been omitted in this enumeration, as the continued ill-health of Mrs. R. precludes the hope of their returning to Jamaica; and his resignation was accepted by the Executive Committee in April last. About the close of the year now reported, Rev. Mr. Way requested the Mission to unite with him in asking the Committee to allow him to retire from the Mission and return home. Permission was granted, and he arrived in New-York in August. The Mission is now in need of additional help, to enable them to prosecute vigorously the enterprises they have commenced there.

Brainerd.—Since our last Annual Report, there has been no ordained missionary resident at Brainerd, and no statistical report of the station has been made. The following extracts from the letters received during the year, will give some insight into the condition of the station

Of the church Mr. Moffatt wrote, before he was obliged, by failing health, to leave his field:

"The church meetings and Sabbath services are generally well attended, and some are evidently growing in grace. I think there is more freedom in prayer and conference meetings. Nothing of importance has come up to mar the peace of the church. Oh! that this state of things might remain, and the Church still increase in wisdom and holiness! Can we not feel that 'Our Father is at the helm,' and that he will guide affairs aright?"

December 6th Mr. Moffat wrote that three new members had been received into the church the Sabbath before. He also reported the death of two female members of the church, one of whom was the wife of a former deacon. He died suddenly, two years since, leaving her with the care of a family of six children, now left orphans. The oldest of these children, a girl eighteen years of age, was hopefully converted, and joined the church the last summer. She is reported as walking humbly and consistently with her profession.

The following extracts taken from a letter from Mr. Richardson, recently pastor of Brainerd Church, will show how highly he estimates the sincere piety of some of the members of that church.

"It is customary in Jamaica, to gather those who profess to be interested in the subject of religion, and disposed to seek the salvation of their souls, in classes for special religious instruction. These inquiry-meetings are held weekly, or less frequently, as the circumstances seem to demand, and are attended by the minister and deacons of the church. Such meetings I ever found among the most interesting and profitable of any that I attended. For my own satisfaction, as well as for future reference, I used occasionally to note down remarks made, as indicative either of different degrees of religious knowledge, or of the different workings of the Spirit of God on different minds. Of course I can not vouch for the truthfulness and genuineness of these fragments of religious experience, yet I was careful to note down only such as seemed to me to be the honest expression of sincere hearts.

"Said one: 'I know truly I great sinner, indeed. I sin through day, through night. I know if God not been merciful to me, him sent me-to place of punish long fore this. I feel all better inside now; me never feel so before. I nothing to look back to in the world, at all, at all. I give up me wholly heart to God.'

"Another, speaking of the greatness of his sins, remarked: 'Me one crucify the Lord Jesus. But him come down from heaven to die for we poor sinners. Him me only hope: I put me wholly trust in him.'

"Another remarked, in their sententious, broken style: 'I consider, and say God too good to we sinners. The world make we fool; the world deceive we. God no make we sin; we bring sin to weself. The world too strong for we; our own goodness won't save we. We all dry bones.'

"Another, evidently under deep conviction, spoke as follows:

"I had malice in my heart once, and I thought I would keep it till I die. But lately I find my heart trouble me very much. I begin to feel I must give up my malice, and all me sins. I think once I was sealed up entirely, I was so wicked. Some time my sins almost make me crazy. But I come to ask that all who have a heart to pray will pray for me. I can't say that I quite a Christian now; but I hope I shall look deeper, and make good work, and put away all my sins.'

"Still another came, with 'a new song' in her mouth, exclaiming, 'I thank and bless the Lord that he has changed my wicked heart, and give me a right heart. From since I went away last week, I think well on my ways, and I do trust I heartily repent of my sins. I think I love what God loves, and hate what he hates. God hates sin, and I hate it."

"The above will serve as specimens of the tone and style of their remarks on such occasions. I have purposely selected such as were expressed in the most intelligible English, that they might be the better understood. The remarks of the old people were sometimes quite unintelligible, even to myself, after I had often heard them; and I was obliged to call upon one of the deacons to explain what they said. They seldom stop to choose a word to express their ideas; the first one that presents itself to the mind is used, whether they understand its meaning or not. We are therefore obliged to judge of their meaning by the connection; and candor sometimes compels us to attribute to them sentiments exactly the opposite of those expressed. Their movements and gestures, also, are often far more expressive of their real feelings than any language which they can command.

"Their unaffected earnestness and childlike simplicity in prayer often imparted to our seasons of social devotion an interest and effect that was truly delightful. Those broken, imperfect heart-utterances betokened a work of the Divine Spirit within the soul, enlightening its darkness, giving birth to new hopes and joys; and teaching it the language of Christian faith and love.

"If their piety is sometimes sadly marred by a want of consistency, no wonder; for so is ours; and they are but half-emancipated from the degrading power of previous evil habits and customs. They are but 'babes in Christ,' and need 'nursing fathers and nursing mothers,' to watch their steps and smooth their path. If we occasionally witness strange exhibitions of insincerity and hypocrisy, we should not mourn as if all were lost; for tares will mingle with the wheat, until separated at the final harvest. So long as we are careful to sow naught but the good seed, we need not fear lest we should be held responsible for the tares an enemy hath

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Eliot.—This station is reported to be in a more prosperous condition than at the close of the previous year. There has not been an increase in the number of church members, nor in the size of the congregations, "but there is a steady advance in Christianity, in all things which make up good and useful members of society;" and the missionary rejoices in a change "as great as under the circumstances could be expected in public sentiment, relative to religion and morality, social and domestic life."

The conversation of the people "clearly shows a far better knowledge of God and the proper duties of religion;" there are among them better regulated families; parents are caring more about the education and proper training of their children, and guarding them more carefully against evil influences; children pay better regard to parental authority; and the relative duties of husband and wife, parent and child, and neighbor with neighbor, are better understood and performed.

In the Sabbath-school exercises there is an increase both in interest and in the number of attendants. The Sabbath-school numbers about 70, and there are about 50 adults who attend at the same hour the Bible-class under care of Mrs. Thompson.

"The school taught by Miss Woodcock," Mr. Thompson says, "is in a flourishing condition, showing an increase both in number and means of support. The manner of raising funds is by voluntary contribution.

"The following statistics present a general idea of the condition of this station:

Although the number of church members is less than at the date of his previous report, Mr. Thompson says:

"We are not left, however, without some tokens of good. The spirit of the Lord is manifestly striving with a number, especially among our young people. Some in the church are asking to know the way of God more perfectly; others are earnestly inquiring what they shall do to be saved, while some have been hopefully converted "In conclusion, let me say, the past year has been a hopeful one. I feel more than ever that we labor not in vain. There are things to discourage, and things that would make our hearts faint; but we remember that it is written, 'Ye shall reap if ye faint not.' I feel more and more like buckling on my armor and preparing for a long siege in Jamaica. The importance of the work continually Union Station.—Rev. Mr. Wolcott has removed from this station to Richmond, and Rev. C. B. Venning has taken charge of it. No statistical report has been received.

Oberlin Station .- The following is the report made by Rev. Mr. Way:

"I am happy to say, that amidst all the discouragements and difficulties under which we have labored in this station, some fruit of our labor is apparent. Most of our members remain steadfast, and improve morally, intellectually, and in their temporal circumstances.

"As I am now leaving this field of labor, the necessity of which I deeply regret, allow me to say, that my convictions of the wrongs of slavery have become deeper and stronger by having seen its dreadful influence on its victims. Years of labor and sacrifice are necessary to eradicate its evils. But as true as the friends of humanity improve the opening providences of God in laboring for his poor, these evils will be removed, and the people, freed from the base influences of their oppressors, will be redeemed, and stand up an honor to the work of benevolence and humanity.

"May the Lord of the harvest send forth more laborers."

By the return of Mr. Way to the United States the station at Oberlin is left without a minister, and the church without a pastor. Mr. Hoppin has charge of the school, and the pastors of the other church will endeavor to supply the pulpit until a new pastor can be provided.

Providence Station.

"The church at Providence numbers 37 members. One has been received during the year, two have died, and two have been cut off. The school has been taught 30 weeks. It was taught 16 weeks by Miss Dean, and 10 weeks by Mrs. Hall, during which time, I see, by the school records, there were in all 58 scholars, and that the average daily attendance was 29. Miss Upson arrived in June, and commenced school the second of July, but it was so near the 'August holidays' that only a few children came.

"The church at Brandon Hill numbers 25 members. Three have been added during the year. Our churches and congregations have contributed:

"The church at Providence has paid less for the support of the Gospel than the church at Brandon Hill, but nearly one half of its members are old and infirm. More would have been paid for the school had it been taught more time. During the year there has been no material change in the appearance of things at either station. We see some progress. If we ever attain the end for which we labor among this people, it must be after many years of hard work. So we toil on. We labor to make the fundamental truths of the Gospel understood. Were these kept out of sight it would be an easy matter to secure professed conversions."

Our missionaries in Jamaica are laboring in a land that has been for many generations cursed with the pollutions of slavery, the religion of which authorized the professed follower of Christ to claim the ownership, and make merchandise of the bodies, minds, and spirits of men made in the image of God, and redeemed by the blood of the Saviour—many of the churches of which were filled with men and women calling themselves Christian, yet living together without even the form of marriage, and in almost promiscuous concubinage. Remembering the passage of the Israelites through the wilderness under divinely appointed leaders, we must expect our missionaries there to pass through many hours of darkness and trial before the immediate victims of such wrongs will be prepared to sing the song of final triumph. The following passages from the letters of Mr Hall, show some of these darker features, as well as some of their encouragements to continued toil:

"The circumstances under which we labor are such that we can not reasonably expect often to give glowing accounts of our work. If we can see that we are making a little real progress, we feel encouraged. Facts will show you our position, and will enable you to judge of the progress we make.

"From the number of clurches and chapels in the island, Jamaica ought certainly to be called a Christian land. The people may be called a church-going people. There are chapels and places of worship enough at least in this part of the island, to supply the people if every station of our mission were given up. And there is no lack of ministers and preachers. As far as I am acquainted, almost the entire adult population profess to have a hope of eternal life, and I think the larger part are connected with churches. In view of such facts some have been led to say, 'The spiritual condition of the population is very satisfactory.' But there is another class of facts that is perfectly astounding. With all this array of the externals of religion, one broad, deep wave of moral death rolls over the land. A man may be a drunkard, a liar, a Sabbath-breaker, a profane man, a fornicator, an adulterer, and such like—and be known to be such—and go to chapel, and hold up his head there, and feel no disgrace from these things, because they are so common as to create a public sentiment in his favor. He may go to the communion-table, and cherish a hope of heaven, and not have his hope disturbed. I might tell of persons guilty of some, if not all, these things, ministering in holy things."

Mr. Hall then gives a description of the licentiousness of the people, falling but little behind some of the passages in Paul's letter to the Romans; and after saying that there are exceptions to this general description, he continues:

"When you understand the circumstances under which we labor, you can judge better of the progress we make.

"The masses do not gather with us. They love darkness rather than light. We have a little church gathered out of the moral wilderness about us. Of some of them at least it is true that they are not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ. Only a few adults that are not members of the church meet with us. Our influence is limited. Yet when we look back over the past we can see that we have made some progress. We can say of a few, that we hope they have been truly converted to God since we have been here. We can say of one and another they are better men and better women than they were a few years ago. We can see that the great truths of the Gospel are being better and better understood, and that a few are becoming acquainted with its deep and precious truths. We see now and then one renouncing former habits, which they are led to see are inconsistent with a Christian life.

"I wish I could repeat to you all the remarks a brother made in the church meeting last Friday. He says: 'I feel that I am free—a free man in Jesus Christ. I feel that the Gospel has set me free from all my sins.' 'I would not take all the gold and silver in the world for the little knowledge I have of the Gospel.' He spoke in a similar strain for some time, and the words seemed to come from his heart. His life seems fully to confirm the truthfulness of all he said. He is exerting an influence for good over his family and war friends that is guite preportful.

an influence for good over his family and near friends that is quite perceptible.

"A few considerations encourage us to toil on. We are holding up the light, and if the masses will turn away from it they must be responsible for doing so. We are sowing seed from which others may gather fruit when our work here shall have ceased, though now much of it seems to fall by the wayside and upon stony ground. And we see, that in the case of a few, a work is being done which is not all surface work. They are digging deep, and building upon the rock."

Richmond.—Our last Annual Report contained the following statement, signed by two of the missionaries in behalf of the whole:

"As the Committee are aware, we have for some years been planning and seeking to establish a Normal and Industrial School. Hitherto our desire has remained unaccomplished, for lack of means and a suitable location. Recently, however, the providence of God has seemed to open the way for securing a most desirable locality. for a merely nominal price. Richmond Estate, lying between Eliot and Brainerd, and containing upwards of 1000 acres, with good buildings, and an excellent water privilege, has been offered for sale. With the unanimous approval of the Mission, its purchase has been negotiated for, for the sum of $2400. In taking this step we have counted upon the liberality and cooperation of our friends and the friends of Jamaica at home. We have been encouraged by assurances of aid, and we do hope the results will not be such as to lead any to suppose that we have reckoned without our host! We know there are large-hearted men in the American churches, who love to devise liberal things, where great good is likely to result, and who would not hesitate to open their hands and give freely to this object, could they but see its importance as we do. To such we make our appeal. We have no means for raising the necessary funds here, save by borrowing money at a high rate of interest. But we have put our hands to this enterprise, and shall not look back. The funds must be raised! Who will aid us? If individuals can not be found who are willing to donate the funds for the benefit of the school, a loan (for which good security will be given) will be thankfully received. Donations for the above object may be sent to Lewis Tappan, Esq., New-York, and any communications relative to the subject may be addressed to either of the undersigned, and sent to 48 Beekman street, New-York. By order of Association,

"S. T. WOLCOTT, Chairman.

"A. M. RICHARDSON, Secretary."

The negotiation therein spoken of has been fully completed; but in order to effect the purchase, some of our missionaries have had to borrow money on their personal responsibility, a part of which remains yet unpaid, and for the payment of which the brethren named would be glad to receive funds addressed as above indicated.

The commencement of an enterprise of such magnitude and importance as the establishment of an Industrial School, adequate to the wants of any considerable portion of the colored population of Jamaica, must, of necessity, devolve great responsibility on whosoever undertakes its management. The immediate burden has been assumed by Mr. Wolcott, and has been sustained by him through the year, a part of the time in connection with the duties of the pastoral relation at Hermitage. For the present, he has to be not only minister, but teacher, farmer, and carpenter, at Richmond. The school contains as yet but 12 scholars, besides his own children. There is a demand, he says, "for considerable increase, but a larger number can not yet be provided for." "The want of means to provide suitable accommodations, at once, is a great embarrassment, which it is hoped time will remove."

The Executive Committee have regarded the objects which the missionaries had in view, in purchasing Richmond, as very desirable ones, yet they have not felt at liberty to appropriate to them funds drawn from the treasury of the Association. The Mission have, therefore, sought to accomplish their desires by means of special contributions, for their success in which they have the best wishes of the Committee.

Efforts have been made in various quarters to derive from the present unprosperous condition of the island of Jamaica, an argument against the duty and expediency of the emancipation of the enslaved. In former reports our missionaries have shown that these inferences are without foundation. The following brief summary of remarks, made by Rev. T. Hands at a missionary meeting in London, illustrative of the religious and social condition of the people of the Island, shows that the evils that are admitted to exist there, are not referable to emancipation, and can not rightly be used as an argument against it:

"Obstacles had been thrown in the way of the emancipated people, and they had been oppressed by fiscal exactions. Their provision-grounds were taken away; heavy import bills were introduced, and schemes of emigration, disadvantageous to the negro, were resorted to. But in spite of these difficulties, there were now, out of a population of 263,000, from 60,000 to 100,000 freeholders; and there was scarcely an occupation followed in England by the working and middle classes, which was not followed by black and colored men in the island. Twelve of the forty-seven representatives were black or colored men; and others occupied posts of responsibility, as judge of quarter-sessions, barrister, chief-surgeon of a hospital, and editor of a newspaper. With regard to the moral condition of the island, about two years ago the number of prisoners upon the calendar at the half-yearly assize in the county of Middlesex, containing a population of 131,000, was only 21, and this was considered so extraordinary a number as to call forth special notice from the judge, who lamented that, after all the efforts that had been put forth by missionary societies and addresses from the bench, there seemed to be no making an impression upon the negro mind; while the returns for a whole year gave the island only 571 criminals, out of a population of above 377,000. There was, indeed, immorality in Jamaica; but was there none in other places? He (Mr. Hands) had seen more unblushing vice and immorality during the eight months he had been in this country, than he had seen in the ten years and a half of his residence in that island. As far as he had been able to ascertain, one in two of the adult population attended public worship; and more attended in Jamaica, with 377.000 inhabitants than in London, with its two and a half millions."

OJIBUE MISSION-MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

O. A. Coe and wife, and Francis Spees and wife, have withdrawn from the Mission during the year. The last-named has entered into the employment of the government, in laboring for the Indians. He will be able to do for their spiritual welfare as much, perhaps, as he has in connection with the Mission. Rev. S. Blanchard and wife have been recently appointed, and are now on their way to the Indian country.

Doct. Wm. Lewis and wife hold but a slight connection with the Mission. They receive from it no support, but their location enables them to render it valuable service.

The present and future condition of the scattered remnants of the once powerful aborigines of this country, is every year becoming a question of deeper interest, and rightly claims the attention of the philanthropist and the Christian. They are fast wearing away under the constant encroachments of a civilization, the blessings of which have hitherto failed to reach them. Their hunting-grounds are gradually becoming useless for the only purposes in which they have hitherto been valuable to them, and are passing into the hands of the white man. The vices of their savage state have, under these influences, been strengthened, and have become more fortified by their contact with unprincipled white men, many of whom are always found in the front ranks of the pioneers of civilization. They have already become so environed by elements destructive to the Indian race, as to render it morally certain, that in a few years they will be entirely destroyed, if the providence of God does not interfere in their behalf, and Christians do not make more active efforts than they have hitherto made for their preservation. Enough has already been accomplished to show that they can be reached by the agencies and instrumentalities of God's appointment, and to warrant the hope that in the resurrection, conspicuous among the blood-washed throng, there will be some who have gone up from the unnoted graves of our Western Indians; yet it can not for a moment be supposed that the mass of them can ever be reached, until the Church of God in these United States shall multiply by many fold her efforts to give them the benefits of a Christian civilization, and use the full measure of Gospel truth for their recovery. At present, for every one going forth as an ambassador of God, in Christ's stead to beseech of them to be reconciled unto Him, scores, if not hundreds, are engaged in efforts which, if left uncounteracted, will facilitate their temporal and eternal ruin.

Some of the difficulties against which missionaries to the N. W. Indians have to contend, are briefly related in the following extracts from a published letter, from one of our missionaries at Red Lake. At the commencement of the Mission, he says:

"The Indians were found in the same condition as in all these western wilds. Idleness and improvidence, with their consequent evils, prevailed; and to induce industry, we promised to plough all the ground they would clear. At first the work moved slowly, as there were not over three men in the band who had been accustomed to assist their wives in raising food. It was universally considered disgraceful for a man to work. We encouraged them by taking hold and assisting them with our axes, thus teaching them that it is honorable to labor.

"We have been obliged to erect all our buildings, clear our grounds, and raise our own food. This, with what we have done for the Indians, has kept the majority of us harder at work than men usually labor in the States, and has left us far too little time to give the natives the instruction they needed; but at the same time the influence has been most salutary upon the Indians. They have seen the comforts that industry and economy have secured to us, and white men laboring among them and with them, has gradually removed the disgrace attached to labor, so that now but few men are found who do not assist their women in clearing the ground, though we have long since ceased to assist them in that work, further than to draw off the logs with a team. They clear more ground than we are able to plough, frequently carrying off the timber themselves. Several houses have been built, and they are urging us to assist them more in this work."

No church has been organized at St. Joseph. The native members have adorned their profession with well-ordered lives. They sometimes meet with violent opposition from their relatives, who remain in heathenism. One of the young men, received into the church at Cass Lake, has been called to suffer persecution for Christ's sake, but has stood firm. Brother Spees, under date of April 6th, says: "Joseph Baptiste, a young man who joined our church last winter with considerable decision, presented his little girl for baptism. Brother Wright baptized her. After this Joseph went, with his family, to Lake Winnepec to make sugar. There his wife, and some of her relatives, commenced abusing him most outrageously for getting his child baptized. They wanted her to be initiated into the grand medicine-dance. He, however, was very decided, and declared that that should never be. His children should by no means be reared heathen. He was persecuted so constantly, that after praying and weeping over the subject, he concluded to leave them and retreat to his father's camp, about twenty-five miles off. But before leaving, he went into his lodge and conversed with his little daughter, and knelt down with her and prayed and commended her to God, and then came away. He had been a long time without food; but the love of God was in his soul, and he was greatly sustained. He has now gone back after his daughter. I think he is a bright example of the

The school at Cass Lake has numbered 7. All have boarded in the Mission. Reading, spelling, writing, arithmetic, and geography have been taught. The children have all been instructed in English, and have made good proficiency in the various branches above named. This school might be considerably enlarged, if we had the necessary help, and buildings sufficiently capacious to accommodate more children. The Cass Lake band are included in the late treaty made by our government with the Ojibue Indians. They are now provided by government with a farmer and teams, and are to have twenty-five acres of land cleared and prepared for cultivation. This will relieve the missionaries of considerable secular labor that has heretofore devolved upon them. Some provision for schools is also made in the treaty, a portion of which will be expended at Cass Lake. Another family must be sent to that station, as Brother Spees has withdrawn from the Mission, and now holds the appointment of government farmer.

holds the appointment of government farmer.

The school at Red Lake has been continued through the year, with the exception of a short vacation. Whole number of scholars, 19. All have attended regularly, and have been boarded in the Mission. The girls are required to assist in the various branches of house and needle-work; and the boys, to labor a few hours every day on the farm. The number of pupils in this school might easily be doubled, if we had buildings to accommodate them, and funds to sustain them. But our missionaries have been overburdened with care and labor, and they now have as many children as they can provide for. Their buildings are old and uncomfortable, and before they can enlarge the school, they must have new and more commodious buildings. We ought to have $2000, to appropriate for buildings at Red Lake, immediately.

Our missionaries have completed their saw-mill, to which they have a portable grist-mill attached. This will be a great relief to the missionaries, as they will now be enabled to do by water power, what they have heretofore been obliged to do by hand. It will also be an important means of advancing the Indians in civilization. Many families are already making preparations for building houses. Rev. S. G. Wright, under date of June 17th, 1855, says: "Our school would have been larger, but we have no accommodations for a larger number. We have assisted the Indians some, in building houses. We have now got our saw and grist-mill in complete operation, and shall soon be able to furnish boards for all who wish to build dwelling-houses. We are also grinding much more corn for the people than for-merly, when we had only our hand-mills. We have not been able to render them the assistance we generally have done in cultivating the soil, for lack of time and means. The Indians would have cleared considerable more ground if we could have ploughed it for them. We have done much more blacksmithing for the people than in previous years. The people are very short of food, in consequence of having sold so much to persons from other bands. We have been obliged to procure food for ourselves, from the English colony on Red River, in consequence of giving away so much of our food to hungry Indians. We have been very anxious to erect suitable buildings for our boarding-school, that we might take a much larger number of children; but the erection of our mill, with the other labors that devolve upon us, has occupied all our time and strength, and exhausted all our funds. If we could have an appropriation of $2000, for the special purpose of erecting buildings for the accommodation of our boarding-school, we might, by the expiration of the present year, be able to carry on our operations on a much larger scale, and could reasonably hope to accomplish much more for the good of this people, than we now can do. We are satisfied that our plan of operations is the only one by which much can be done in the way of civilizing and christianizing the Indians. We need, however, the protection of law, that our own rights, and the rights of those who wish to adopt habits of civilization, may be protected." The worms destroyed nearly all the corn and potatoes at Red Lake, last spring, and the prospect is, that there will be a great scarcity of provisions next winter.

St. Joseph's.—Just before our last Annual Meeting the operations of this station were suddenly arrested, and the mission-school dispersed, by a most distressing calamity. By the decease of Mrs. Barnard, and the subsequent absence of Mrs. Barnard, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer were left the only missionaries there, when Mrs. Spencer was fatally shot by the Sioux Indians, on the night of the 29th and 30th of August. The particulars are thus given by Mr. Spencer:

"On the morning of August 30, between 1 and 2 o'clock, myself and wife arose to attend to the children, the two eldest of whom were in a trundle-bed at the side of our own. We were up but a short time, and were preparing again to retire, when the fatal shot came. I heard but one report, but it is supposed that two guns were fired simultaneously—the two balls passing through the same pane of glass and curtain, and one of them passing through the bed-post. Both took effect in the upper part of the breast of my dear wife, and came out on the back, one of them taking a downward direction through the lungs. Supposing it was but the prelude to a more general attack, my first impulse was to barricade the windows, but the boards which I had been accustomed to use were not at hand. As I turned toward the bed, I saw, for the first time, that my dear wife was shot, and was falling upon the bed. At a glance, I perceived the wound was fatal, and ran for my gun as the only means at command to call for help. I fired several times, but failed of the intended effect. Our nearest neighbor lived at the distance of about twenty-five rods. However welcome assistance would have been in such trying circumstances, the risk was too great to venture out in person.

"She lived for nearly three hours after she was shot, perhaps half of the time in a state of consciousness, and in great bodily suffering. She frequently called for water, which I gave her from a sponge, and she as often spoke of its being very grateful. At times she would remark, 'I feel so strangely.' 'What is the matter?' Have I been shot?' 'Can you not put a plaster upon the wound?' Afterward, as she fully comprehended that she had not long to live, her thoughts were more directed to the Saviour, whose name in ejaculatory prayer was often upon her lips. At one time she said, 'Tell Anna to love the Saviour.' At another, she asked me to pray. Once when I opened the outside door, she spoke very earnestly, 'Oh! don't go out,' I asked her if the Saviour was precious to her. I think her reply was, 'He is my only hope.' Toward the close, she remarked several times, 'I can not die.' At first I did not know but that it might be an unwillingness to die, but my mind was soon after relieved by her saying, 'O Jesus! if it is thy will, let me die; but oh! grant me patience.' She was now in great agony, rolling from side to side, and attempting to rise, while every breath was a grean. For an hour before she breathed her last, she suffered much also from the cold, caused by the loss of blood. At every breath the gurgling sound of the air, escaping from the wound, showed that it communicated with the lungs. For a while before the closing scene, she was more composed, and seemed engaged in prayer and communion with the things of another world. Once I thought I distinguished the words, 'Precious Jesus.' This was the last I heard, and soon after her ransomed spirit, as we have reason to trust, was in that 'happy land,' about which she has so often sung with the children."

Of his own feelings under this heavy affliction, Mr. Spencer thus speaks:

"I have been enabled to say throughout, 'The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord.' The stroke, though so severe, has been so emphatically of the Lord, that the language of my heart has been, 'I am dumb, because thou didst it.' Toward her murderers I have had no feelings but those of pity and compassion. I have had no murmuring or repining thoughts, though it has touched me as in the apple of my eye, and torn from my embrace the companion of my bosom, the light of my eyes, and the joy of my heart—her upon whom I leaned for counsel, my interpreter, the instructor of the mission-boys in religious things, and the faithful mother of our little ones. It is indeed true, that this affliction has been sanctified and made the means of a rich blessing to my soul; yet, at the same time, I have no wish to disguise the fact, that I am 'desolate and afflicted.'"

This affliction is a mysterious providence, which we seek in vain to comprehend. It is not supposed that the Sioux Indians, by whom the fatal shots were fired, had any enmity either to Mrs. Spencer, or any other of our missionaries. They are deadly hostile to the Ojibue Indians, and it is supposed that those who shot Mrs. Spencer believed they were firing either at an Indian or a half-breed, not being able to distinguish persons as seen through the window-curtains. The fact that the missionaries were at this time living in a log-house, such as many of the Indians occupied, contributed to their delusion.

Since this event there has been no school at St. Joseph's. Mr. Spencer soon after left the Indian country, and is not expected to resume his connection with our mission. Mr. Barnard returned to the station in the fall and remained through the winter; but the Sioux have been so troublesome, that he thought it unsafe for his family to remain there. He is now at the Red River settlement, waiting for a more favorable opportunity to return to his labors. Soon after he left St. Joseph's, the Sioux visited the place and killed some of the natives, stole their cattle and horses, and committed other depredations. But little can be done for those Indians until they cease to war among themselves.

A difficulty which, near the commencement of the year, threatened the existence of the Red Lake Station, has been happily adjusted, affording a gratifying instance of the

TRIUMPH OF PEACE PRINCIPLES.

Located in a cold climate, and surrounded by savages, the missionaries have sometimes suffered for food and the ordinary comforts of life. In consequence of falls in the rivers, the difficulty of transporting goods is very great. At the portages, every thing has to be carried on men's backs.

After some years' experience of the difficulty of obtaining their supplies of breadstuffs from the States, and their observation of the wants of the Indians, the missionaries became convinced that the interests of the Mission, its economical management, as well as the best interest and civilization of the Indians, would be greatly promoted by the erection of a mill, both for grinding grain and sawing lumber. A suitable location was selected, and secured to the Mission by the chiefs, for which the Mission was to pay the Indians in gilling-thread or twine. The mill was commenced, and the time of payment had arrived; but, from some unknown cause, the net-thread, which had been sent for, was delayed. The Indians grew impatient. The missionaries mildly expostulated with them, and begged them to wait patiently till the net-thread should come. But they were angry about it, called a council, and determined to destroy the mill.

Mr. Wright wrote home: "We resolved that it was not expedient for us to make any further efforts at reconciliation, and that we should do nothing more, but give ourselves to prayer, and leave the matter wholly in the hands of the Lord."

Just at this time, the Lord sent two men to the place, who were friendly to the missionaries, and on good terms with the Indians. They used all their influence to bring about a better state of feeling among the people; telling them that they would bring shame, disgrace, and poverty on themselves and their children, by their treatment of the missionaries. They said that the missionaries would of course be called home, and these once gone, they could have no hope of any more help from Christian people.

The chief was much disturbed with this view of the case, and immediately called a general meeting. He informed the people of his sorrow for the course he had pursued, and declared his resolution to amend. He was followed by all the old men in the same strain. He then called in the missionaries, and repeated to them the substance of his remarks, and added: "May God enable the Indians and missionaries to feel toward each other as formerly, and ever after this, treat each other as friends."

Mr. Wright adds :

"The chief and people are astonished at the course we have pursued, in that we have made no opposition. I heard the chief say, that of all persons the missionaries were the hardest to conquer. Said]he: 'I have conquered many a trader, half-breed, and Indian, but was never conquered myself until now. The missionaries here have conquered me, and they have done it by their harmlessness. When we thought they would rise and fight, and thus enable us to fight, behold they are constantly pushing us back by their harmlessness. When we would pounce upon them, we are thrust back, or jerked back by their kindness. When we catch hold of them, they are so soft and yielding that we can not hold them. In fact, we can do nothing in the way of bringing them under. They are the conquerors, and their weapons are their innocency and harmlessness."

The missionaries were not concerned chiefly for the fate of their mill, but their hearts yearned over the misguided people. For, if they were left to do this act of violence, they saw it might result in the breaking up of the Mission. This gave tenderness and fervor to their prayers, and the savages saw a spirit there with which they could not contend!

The Ojibue Mission greatly needs an increased number of laborers, and a much more liberal expenditure than it has ever yet enjoyed.

There are but few, if any missions in the world, where the missionaries themselves have been called to perform so great a part of the manual labor incident to the commencement of their enterprise among an uncivilized people, as at this. The absorption of so much of their time and attention in these pursuits we have always regarded as an embarrassment in their work, and an evil, but one that they must encounter as a preparation for their more directly spiritual labors. We are happy to learn that this necessity is in part being removed, and that some of the Indians are now willing, for a proper consideration, to undertake these labors for the missionaries, and thus relieve them from a part of the drudgery they have heretofore been compelled to perform. The missionaries ought to be supplied with the means of employing the Indians to do most of the work necessary on the lands cultivated by them for the support of their families and the schools. This would not only be a relief to the missionaries, enabling them to devote themselves to their proper work, but would be a favorable instrumentality for the elevation of the Indians. The brethren of the mission say, that when the Indian works for them, he appears to think it a privilege to be present at family-worship; under other circumstances, he can scarcely be induced to attend.

The wants of this Mission can not, however, be met by this kind of labor alone. Several more Christian families are needed to give the desired efficiency to its operations. There needs to be found men and women who will give their services to the Mission in the various kinds of manual labor needed there, with as much self-denying devotedness to the work of evangelizing the Indians as is ordinarily expected from ordained missionaries. Farmers, mechanics, and laborers, men who will, in their several occupations, devote themselves to labors for the support of the Mission, giving their thoughts and their strength to the work as the minister of the Gospel is expected to give his time and his energies to the work of preaching, may be almost, or quite as useful as the minister, and accomplish more for the honor of God than one in a hundred of them could do in the ordinary walks of life. Just such laborers are now imperatively needed, and if they could be had, whatever might be the ordinary discouragements in the work of missions for the Indians, we believe that, before their judicious and persevering exertions, these discouragements would remove, and we should see the work of the Lord prospering in their hands.

SANDWICH ISLANDS .- MAKAWAO, EAST-MAUI.

Missionaries .- Rev. J. S. GREEN, Mrs. GREEN.

At the date of the last intelligence from this Mission, Mr. Green was about to prepare his annual statement. It has not yet been received.

Since the death of Rev. David Malo, a native Hawaiian, Mr. Green has had the churches at Makawao and Keokea both under his care. According to the last statistical report, there were 750 members in good standing in these churches. There have been received since at least 300. The number separated from them by death or otherwise has not been reported. In the care of these churches, Mr. Green has some native helpers on whose judicious and efficient labors he can rely.

One of these churches is at Keokea. He thus contrasts the condition of this place with what it was when he first knew it, twenty years before:

"Then, how dark was the prospect; no house of worship, no church, not a pious individual in all the vicinity. The only thing that looked hopeful at that time was the school, and the fact that not a few had learned to read the Bible, and seemed to find pleasure in reading those portions which had been put into their hands. There was ground of hope that some would learn the way to heaven from studying the Bible, and hearing an occasional sermon either at Wailuka or at their own home, once or twice in a year, when the missionary made the tour of the island. Now this sweet bell says, come, COME COME!" As I approached I found a substantial stone meeting-house, some 70 feet by 30, covered with thatch and well lighted with glass windows. The walls were creeted under the superintendence of their beloved pastor, David Malo, whom the great Head of the Church removed to a higher sphere of labor soon after the close of the first year of his ministry with this people. Then the stillness of the Sabbath, how impressive! From earliest dawn till this hour nothing has been heard but this Sabbath bell, and the low voice of the small company who live near the meeting-house, and who come together at sun-rising to hear the word of God, and to listen to solemn truths from this blessed source."

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The exercises of that occasion commenced, Mr. Green says, by "Reciting a verse which he or she had selected, and committed to memory—a practice which I recommended a year or two since.

"Among those who rose to recite a passage was an aged female, a poor widow, one whom I have for a long time regarded as a mother in this Hawaiian Israel. She sat, as she is accustomed to do, near the feet of her pastor, so that she can distinctly hear the instructions which fall from his lips. She rose from her humble seat, and in a trembling, though sufficiently loud voice, recited the declaration of the Apostle Paul: 'For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek.' The slow and selemn manner of reciting this charming passage-her voice trembling with age, and her countenance kindling up with pious emotion—caused a murmur of approbation to be heard through the house, and brought to my eyes why should I be ashamed to confess it?—a gush of tears. Yes, thought I, the Gospel of Christ is indeed the power of God. Well may this poor Hawaiian mother testify to this truth. It has saved her from a dreadful hell. It has snatched her as a brand from the burning. It has extinguished in her bosom the fires of lust. It has made her a new creature in Christ Jesus. It has lighted up in her once-benighted soul a hope of endless life." This hope, inspired by the Gospel, sustains her daily. It is an anchor to her soul. It will enable her to outride the storms of life, I trust; will safely moor her in the haven of eternal rest. Well may she and others like her, say exultingly, 'I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.'
"While I thank you dear friends, for what you have done to enable me and others to announce the glad tidings of great joy which is to be for all people, let me remind you of the great work still remaining. Need I say that the labor remaining greatly exceeds what has been performed? *Darkness still covers the earth, gross darkness the people.' Will you not be seech God to have mercy upon the wretched, dying heathen? Will not some of you, in reply to the voice of God breaking upon your ears in the solemn inquiry: 'Whom shall we send, and who will go for us?' say, 'Here, Lord, are we, send us?' And will not you who have wealth or ability to toil, say to the ministers of Christ who may desire to go to the heathen, but have not the means: 'Go ye to the benighted; tell them of the cross of Christ; beseech them to be reconciled to God; go speedily, lest others of them die uninstructed and sink to a dreadful hell; go, and we will sustain you by our prayers and benefactions; go, and the God of all grace and consolation be with you to the end'?"

Mr. Green has received from our treasury, during the year, $249.

CANADA MISSION.

Missionaries.—Rev. D. HOTCHKISS, ROBERT C. HANSELL, Mrs. HOTCHKISS.

Mr. Hotchkiss received his appointment in June last, and arrived at Windsor, C. W., on the 23d of that month. He has consequently but about two months active service to report, during which he had to seek a location, and provide a residence for his family. He is, for the present, at the "Refugee's Home," thinking he can do more good by making that his home than by residing elsewhere. He will extend his labors to other places near, as the providences of God may enable him to do.

He writes, that his prospects of usefulness are "fully as favorable as he could expect," but his former experience there admonishes him not to trust to appearances only, but to rely mainly on the promises of God spoken for the encouragement of those who labor earnestly in his cause. Much of the time since he has been in Canada, his movements have been retarded by the excessive rains that have flooded the

Mr. Hansell has been located at Chatham, where he has a small school, which he instructs during the week, spending his Sabbaths in more direct labors for the conversion of souls. He has reported but a single quarter's labors. His school was then small, numbering in all but twenty-six scholars. Should there not be a marked increase during the second quarter, the Committee will hardly feel authorized to continue the appropriation made for it. He makes a small charge to each scholar, to assist in defraying the expenses of the school.

A portion of the expenditure for the Canada Mission has been for freight on boxes of clothing sent to different parts of Canada for the fugitives.

There is more need of ministerial labor in Canada directly in behalf of the colored people. In general, those who have gone there from the United States, even the fugitives, may provide for the wants of their families after a short residence there, especially if they meet a friendly hand, and, more than all, good counsel, on their arrival. But all who are acquainted with the condition of slaves in the United States know that their religious and intellectual culture has been greatly neglected. It is to supply this want that our labors should be mainly directed. In order to meet it fully, men of no common mould are required, men who, in the spirit of Christ, most covet fields of labor that are most neglected; and who possess intellectual and spiritual power to enable them to cope with the greatest difficulties. Such men are now needed.

SIAM MISSION, BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries,-Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D., Rev. L. B. LANE, M.D., Mrs. BRADLEY, Mrs. LANE.

At the date of our last report, Prof. Silsby, who had formerly been connected with this Mission, was on his return to this country, where he arrived Nov. 12, 1854. Soon after his return, the following paragraphs were published in The Independent:

"THE SIAM MISSION.

"WE have read with much satisfaction the following note from Rev. J. Silsby, which we hasten to lay before our readers. We have referred Mr. S. to the source of the report which gained such extensive credence in missionary circles last spring, and which we had every reason to deem 'reliable.' The denial of Mr. S. is of course final, as far as the rumor had reference to himself. It remains for the authors of the rumor to explain to him and to the public the source of their information, or the ground of their belief. We did not construe the rumor as so disparage ing to Mr. S. as he seems to regard it, but received it simply as an illustration of the difficulty of applying abstract rules to every phase of society. But we are glad to find that he can fully deny it.

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"ROOMS OF THE AM. MISS. ASSOCIATION. "'TO THE EDITORS OF THE INDEPENDENT: SIRS: Having recently arrived from Siam, my attention has been called to The Independent of April 27, where you say that "a rumor, which can be traced to a reliable source, has gained extensive credence, that Mr. Silsby, and other missionaries of the Association in Siam, have employed as house-servants slaves hired from their masters."

"'To those who know what my professions have been in regard to Siamese servitude, the above assertion is a direct charge of insincerity, and even downright dishonesty, in my course in regard to slavery in Siam.

"'The assertion, however, is untrue. I have never in a single instance knowingly "hired a Siamese slave of his master," or, to my knowledge, employed slavelabor during my residence in Siam.

"'It can not be expected, therefore, that I should remain silent when a report so false has had the wide circulation of your paper, nor that I could ask less of you than that you should give this denial an equally wide circulation, and also that you will give me the names of the persons whom you regard as the "reliable source" of your information. Very respectfully, etc.,

"'Nov. 16, 1854.""

An equally emphatic denial of the rumor was some time after received from Dr. Lane, in reference to his own course in Siam, but Mr. Silsby was the only one publicly implicated by name, and the Committee had previously denied the truth of the rumor relative to both these brethren, so that no further public reference was made to it. The Executive Committee have entire confidence that the report was without any foundation, and that both of these gentlemen had carefully conformed their action to the principles of the Association, and their own also, in refusing to employ slave-labor.

Little, if any thing, encouraging can be reported of our Siam Mission during the last year. Their efforts for the conversion of souls have not been crowned with success; the government has embarrassed and restricted them in their labors; and their number has been farther reduced by the return of Dr. and Mrs. Lane to the United

About the first of August last, the King of Siam, apparently for the purpose of removing all suspicion as to the integrity of his faith in Budhism, issued a circular giving an "account of the image of Budh Gotam," which, he says, "has been worshipped for a long period." In concluding this circular, a copy of which, in English, has been sent to us, the king thus avows himself a worshiper of this image.

"His Majesty reverences and worships this Jasper image the same as if the Budh Gotam was yet alive; and, desiring that the people of friendly nations, who are not in the habit of visiting his capital, should see this Jasper image, has had three representations of it painted upon one piece of cloth, representing the three different kinds of ornaments which decorate him in the three different seasons of the year. His Majesty has had many of these representations painted, and also has caused to be written an account of this Jasper image in the Bali. Siamese, and English languages."

The opinion that has been sometimes entertained that this king had lost his confidence in Budhism is thus seen to be unfounded.

Some months later, active measures were used to harass and restrict the missionaries resident in Siam. Natives were punished for renting land to them; those in their employ were apprehended, and forbidden to return to their service; the missionaries were prohibited from leaving Bangkok without a pass, and it was generally understood that a pass could not be obtained to allow them to prosecute their labors out of the city. In February, Dr. Lane wrote:

"I was told by a noble of considerable rank, that the work of ridding the country of the teachers had already begun. 'And,' said he, 'they had better go at once, for in the end they will have to.' "I asked, 'Tell me, why do the king and his court desire to get rid of the missionaries?

"He replied: 'Your government wish to fix a consul here. Now it is the custom of the English, as soon as they have established a consul in any place, to begin at once to eat the country. How has it been in Burmah and in China? The English and Americans are all one. They have one language; they have faces alike, and they dress alike, and their customs are alike. If the teachers were out of the country, what interests would the Americans have here? None at all!

They are coming here on your account.'

"How all these matters will finally end can only be conjectured. At present, the missionary can do comparatively little for the Siamese. He is excluded from the privilege of going about the country, and the effect of this prohibition on the minds of the natives generally, is such as to lead them to avoid all intercourse with the missionaries. God will doubtless overrule all these affairs to the furtherance of his kingdom. But, in the mean time, it is the part of wisdom for us to discern the signs of the times, and mark the providences of God as they are passing before us."

In November last, the Executive Committee, much to their regret, received a letter from Dr. Lane, expressing his convictions that it was his duty to leave Siam, and return to this country. He left Bangkok about the 1st of February, in a vessel for Singapore, at which place he buried his youngest child, who died of the small-pox soon after their arrival there. They landed in New-York in August.

In April last, Sir John Bowring, LL.D., in behalf of the English government, negotiated a highly important treaty with the Siamese government, which, in its results, must be very favorable to the missionaries residing in Siam. Besides the commercial advantages secured by the treaty, it provides that: .

"British subjects may rent or buy land, build, rent, or buy houses at any time from four miles from the city to twenty-four hours' travel, but can not purchase in the city, nor within four miles of the city walls, until after ten years' residence, or express permission from the Siamese government. They may, however, rent land, buy, rent, or build houses in Bangkok, or within four miles of it, when they please. British subjects shall be allowed the free exercise of the Christian religion, and liberty to build churches in such places as shall be consented to by the Siamese authorities."

And that:

"The interests of British subjects shall be under the control of a consul at Bang kok, who will himself conform to and enforce the observance of the treaty by British subjects, and give effect to all present and future regulations for the control of British subjects in Siam and their trade, and to settle disputes between British and Siamese subjects."

It is said that the treaty of 1833, between the United States and Siam provided that any commercial privileges thereafter granted to any European nation should be enjoyed in like manner by the United States. The treaty thus formed is therefore important to American citizens.

We are gratified in being permitted to mention, in this connection, an act of kindness on the part of Sir J. Bowring toward the American missionaries. Learning of the obstacles which the Siamese government, through misrepresentation, had for some months previous placed in the way of their usefulness and comfort, he requested the king to remove them. To this request his Majesty acceded, and the missionaries were soon after informed, through one of the princes, that these restrictions had been removed, and that they should thereafter enjoy all their former privileges.

The resident missionaries united in a formal expression of their gratitude to his Excellency "for the great favor which he had, wholly unsolicited, done them and the missionary cause in requesting the King of Siam to remove the late restrictions to their movements;" also for the "good done to the Siamese nation, England, and the world, by negotiating the treaty" just concluded. To this expression of their feelings, signed by seven missionaries, Sir John Bowring made the following kind and courteous reply:

"BAT OF SIAM, April 24, 1855.

"MY DEAR SIR: I have to acknowledge your kind address. The slight service I had an opportunity of rendering you was a very inadequate return for the many demands upon your time and labors which my visit to Bangkok has entailed upon your and for whose chearful deficiency was all own row seen that the support of the state of the support of the state of the support of the support demands upon your time and labors which my visit to Bangkok has entailed upon you, and for whose cheerful dedication we all owe you many thanks.

"With that visit is absociated every thing that is hopeful for the future and grateful for the past. I trust that a better and happier era will smile on the country in which your tents are raised. That your labors bring with them the peace of an approving conscience is the first initiatory recompense. I pray that higher and nobler may be yours. I am, etc.,

John Bowking."

By the return of Dr. and Mrs. Lane to this country, our Mission in Siam is reduced to a single family. The Executive Committee are not, however, prepared to recommend any enlargement of it, nor, indeed, any immediate action whatever. They would prefer to have the matter left with them to make any changes there during the present year that the exigencies of the Mission, the welfare of the missionary cause, and the interests of Christ's kingdom may seem to them to demand.

HOME MISSIONS.

While there is renewed occasion for praise and thanksgiving to God that the lives of our missionaries in the Home field have been so generally preserved during the year, we are afflicted by the providences which have recently removed from us by death, the Rev. Edwin C. Wells, of Illinois, and Rev. John A. Reed, of Ohio. The former was, at the time of his decease, the minister of the South Congregational Church of Chicago, and has been heretofore extensively known as an Evangelist at the West; for a part of the last two years he has acted as an agent of the Association in New-England. Rev. Mr. Reed had for a short time been acting as our agent for the Home Department in Ohio. Both of these brethren, in the prime of life, and in the midst of usefulness—in hope and faith—were called to their eternal reward. May their afflicted widows and children be blessed of Him who is the God of the widow and of the fatherless, and we be instructed to do our work faithfully while it is called to-day.

The Home field, continually increasing in importance and in its demands for missionaries, is gaining in its hold upon the affections of Christians. During the year the blessing of God has rested upon the labors of those engaged in it; and all should be inspired with thanks giving, courage, and new zeal, while in humility and dependence we seek the aid of the Divine Spirit in the prosecution of our great work.

The outline of Home Missionary operations may be seen in the following

GENERAL TABLE,

Showing in parallel columns,

- 1. An alphabetical list of missionaries.
- 2. The names of churches and missionary districts aided.
- 3. Dates of commissions, or time of commencing labor.
- 4. Months of labor performed since the last report.
- 5. Hopeful conversions.
- 6. Additions to the churches, on examination.
- 7. Additions to the churches by letter.
- 8. Number of church members.
- 9. Amount of aid pledged for a year's service.
- 10. Number of church members pledged to total abstinence.
- 11. Amount of contributions to benevolent objects.
- 12. Number of Sabbath-school and Bible-class scholars.
- 13. Other particulars.

EXPLANATIONS.

The table includes the names, etc., of missionaries formerly employed by our Auxiliaries; but as their commissions generally expired early after our last report, and as all commissions have since been given by the parent Association, they are not specifically designated as formerly.

not specifically designated as formerly.

In several instances we have been obliged to give the entire number of all the Sabbath-school and Bible-class scholars in several churches and districts reported by a missionary, instead of the number connected with each school; also, the number of members in two or more churches, in a few instances, is given together.

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

THERE have been employed in the Home field during the year by the parent Association and its Auxiliaries, 104 ministers of the Gospel, and 3 colporteurs.

Their labors have been mostly confined to the North-western States and territories, and to Kentucky and North-Carolina.

The number of Missionaries in their several localities is as follows: In the "States east of Ohio," 10. In Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, 19. Illinois, 40. Wisconsin and Minnesota, 18. Iowa, 8. Kansas Territory, 5. Kentucky and North-Carolina, 5, and 3 colporteurs.

Generally, the missionaries are pastors, some have several churches, and some others have extensive districts, and are itinerating, preaching, promoting revivals of Religion, and are advancing Temperance, Anti-Slavery, and every good cause in society. They have organized, and assisted in organizing, numbers of churches, and have established Sabbath-schools in sparse and destitute places.

The results ascertained from the reports of our missionaries, are as follows:

The additions during the year to the churches, by profession of faith, are 298, and by letter from other churches, 230.

The number of members of the churches under the care of our missionaries is 3904.

The number of hopeful conversions is 403.

Twenty revivals of religion are reported by our missionaries.

Numbers of the churches have erected houses of public worship during the year, and others are engaged in building.

The members of the churches are, with very few exceptions, pledged to total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, and are earnest friends of the anti-slavery cause.

The number of Sabbath-school and Bible-class scholars connected with the missionary churches and stations is 5613.

The contributions to benevolent objects, (not local,) reported by the missionaries, amount to $2932.54.

The aggregate numbers in the above-stated results would have been very considerably increased, had reports been received from all the missionaries, and had there not been omissions in some of those received.

STATES EAST OF OHIO

In the States east of Ohio, we have had under commission, during the year, ten missionaries.

Were it not for the general ability of churches in these older States to aid feeble churches contiguous to them in their several districts, we might attempt much more relatively for them, especially in view of the fact that emigration is annually reducing some of them in numbers and in resources. These are, however, more or less assisted by State or other missionary societies.

New-England, notwithstanding she has her waste places, and takes care of them, is a rich source of supply for the great field West and South. From her States and others, thousands are migrating to the West annually, and, mingling with society there, come within the scope of Home missionary operations. Christians in New-England and the older States, may therefore rejoice to cooperate with us in our efforts, not only to provide for the spiritual wants of the people generally as far as we can, but for those of many of their sons and daughters now spreading over the new States and Territories.

The only church aided by us in New-England-the Congregational church of East-Berkshire, Vermont-is struggling with many obstacles and particularly with the continual emigration of its members. The Spirit of the Lord, however, has accompanied the labors of our missionary there, and a revival of religion was enjoyed last autumn which greatly strengthened the hearts of the people of God.

We extract from the correspondence of the Missionary under date of Nov. 7, 1854:

"For the past six weeks I have preached almost every evening. The Lord has been with us by the power of his Spirit. * * * * Our meetings have presented an unsual degree of stillness and solemnity. Nearly the whole church, for a time, appeared like a company of anxious persons under conviction of sin. About two thirds of the members have confessed publicly that they had, for a long time, 'forsaken their first love,' while nearly the other one third have been led, under the searching influences of the Holy Spirit, to give up their hopes and seek new ones. Some of the latter are now rejoicing in the pardoning mercy of Christ, as young converts, and bid fair to become efficient helpers to their pastor. Three of this class are teachers in the Sabbath-school. Out of the church several have en tertained hopes, one of whom is my second son,"

From his annual report:

"In addition to what I have given you in my quarterly reports, I will state that the intelligence, enterprise, union, and piety of my little church are manifestly on the increase; while the spirit of emigration is increasing also.

"If my little church were located in some new township at the West, they would form a noble nucleus for building up institutions of the Gospel and of civil liberty; but situated as they are, the best they can do is to qualify themselves to act well their parts, as they are scattered one after another, at different points at the West.

"There is but little immirgation to this place, and that mostly of French Catholies from Canada.

"Nearly all the errors that human nature is heir to, have sprung up on this soil, and after a while, have ceased to grow separately, but by a common attraction have united together and become one mighty upas, the roots of which strike deep. The leaves and fruit are open, practical atheism, and the odor is more direful to the moral powers of the soul, than was ever the fabled upas upon the physical powers

In the States of New-York and Pennsylvania no very marked exhibitions of the power of the Spirit in the revival of religion have, during the year, prevailed in the churches of our missionaries.

In Western Pennsylvania our missionaries are making progress. and in some districts, strengthened by devoted brethren in the churches. are meeting successfully many forms of error, and much that opposes Christianity.

One of them writes:

"I believe that the acknowledged spirituality and activity of this church is occasioned greatly by heathenism by which they are surrounded.

"In the first place, there are many heads of families here who can not read. The number of these is very great, beyond any thing that I have known elsewhere. Such are the easy prey of designing errorists and apostates, and with their leaders, of course 'know more than seven men that can render a reason." Where this class constitute the majority, they create a public sentiment suited to the carnal heart. And such is the pressure of public sentiment in my parish, that when persons attend church (the only evangelical one in several miles) who are not fortified with great independence and decision of character, they are beset with ridicule, reproach, scorn, and abuse, and plied with many untruths. There are many husbands and fathers here who absolutely forbid and prohibit their wives, and daughters, and sons from attending our or any other evangelical meeting; and that not in the heat of excited passion, but as a permanent arrangement. Now, this great Babel is made up of necromancy, (spiritualism,) comeouterism, Mormonism, Universalism, etc., etc. Their common Bible is the work of A. J. Davis, and under its influence they harmonize upon the same principle of Pilate and Herod, and for the same end. The difficulty is, they will not hear the truth, and they exchem the Bible, religious books and tracts, papers, colporteurs, and their works; deny family, school, civil and all governments in general, and the divine moral government in particular. Hence arise insubordination, riot, intemperance, profanity, Sabbath-breaking, gambling, and lust, with their kindred vices: these wear an unblushing front, and in many cases would challenge competition with the heathen on any part of the globe.

"Such was the state of things when we began our labors among this people. Here I found, scattered about in the midst of this corrupt mass, a little band of really true and self-denying spirits, who greatly needed help. Their willingness to sacrifice was an indication of my being called of God to this place.

"The Lord has blessed our mutual labors here. The congregation has been steadily advancing in number and stability, gradually increasing, with the hope of permanency. Several have been hopefully converted; these have united with the church, and have 'run well.' Others, encountering a vast amount of obloquy and scorn, have dared to become regular attendants at the 'nigger church,' the 'cold-water, Calvinistic, Presbyterian,' etc., not to speak of other epithets, which are applied to evince their opposition. Nevertheless, a Sabbath has dawned here; and now the whole mass respect both us and the church. The leaven is at work, as has been manifested by good results."

OHIO, INDIANA, AND MICHIGAN.

WE have had under commission this year, in these States, 19 missionaries, including those of the Western and Foreign Home Missionary Association at Cincinnati: in Ohio, 16; in Indiana, 2; and 1 in Michigan.

OHIO.

Our missionaries have been laboring in the Gospel with hope and encouragement, notwithstanding various obstacles have been encountered. In four instances the Spirit has rested upon our missionary churches, and revivals of religion have taken place, greatly to strengthen Zion.

Some advances have been made in building houses of worship and parsonages, and in liquidating indebtedness for the same; notwithstanding the pecuniary depressions of the year, and serious losses of crops and stock, occasioned by the extensive drought of the former summer.

In some districts there has been a diminution of numbers in the churches, arising from emigration to other States, but on the whole, the number of hearers of the Word and of communicants has increased.

Unhappy divisions in some places prevail, and errorists have come in upon society; yet so far as the labor of our missionaries extends, it is believed that they are instilling a correct faith, and leading the Church and the world more fully to appreciate that practical religion which is not only in earnest for the eternal salvation of men, but for present holiness; the abolition of all inhumanity; the entire reformation of society, and the deliverance of the Church from all participation in slavery and kindred evils.

In some instances, Universalism, Spiritualism, and other delusions and forms of unbelief are expending their force in extraordinary efforts to mislead the unwary, and to confirm the hostility of those "dead in trespasses and sins," to the holy and humbling truths of the Gospel. That success should to some extent attend the efforts of false teachers and unbelievers, could not be doubted, while man is, as he ever has been, naturally averse to God and holiness.

Great advances have been made in the cause of freedom. The Nebraska and Kanzas Bill; the outrages upon the free citizens in Kanzas; the Missouri Pro-Slavery Legislature for Kanzas, and its enactments, and also the comfort and support given by the present administration to the "Border Ruffians," in their various efforts to force slavery upon Kanzas, have aroused the spirit of liberty. If now the church and ministry will unitedly be true to freedom, its triumphs at an early day in Ohio must be complete. The Temperance cause is prospering, and the operation of the "Law for the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic" is constantly diminishing the amount of crime and pauperism.

FROM ONE OF OUR MISSIONARIES IN ATHENS COUNTY.

"For some time past there has been an unusual religious interest among us. Twelve or fifteen persons have been hopefully converted. Sabbath before last I baptized six persons, four by sprinkling and two by immersion. At that time seventeen persons, most of them on profession of their faith, were received into our

"The goodness of the Lord seemed especially manifested in the case of several of those converted. One was a young colored man from Virginia, who at once left off learning a trade, that he might learn to read the Bible. He thought it was of more consequence to read the Bible than to have a trade.

"Another was the son of a minister, who was absent from home, laboring for the conversion of others, when the Lord led his son into the fold of Christ,

"Another was a man who, through mental infirmity, was unable to talk till seven years of age, and who is now incompetent to manage business. But he seems to be truly filled with righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. His mind seems wonderfully to have brightened. At first he could scarcely speak or pray coherently; now he can do both to edification. His zeal and love are often reproofs to me.

"Another was a shrewd old man, originally from Virginia, more recently a slave in Alabama; of as high descent, and possessing more sense, I presume, than some of his masters. In Alabama he was once a freeman, and twice a slave. After having purchased his own freedom with excessive toil, he was so distressed at the wretched condition of his wife in a cruel family, that he voluntarily returned to slavery, and used his redemption-money to purchase her liberty, and then went manfully to work to deliver himself from bondage again. He was defrauded out of most of the second purchase-money, so that before he got free he had paid almost his market price three times over. After much suffering and toil, he found a home in a free State. And here the Lord seems graciously to have given him the liberty of the sons of God."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN CUYAGHOGA COUNTY.

"We have reason to believe God has heard prayer, and sent a few drops of mercy. The Church had only to come down and be humble, to induce the Holy Spirit to come among us, and fasten conviction upon many souls. But few are yet converted out of the many that are convicted. At our last communion, five heads of families united with our church on profession. * * *

"The church may now be said to be in a working state. At our last evening meeting, eight or ten, mostly children, rose to testify their love for the Saviour.

There are many things to encourage the people of God. We have reason to hope that the church in this place will yet be able to support its own pastor, and to more than refund the means which your Society has furnished to meet its wants while vet feeble.

"The church is on the anti-slavery and Bible ground. We have lately had a temperance revival. We have adopted the principle of the Carson League, and shall use every lawful and Christian effort to stop the liquor traffic.

"I have visited and prayed with many families for the past three months. We have had a hard winter, 'hard times,' and yet, in many respects, good times. One of the converts, who is quite advanced in life, said at the meeting last evening, he verily believed had it not been for the kard times he should not have been converted. He would have been immersed in business, and paid no attention to the subject of religion. If this be so, 'sweet are the uses' of hard times.'"

FROM A MISSIONARY IN GALLIA COUNTY.

"We have recently organized a Temperance League here, for the prosecution of cases arising under the 'Liquor Law,' to the fund of which our members have subscribed, I suppose some fifty or sixty dollars. Our church is organized upon the total-abstinence principle. We exclude from our communion all persons engaged in drinking, selling, distilling, or furnishing facilities to others for so doing. Consequently all the members of our church may be said to have signed the total-abstinence pledge. We have one member, and only one, so far as I know, who objects to 'legal suasion.'

"We have had one quite interesting revival in our church during the past year; the congregations have been usually good, and the weekly prayer-meetings generally pretty well attended.

"During the month of April, I organized a small Free Presbyterian Church in Meigs county, which brother De W - is now supplying. The pro-slavery churches in that neighborhood were apparently almost dead at that time, but the organization of an anti-slavery church upon their ground, has fired them up with

"The anti-slavery cause gains ground here. It has taken the Republican phase.

The great danger is, that men will satisfy themselves with this, and ask no more. "One of the most pernicious things I have found to contend with in the whole field of my labors, is Sabbath desecration by church members. The Methodists, and all branches of the Baptists, are notoriously loose in their observance of the Sabbath, and I have had some difficulty even with Presbyterians upon that point. We had one young lady before our session for dancing, who told us that she supposed that she never should have danced if she had not first broken the Sabbath. Another woman, who had once been a professor, and thought she was a Christian, but who had given up all hope, told me she could easily trace her apostasy to its first step-Sabbath-breaking.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN COLUMBIANA COUNTY.

"A foreign population is being concentrated at this point, in consequence of the immense beds of coal in the vicinity. The foreigners are miners, mainly from England and Wales. They are generally neglecters of the great salvation, yet some give reason to hope that they are pious. There is reason to hope that the Head of the Church has indicated a purpose of mercy, in establishing a pure Gospel in the midst of these families from foreign lands. There is a great amount of antislavery sentiment in the town of Salineville, in the vicinity, and throughout the county. The strongest expression of anti-slavery is political, yet preaching against slaveholders and those sustaining slavery being tolerated in the church, is well received. A community sound politically on the subject of slavery, will not be slow to perceive the position which the Church should occupy. The older citizens of this place are the fast friends of temperance. All persons purchasing town lots are prohibited by the conditions of sale from vending ardent spirits."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN PORTAGE COUNTY.

"Our weekly prayer-meetings and monthly concerts are well attended, and our congregations of late are increasing. Being small and feeble, we are led to feel more our dependence upon God, and to rely upon him in prayer. We are expecting some additions to the church at our next communion. Spiritualism has had quite a run here, but appears now to be running into the ground. The seeds of infidelity, however, seem to have taken deep root in many minds, and a general indifference to religion prevails. Perhaps not more than one third of the population attend meeting habitually on the Sabbath; and it seems to me that the prevailing type of piety in this region is not adequate to remedy this state of things. A work of regeneration is needed in the Church that shall slay its pride and its worldly conformity, and arm it with the true spirit of Christ. We stand alone here on the question of 'free missions' and 'radical abolition.' In consequence of our radical position on all moral questions, we can not expect to mould or influence the public mind with rapidity. The seeds of radical principles, it has been said are of slow growth, and it needs persons of strong faith and undying love to persevere to the end in such a work."

INDIANA.

In this State, two of our missionaries have been laboring; one of them, Rev. J. G. Brice, has part of the time acted as agent of the Association. They have been blessed in their work in the salvation of souls. Revivals of religion have taken place in connection with their labors, and those of other brethren cooperating with them. They have spread much light also on the subject of slavery, and all Christian reforms.

Our Association is comparatively but little known as yet in Indiana, but in some districts its principles are beginning to be appreciated. In some sections great ignorance prevails, few newspapers or religious periodicals are taken, and demagogues have their own way with the simple and unlettered.

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

We make extracts from a report of our missionary in Randolph

"The attendance at the several points of preaching has been good, and the congregations solemn and attentive under the truth. There has been a very interesting work of grace at ——. Some thirteen have, we hope, been truly converted to God; and, with but one exception, all of them students of the college, (we are trying to build up on free principles.) Eight of these converts were received into the Congregational Church of Liber, two weeks since, and three stand propounded for the next communion.

"Brother Taylor and I have just closed a series of religious meetings, held at Union. We trust our labor was not in vain in the Lord.

"The cause of reform is steadily on the advance; and, as the missionaries of the Cross of Christ, we are cheered and encouraged in our work, as we look back on the past, and contemplate what God has wrought for and by us. A little over a year ago, there were no Reform churches organized on the Congregational system of church government, in this region, and now we have five churches, three ministers on the ground, and a Congregational Association, called Upper Wabash.

"These churches are yet in their infancy, and will require your fostering care for a season. My faith, however, is strong, that this 'handful' of seed now sown, 'will flourish;' that these churches, like the leaven hid in meal, will continue to spread and diffuse these reformatory principles in other portions, until all is leavened. God's hand is in the work. 'And if God be for us, who can be against us?'"

FROM OUR MISSIONARY IN ADAMS AND JAY COUNTIES.

"I have now seven places at which I preach regularly every two weeks. Three of my appointments are in Jay county, and four in Adams. They are scattered over a great extent of territory, for no two of the places are nearer than five miles apart. Some of the appointments I fill on week-days in the afternoon, beside attending funerals, delivering fectures, etc. The distance I have to travel weekly is from forty-three to forty-five miles.

"The work to the physical system is very fatiguing, but it has its pleasures to the mind, and some features to encourage hope. Congregationalism is a new system of church polity in this section, and the anti-slavery features of our churches make them more peculiar still. My congregations are good, and more attentive, and some individuals appear more tender under the Word.

"The type of religion that prevails is very superficial and transient. There are many who profess to have been converted three or four times, and yet their conduct and conversation are in perfect discord with the Gospel of Christ. There is much ignorance and many prejudices among the people. A great number of heads of families can neither read nor write; and others who can read, have nothing to read."

MICHIGAN.

We have at present but one missionary in Michigan.

From the increasing feeling of the Christian community, and of the people generally, in favor of temperance, anti-slavery, and other true reforms, and from various applications to us for missionary aid, from different parts of the State, we have encouragement to increase our efforts in Michigan, so soon as a more favorable state of our treasury shall exist.

There are still large districts in this State, sadly destitute of the means of grace, which should secure the sympathy of the friends of the Redeemer. During the last winter our missionary, and other ministers of the Gospel of various denominations, and the churches at Charlotte, Eaton Co., cooperated in labors in a series of meetings, which resulted, under God, in a powerful and blessed revival of religion.

We make some extracts from the account of the revival given by our missionary.

"During the summer of 1854, sin seemed to abound, and scarcely a Sabbath passed that we could not, at the place where we held our meetings, hear the report of the hunter's rifle. The faith of the praying ones seemed to waver, and they were almost led to think that their prayers were unheard. But at the close of the year, Rev. John T. Avery came to Olivet to hold a protracted meeting, and we succeeded in securing his services here. Christians of all the denominations in the place took part freely in the meetings, and no stranger could discover that we did not all belong to the same cliurch. Brother Avery labored with us three weeks, preaching twice a day during a large portion of the time. Some thirty converts, mostly young persons, were the result of his labors; and Christians who had moved in here from nearly all parts of the Union, and were scarcely acquainted with each other, became united in the bonds of the Gospel. The interest was at its height when Bro, Avery left, and the minds of Christians seemed to be saying continually, 'Is this all?' 'Is this all?' We felt that the work was indeed great, if only a score of souls were saved, yet it was not so extensive as we hoped. For ten days we held meetings nearly every evening, and when the energies of our people were fairly recruited, the Lord sent us, without any effort on our part, a Methodist minister, (Bro. Griffin, of Hartford, Conn.,) a man of quite liberal spirit, who consented to tarry with us for a season, and labor in the vineyard of the Lord. He was with us for about four weeks, and during his stay some thirty more professed to-give up their hearts to the Saviour. Quite a number of the converts were heads of families; several were gray-haired men. A very interesting feature of the meetings is the fact, that although they have been in progress for nearly three months, and two different evangelists of different denominations have labored with us, and two Methodist circuit-preachers, and one Congregational minister, have taken an active part in the meetings, and a Baptist preacher has had his regular appointments in our midst, yet there has been scarcely a single discordant note heard during all the time. The Methodist minister located here is a truly honorable man in all his deportment toward other denominations, and does not manifest any of that unchristian spirit of sectarianism so often met with in this western country,

"Nearly all the families in the place are Methodist in sentiment, and there were scarcely any young people who would naturally unite with us. But there is quite a reliction now going on in our favor, on account of our more liberal mode of church government, and our being disconnected with slavery. I will inclose a copy of the anti-slavery resolutions passed by our church a few days since without a single dissenting voice. Among those converted during the progress of our meeting were several who have advocated the principles of Universalism, and one of our landlords, who at once abandoned the sale of intoxicating drinks. We hope in about thirty days to stop all others except druggists from selling, through the influence of our new prohibitory law."

WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

EIGHTEEN missionaries have been under commission by the Association in Wisconsin, and one in Minnesota, during the year.

WISCONSIN.

The call for more missionaries is pressing, as the tide of emigration is filling up the cities and many districts of the country with great rapidity. A large proportion of the inhabitants have been reared in the midst of Christian institutions and in the enjoyment of education, and the general advantages of the Eastern States. The foreign population is estimated at one fourth the number of the entire people. The Roman Catholics are numerous in the large towns and cities. The Welsh, and some other portions of the foreign population, are evangelical in sentiment, and are helping to establish society upon true foundations. Five of our missionaries in Wisconsin are Welshmen, who preach to Welsh congregations, and some of them to other congregations, also in the English language.

Wisconsin, both in the products of the soil and her large mineral resources, gives great promise of means for the support of education and religion. But while the State is new, and society is grasping after the best lands, the richest ore, and struggling for worldly substance, it is feared that the support of the Gospel will continue to be much neglected, and that too, by not a few professing Christians, who are vying with the world in their efforts to secure property.

During the year great advances have been made in the cause of temperance and of freedom, and a general gain in the moral tone of society is apparent. Some houses of public worship have been erected, and Sabbath-school instruction is increased. It is matter of painful observation, however, that few revivals of religion have been enjoyed, and comparatively few souls have been inquiring the way of salvation.

Our missionaries and other anti-slavery ministers and Christians find society now sympathizing with them not a little; and it is believed that it will soon be impossible for any minister or church in this State to have a hold upon the public heart while apologizing for slavery, or refusing to give their influence as decidedly against it, as they do against intemperance or any other immorality.

they do against intemperance or any other immorality.

With much that is favorable, the plous have to grapple with destructive errors—Infidelity, Universalism, Romanism, Spiritualism, etc., some of which, with their consequent Sabbath-breaking and other immoralities, extensively abound.

A great work is before the Christians of Wisconsin. The ministers of the Gospel must be sustained, and with teachers and missionaries must be everywhere at work, or all the vital interests of society and of the soul will be sacrificed.

FROM A MISSIONARY LONG A RESIDENT IN WISCONSIN.

"The emigration to our own frontiers is increasing with every passing month, and the line separating civilized from savage life, which, till recently, has passed along quite near us, will soon be removed a long distance to the north and west. Our Eastern friends have little or no conception of the rapidity with which settlements are often formed in the West. A settlement, a few miles from this place, contained in June, 1853, three families. In June, 1854, it numbered about eighty families. I recently met an acquaintance, who told me that in the settlement where he lives there was not a family last February; now there are thirty. What is true here is equally true elsewhere on the frontiers of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota. It is a question of immense importance, How shall these multitudes be supplied with the bread of life?

"Few, comparatively, of those who settle these western wilds bring with them the institutions of religion, or make early and efficient efforts to obtain them. The bread of life must be carried to them by the hands of Christians and the Gospel ministry, or they famish. When it is thus carried, some in almost every community are found who prize and receive the word with joy. The minister is encouraged, continues his labor, a little church is gathered, and the scattered sheep collected into the earthly fold; they meet for worship for a few years, perhaps, in a rude log school-house; then a small meeting-house is built; a minister settled over them; they enjoy a revival of the work of God, and become a strong and efficient church. For such results we live and labor and hope. The frontier minister has joys as well as frials. He rejoices to see truth progress, and the kingdom of Christ built up; he mourns to see the harvest so plenteous and the laborers so few. Oh! that God would pour out his Spirit, and stir up the hearts of his people to more earnest prayer, that he would send forth more laborers into this western harvest."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN SAUK COUNTY.

"Unworthy as we are, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ has appeared unto us in a unusual degree during the past winter. The congregation has been both large and attentive; believers have been greatly strengthened by the Word, and six or eight persons give good evidence of having passed from death unto life. Six recently united with the church, and two or three more probably will do so soon. Very much effort has been made to set forth Christ in the preaching. A manifest change has taken place, and is still going on in the public mind generally, not only in the town but throughout the country, with reference to the essential reforms of the age and the Bible standard of piety. There is very little confidence in the worldly, dishonest, time-serving religion that has so much prevailed among us, much to the detriment of Christ's cause. We may say the public eye is fairly open to discern between the 'precious' and the 'vile.' There is not only a willingness but an anxiety to hear the whole truth."

He writes at a later date :

"There are now in this vicinity seven small but growing and useful Free Congregational churches, and brother D —— and I expect to organize another in two weeks. Four of them are destitute of stated preaching, as yet: we supply them all we can. Do send us some good men to preach the word of life.

"We organized on the 23d and 24th of June last, a church, (ten miles north from here, at a small but rapidly-growing village called Newport,) consisting of ten intelligent, pious, reformatory Christians. An excellent place for a young minister to settle and build up a strong church."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN RACINE COUNTY.

"God hath truly visited his people. The work has been a remarkable and a progressive one. It had its commencement in Christians of different churches, who had been bitterly hostile toward each other, taking each other by the hand, and recognizing once more the lineaments of a common and glorious Christianity. * * As of old, so now others took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus and learned of him; and inquirers were multiplied, until as many as from sixty to seventyfive separated themselves from the congregation, either as reclaimed backsliders, or young Christians, or those anxious to learn the way of life-to know what they must do to be saved. The results thus far have been glorious, and we hope richer fruits are yet to be gathered. Last Lord's-day eleven were taken into covenant with our church. More than twice the number that have joined our communion have already identified themselves with other churches, and yet others will do so. * * * In conclusion let me say, the interests of suffering humanity were not forgotten, nor their introduction considered out of place in these scenes of merciful visitation. We are fully persuaded that Christians who will not abide these tests are unfit for the age, and unprepared for the crisis toward which we rush with the rapidity of time's

FROM A MISSIONARY IN FOND DU LAC COUNTY,

"We have a prayer-meeting which is profitable, and the slaves and their masters, and other kindred topics, are subjects of prayer. The churches, all of them here, profess to be anti-slavery, but I fear there is very little vital energy or Christian principle in many of the controlling influences.

"I think the heart of the masses is right, but is overruled and controlled by leading spirits. The working few must work on, breaking down obstacles, and when the way is cleared, these will gladly move along.

"The prevailing errors among us are Universalism and Conservatism. Sabbathbreaking, among Universalists, is common, and outrageous. A reaping-machine was running all day a week ago last Sabbath, just across the way from our meeting, run by a deacon of the Universalist Church, (so called.) Three others were running within one and a half miles, by professed worldlings, the same day. There are no revivals in our vicinity."

FROM A MISSIONARY AT LARGE AMONG THE WELSH.

"During the last twelve months I have travelled 2025 miles, from one place to another, to preach the Gospel. I have preached 162 sermons, and received 13 on examination to the churches, 10 of which professed to be converted by my preaching. I have attended four dedications of new churches; and celebrated the Lord's Supper 13 times. Also I have attended five anti-slavery meetings. In all places where I preached the American Missionary Association was advocated."

MINNESOTA.

We have but one missionary in this Territory—at Traverse-des-Sioux. The location is one of much interest and promise. The church at Traverse-des-Sioux is increasing, and is taking a strong hold upon the confidence of the community.

The scarcity of Gospel ministers in Minnesota, and the rapid increase of her population, call loudly upon the friends of Christ to furnish the means and send more missionaries to this field.

FROM OUR MISSIONARY.

"The church at Traverse-des-Sioux contemplate erecting a house of worship as soon as practicable. No marked time of spiritual refreshing during the last year, but our church has been blessed, sustained, and strengthened, so that our people have reason to thank God and take fresh courage. We have had a hard struggle with the Rummies in the maintenance of the cause of temperance. In this good cause we record PROGRESS, to the confusion and dismay of German and French rummies, who threatened to deluge us with spirituous liquors. Our sheriff, sustained by the citizens, poured out several barrels of liquor, under the law of Congress prohibiting its introduction in an Indian country, with the penalty of forfeiture of the liquor introduced. This law is our only hope, with the blessing of God, until we get a law similar to that of Maine.

"In our peculiar circumstances here in this new country, character is being developed rapidly; and the line of demarkation touching morals and religion is being more and more clearly drawn, and the chaotic masses of society are assuming shape. But we need the more powerful and efficient, the life-giving and plastic influence of the Spirit of God, to mould and guide us according to his divine will.

"There is some prospect of the Methodist friends being able to build a church here this fall, although they have not as yet organized a class in our place.

"The Roman Catholics at St. Peter's, a small village one mile from this place, are "The Roman Catholics at St. Peter's, a small village one mile from this place, are about erecting a cathedral, under the supervision of the Bishop of St. Paul. And now shall we, first on the ground, first organized, and the first to lift up the standard of the Cross in this great and flourishing valley of Minnesota—shall we fail to honor our God in the erection of a suitable house for his worship and praise! Oh! where, where are the friends of our Redeemer, that they do not come up with us here at this out-post of the kingdom, 'to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty?'

"We need funds, in order to go on with the work. We are on this account obliged to defer building for the present season. The scarcity of lumber, with our low state of funds, rendered building this year unadvisable. But may I not hope that our friends East will lend us their aid for the erection of our house of worship ?"

ILLINOIS.

THE Association, in connection with the Illinois Home Missionary Association, has employed during the year 40 missionaries in this State.

Illinois, now the centre of the North-west, and full of interest in all its relations, it will be seen, has a much larger proportion of our missionaries employed in her midst than any other State. This is owing not merely to the extent of the field, and the multitude of its rising towns and villages in their infancy calling for help, but to the fact that the North-Western Home Missionary Association, which is now the Illinois Home Missionary Association, our auxiliary, located at Chicago, has confined its operations mostly to Illinois, and has a special supervision of that field. A more particular statement of its relations may be seen under the head of Auxiliaries in this Report

In January last this auxiliary secured the services of the Rev. S. G. Wright of Toulon, Illinois, as its agent, to visit the churches in the State, and to engage them, if possible, more fully in the principles and objects of the organization and of the parent Association. His labors have been influential. He has been welcomed by the churches and ministers generally, and such responses in the form of donations have been given as show that the Association has taken a strong hold upon the hearts of very many Christians and philanthropists. Opposition to its principles and operations exists in some quarters, but the great change which has taken place in the public mind on the subject of slavery, and which is tending more powerfully against all connection with, or apology for slaveholding, gives assurance that the opposition will, if not early expended, be harmless.

The labors of the missionaries have been blest in many ways, and during the year, in seven places, revivals of religion have followed upon the labors of our missionaries. A number of churches have been organized, and houses of public worship have been erected. Sabbath schools and Bible-classes are increasing, and although much ignorance prevails in some sections, the cause of education in every department is advancing. Superstition, delusions, and irreligion abound, with other forms of evil, sufficient, it would seem, to excite the fears and to arouse the energies of Christians and patriots for their extinction. Much has been done to promote the cause of temperance, and to secure a law for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. In these efforts our missionaries have been active and influential, as they have also been in the cause of human rights.

We make brief extracts from the reports of our missionaries.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN KANE COUNTY.

"The church at Sugar Grove Centre, some time before I came to labor with them, passed a resolution to dissolve, such was the darkness of their prospects, the low state of their piety, and the depression of their spirits. But their hearts are encouraged, and their purpose to live as a church is renewed; four have been added to their number, and some four or six more we hope will soon unite with us."

He adds:

a There is a large territory some thirty or forty miles north and south, partly in Boone, De Kalb, Kane, and partly in Rendall counties, where there is comparatively but little of the influence of the means of grace. This territory of which I speak lies between the villages along the railroads, and has been occupied for many years. Many of the farmers have become wealthy, and many others are fast accumulating property. The whole territory is rapidly filling up, and a generation is rising up under the influence of unholy examples and of pernicious principles. The great mass of those who live within the reach of public worship have no disposition to attend upon the service. What will be the result of this state of things as time progresses? What can be done to bring all this population under the means of grace I know not. To add to the gloom of the scene, the piety of professors has died away to only a glimmering spark, which seems at times extinct, but again emits a feeble gleam, which betokens a little reviving."

A MISSIONARY IN PEORIA COUNTY, reporting a revival of religion in which he was assisted by the Rev. O. Parker, in a protracted meeting for three weeks:

"The other denominations were invited; they cheerfully cooperated, and received a blessing.

"We trust from eighty to ninety souls were born again. Of this number, some twenty-five were heads of families. Some hardened cases were reached, and many young people and children. The work has seemed to be genuine and thorough. The meetings were solemn and impressive. The preaching was simple but powerful, pungent but kind, overwhelming the sinner with a sense of his undone condition, and gently pointing him to the way of escape. Since Brother P ——left, meetings have been held frequently, and the blessing of God has followed them in the conversion of several persons. And yet the work goes on. During the last week some have submitted, who had resisted the truth from the beginning. The brethren yet seem to talk and pray as though they still expected to gather up the fragments.

"The Baptists have received twenty members, the Methodists twenty-two, and our church forty-two, while we expect twelve or fifteen more. Of those who have come to our communion, fifteen are heads of families; twenty-one were baptized, five being immersed, and sixteen sprinkled."

Our missionary labored for a time in a revival at W ---. He writes, on his return:

"The Congregational church there has enjoyed a very precious revival of religion. Accumulated rubbish has been removed, the graces of Christians have been quickened and deepened, and they hope that from sixty to seventy souls have found a pardoning Saylour.

"The meeting was characterized by the deep movings of God's Spirit, and by the efficient, devoted service of the members of the church."

In his closing report he writes:

"Of the converts during the year I am happy to state that they are running well, almost all; some remarkably well. None have apostatized. During my ministry here we have not excommunicated a member, nor dealt with one publicly. Private admonition has sufficed. The church is very much united in brotherly love.

"During my first year your Society furnished me $200; during the present, $100. Next year we mean to go alone. And being thus brought to a self-supporting condition by your aid, the Church would express its gratitude to the great Head of the Church, who has thus given aid through your Society. It will now in turn endeavor to repay by its contributions,"

FROM A MISSIONARY IN COOK COUNTY.

"The temperance vote of our State has gone for the enemy. Jefferson gave a majority of eleven votes for the Prohibitory Law. This was a triumph for this town, inasmuch as our supervisor had publicly boasted that the votes would be three to one against the law. Our election was held in the bar-room, where lager beer was furnished freely by the rum party. I have more hope of our town since that election.

"My politics have been called in question of late by two or three men who have connection with our liquor establishments. They have expressed serious doubts whether it is proper for ministers to handle subjects of such a delicate nature on a Sunday, and some fear lest we should lose our influence by such improprieties. We console ourselves by the reflection that Paul was not always in good favor in preaching 'righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN MARSHALL COUNTY.

"Indications of the Holy Spirit's presence were discovered in the evident conviction of sin on the part of some of the unconverted."

"I soon after commenced holding an inquiry-meeting once a week, and endeavored to adapt the preaching of the Gospel especially to the case of those who wish to know what they must do to be saved. Our weekly prayer-meetings have received a precious impulse from the Holy Spirit, and every week from the first, there have been new cases of inquiry, and some have expressed a hope in the pardoning mercy of God. I have endeavored to make the people feel that God can save sinners just as well in the busy season of summer as in the comparatively idle season of winter, and that He is abundantly able also to save by the ordinary means of grace as well as by those that are otherwise, and have exhorted them to expect great things of a great and gracious God.

"The Lord has already done great things for us in our low estate, and I trust it is in every heart humbly to feel that all the glory belongs to Him. We had a precious sacramental meeting on the first Sabbath of this month, and nine persons were received into the communion of the church."

FROM A MISSIONARY COLPORTEUR IN VERMILLION COUNTY.

"I proceeded to Trickel's Grove, where I had an appointment to preach on the following Sabbath. The people here were entirely destitute of regular preaching; but two or three sermons had ever been preached in the immediate settlement, and those by a Campbellite, who preaches that immersion is the new birth. On the two days previous to the Sabbath, I visited all the families in the settlement, with whom I had religious conversation, and in a part read portions of Scripture, sung, and prayed. The Lord was indeed with me as I continued my labors from house to house, urging upon their consideration the claims of the Gospel, and exhorting them 'to renounce their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by turning unto the Lord.' This has been a blessed work to me, and the discharge of its duties has had a very happy reflex influence upon my own heart, drawing it out in sympathy with Christ in the great work of saving a world lying in wickedness. In this Grove I found four families destitute of the Bible, and one destitute of both Bible and Testament: four married women and one man could not read. Some were purposing to learn; others thought it impossible for them to do so in the midst of the cares of a family. The last twenty-five cent Bible I had I sold the family who had neither Bible nor Testament. There are still three families who have only the Testament."

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

TOWA.

In this State we have employed during the year eight missionaries. The Rev. O. Emerson, Jr., has, during the last five months, been acting as our general agent in Iowa, and as a missionary at large. From his long residence in the State, and his labors as our missionary for several years past, in connection with his extended travels and correspondence, he has been enabled to bring the Association and its principles and aims before the people, and to secure the affections of many Christians, and the cooperation and support of numbers of the ministers and churches. The influence of our other missionaries has tended to the same happy results.

From their reports, it is seen that advances have been made in the organization of new churches and the building of houses of public worship. In some instances God has revived his work, and has blessed their labors in the conversion of souls to Christ.

This young but giant State, increasing, it is said, at the rate of 100,000 souls annually, presents a field of singular importance for missionary operations. As in other new States, the great aim of the mass of the people is to obtain support and to accumulate wealth. All the varieties of religious error are here found, as well as irreligion, and some open infidelity; all of which increases the necessity of missionary labor. Not a few of the emigrants to Iowa are from States enjoying full religious privileges; some of them are longing for the bread of life for themselves, for their children, and for the people,

These cry, "Come over and help us."

In a few years the people of Iowa will develop means and purpose also, we trust, to carry forward the institutions of the Gospel without aid; but for a time large amounts should be expended in sustaining missionaries, to promote true religion, sound morals, and education; thus laying the true basis of society, temporally and spiritually.

The cause of temperance is advancing, and its effects are most evident and cheering.

The contiguity of this State to Missouri, Kanzas, and Nebraska, keeps the people alive to freedom, as the outrages of the slaveholders and their abettors abound. To this State we look for efforts to thwart the designs of slavery, to protect liberty in Kanzas and Nebraska, and to extend freedom into Missouri. We give extracts from the correspondence of our missionaries below.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN JACKSON COUNTY.

"Our house of worship here was dedicated on the third Sabbath in February, with appropriate services. It is a neat and comfortable edifice, costing somewhat more than a thousand dollars. For the house, and the blessing that has followed its dedication, this people are largely indebted to the Church Building Fund, and to your Association for aid in sustaining the Gospel while the work has been in progress. Without such aid the building of such a house, and the measure of spiritual prosperity now enjoyed would have been to human view impossible. The dedication was immediately followed by a series of meetings, that continued three weeks. The church was in a very unpromising condition, and spiritual stupidity and death appeared to pervade the community. It soon, however, appeared that the Lord was waiting to be gracious-Christians were quickened and refreshed. backsilders reclaimed, and numbers of the impenitent began to inquire the way of salvation. Our meetings for prayer and inquiry were held almost daily, and were deeply interesting. Since the meetings closed, thirteen have united with us on profession and four by letter. A few others, we trust, will unite soon; and on the minds of many impressions have been left which we hope will result in a saving change. The influence of the work was felt in the surrounding region, and on closing our effort here we went to Sterling, five miles west, where a church was organized with twenty members, one year since. The Lord was with us of a truth. Although the weather and travelling were as unpropitious as were ever known in this region, we had a large and deeply attentive audience every night. Methodist brethren were cordial and hearty in their cooperation, and shared with us in the blessing. Several have united with each church, and others will doubtless do so. The number of conversions is not large, but the work is interesting, as being the first revival with which the place was ever blessed. In both these meetings, which continued five weeks, most of the labor of preaching devolved on Brother D. M. V. Stuart, from Oberlin, sent by the Association to labor in the waste places of our State during his winter vacation. His labors were a rich blessing not only to this people but to those of La Claire, where most of his winter was spent. From Sterling we proceeded to Fairfield Township, a small settlement sixteen miles from this, and where Brother Parker has occasionally preached. Here, as in previous labors, it appeared that the time to favor Zion had come. Chiefly as a result of our effort there, a Congregational church of ten or twelve members is about to be organized; a Methodist class is already formed. Near two months have been employed in these labors, and though weeks of severe toil, it has been a delightful and joyous season. All through this region there are tokens for good. For four years past spiritual desolation has prevailed. California gold, with railroad stock and the rise of property, have almost exclusively absorbed the attention of the people. To some of God's hidden ones it has been a night of weeping. But the morning dawns, and is ushered in with joy. Never before during the fifteen years of his labors in this region, has your missionary seen such prospects of usefulness opening before the preachers of the Gospel."

FROM ANOTHER MISSIONARY IN JACKSON COUNTY. .

"Our last communion seasons at Van Buren and Elk River were specially interesting, though the weather and travelling were very unfavorable. A brother and his wife came seven miles in an ox-sled (mercury below zero) to attend the preparatory season, bringing two daughters, who earnestly desired to join themselves to the Lord's people. They had been indulging a hope for some months.

"At the other place, (Elk River,) at the preparatory lecture, Saturday evening, I found two young Scotchmen, who also came to cast in their lot with us. The next day they came, bringing another with them.

"I am preaching at four different places, statedly; two of them are in Rlk River township, (Clinton Co.,) three and a half miles apart; the others in Van Buren and Fairfield townships, (Jackson Co.) The extremes are eighteen miles apart. There is no other regular preaching at most of these places.

"Under the auspices of the Church Building Fund, Bro. Emerson has done a good deal in the way of securing the erection of meeting-houses. One is nearly completed at Elk River, and we have a subscription in part made up for one at the other place, headed by the principal man of the place with $200. Subscription papers are in circulation elsewhere.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN JASPER COUNTY.

"The feeling here in favor of a full, pure Gospel is on the increase. My dear brother, the more I travel and preach this glorious, full, free Gospel of Christ, in opposition to the poor, narrow, selfish one that is almost everywhere preached to a starving people, the more I want to travel. The calls are urgent from almost every quarter to come and preach us the whole truth; and although I am settled down here, where the prospects of doing good are flattering, still I never expect, while I am able to go, to be any thing else than a 'missionary at large.' How can I resist those calls? It is refreshing to spend a week in a place, preaching and talking with a people who are famishing for the bread of life. O dear brother! if we only had a host of faithful, godly men, how soon might this great western land be redeemed to freedom and to God. It is almost impossible for a person, situated at as remote a distance as you are, to understand fully the importance of prompt and efficient effort in behalf of truth in the West. May the Lord of the harvest send forth faithful laborers more abundantly."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN FAYETTE COUNTY.

"The anti-slavery sentiment is pretty general, and anti-slavery politics are in the ascendency in the county. I preached a series of three sermons on the subject, at most of my points of preaching, during the autumn, with less opposition than I have usually met when treating upon that subject. Of errors, we have Universalism, Campbellism, and Adventism, or the advocates of Annihilation—all with ministers at work. These but make more work for the lovers of truth."

FROM A MISSIONARY IN DUBUQUE COUNTY.

He wrote Jan., 1855: "The work of the Lord here seems to have steadily progressed since my previous communication. Some four or five give evidence of a change of heart, and five or six more are very seriously pondering, 'Shall I serve the Lord or no?' I had worked myself almost down, but these past few days my strength seems quite renewed; and this morning I shall start to visit two inquirers, who are seven miles distant. I walk in nearly all my journeyings. I have found this a hard field, but I think it will prove a fruitful one, if duly cultivated. I suppose there are fifteen or twenty anxious souls hereabouts, but a large number of these will not own it before the world. The interest in religion has steadily increased at Cottage Hill since my arrival. There is also a deep feeling manifested at Durango."

His labors to the close of his term were blessed; a church was formed, and many facts occurred of interest and of much promise.

FROM OUR AGENT AND MISSIONARY AT LARGE.

We are able to make only one or two more extracts, the following being but a portion of his annual report:

"In the sermon of Dr. Bushnell, entitled 'Barbarism the first danger of the West, he says: 'If the region east of the Mississippi could be brought under the influence of civilization and religion, the country could be redeemed.' In my view that point, as to the North-East, at least, is gained. The social and moral condition of Wisconsin and Illinois is not as elevated as that of Massachusetts and Connecticut, but they are on the highway to the elevation and improvement of the older States. With the moral and intellectual appliances that now exist, we do not believe that any portion of the continent will be subjected to so severe an ordeal; will ever be called to resist so many downward tendencies, as did the Eastern and Middle States during their Colonial and Revolutionary periods, or as did Western New-York and Ohio, at a later day.

"During its forming state the West will be a hot-bed of all manner of 'isms,' a grand theatre for reproducing, combining, and wamping over all the old systems of exploded error, with which past generations have been blinded and cursed. But when society is formed, and the necessity that now exists for an intense absorption in material interests is superseded, those systems of delusion will be attended to; and will receive that measure of contempt and reprobation which they so richly deserve. They are now adopted by multitudes, not upon account of their being true and important, but as the last novelty presented to an active but vacant mind.

"There will be at the West an appalling amount of irreligion for a long time to come; but its religious character, when formed, must be based on the Evangelical system. They will not trouble themselves to accept and propagate any such gross and naked absurdities as Universalism, or any such tissue of shadowy, impalpa-system. They will not trouble themselves to accept and propagate any such gross and naked absurdities as Universalism, or any such tissue of shadowy, impalpable negations as is modern Unitarianism. The West can not be Infidel; for she is proving by experiment in ten thousand localities, at the same moment, that she must have the Gospel, as the basis of civil and social life. Her population are busy making society; and they are fast learning what sort of stuff it is best to make it of."

He next gives reasons why Romanism can not control the West; but as our space is brief, and as some of his views on this point have been heretofore presented in our publication, we must omit the remarks on that important topic. In conclusion he remarks:

"God has called into being the great system of organized benevolence, which is the glory of our age and country. And He demands that this system should be worked with the highest possible efficiency, bringing into requisition all the energy of its national character, directed and intensified by the constraining love of Christ. To attain this efficiency, there is required a heroic self-devotion, not a whit behind that exhibited in the martry ages of the Church; and there are affored opportunities of usefulness never equalled since the primitive disciples, driven from Jerusalem, 'went everywhere preaching the word,' and wielding the power of miracles in attestation of its truth."

KENTUCKY AND NORTH-CAROLINA.

WE have employed in Kentucky during the year four missionaries and three colporteurs; and one missionary in North-Carolina.

In Kentucky the year has been marked in various respects with interest in the prosecution of the missionary work. Probably in no former year has there been so large an extent of its territory visited by our missionaries. A deep interest has been created in our objects in many minds. Our missionaries have generally had access to the people, in preaching the Gospel, presenting the sin of slavery in common with other sins. This has been done with fidelity, with earnestness and zeal. Discussions have been held on the subjects of Slavery, Colonization, and Caste, and a large number of anti-slavery tracts have been circulated by colporteurs and missionaries, as well as religious tracts and books.

From extracts given below, some idea may be formed of the moral and religious state of the country, and the ignorance of the larger portion of the people. The necessity of religious instruction and of education is great, and the religion of the country generally most defective. Bible distribution among the slaves, and others, and reading the Scriptures to slaves, and also to families of the whites, must be more extensively pursued, with all other labors for the salvation of the people.

One of our colporteurs in November last was threatened by a self-constituted committee, and required to leave the State, on the charge of aiding slaves in escaping to freedom; of which, however, they failed to produce evidence. They finally left the colporteur without molestation.

Early last spring, at a place appointed for discussion, Rev. John G. Fee, of Kentucky, was prevented from speaking, assailed by a mob, and, by violence, forced out of the town. This outrage excited great feeling, and the friends of freedom effectually vindicated the right of free speech. The mobocrats failed to secure public sympathy and aid, and free discussion of the slavery question and kindred subjects is now not interfered with. Mr. Fee and our other missionaries preach the whole Gospel without molestation. A score more of faithful missionaries and colporteurs could find abundant opportunities of labor in several counties, could they be furnished for this interesting field.

Our anti-slavery churches in Kentucky are feeble, and are kept so by constant emigrations from them to the free States. If Christian people would emigrate to Kentucky, to strengthen these churches and the missionaries in their efforts, great good would be effected. Intelligent Northern Christians would carry with them the elements of improvement, and greatly advance the intellectual and religious character of the whole people. We make brief extracts from the correspondence of our missionaries.

One of them, who labored in several counties, wrote from Madison county, in the autumn of 1854:

"For the last ten days I have been in the mountains preaching every day except one. My congregations, for this part of the country, have been good. A considerable portion of the people are willing and anxious to hear an anti-slavery Gospel, and ministers of no one denomination get larger congregations here in the mountains than ours.

"There are very many lazy, degraded, and ignorant people here, who can not read, and many who can, that do not read enough to do them much good; and thousands of children are, doubtless growing up to manhood without education. This is truly a missionary field. The facts of the Gospel have been dwelt upon in the abstract, followed with appeals to hopes and fears, and the result has been a poor, selfish religion, far removed from practical Christianity. I take great pains, in preaching, to demonstrate the most unpopular anti-slavery truths, so as to secure the consciouces of all.

"I had last Sabbath a large congregation, composed of both friends and foes. Two Baptist ministers had an arrangement to preach about a mile and a half from my meeting, not knowing of my appointment. When they arrived at their place of meeting, they found so few hearers, that they concluded to come and hear me; neither of them ever having heard any discourse on the subject of slavery, though they had read upon it a little. They were pleased, and invited me to come to their neighborhood, about eight miles distant, where the anti-slavery Gospel has never been preached. I have made an appointment to preach there. I wish you could have been with me last Sabbath, and witnessed the interest with which the people listened to the Gospel, as applied to all moral evils in society."

At the close of his commission, he writes:

"All efforts to propagate the Gospel at the South, based on a compromise with slavery, are but a curse to the South. The course now pursued by the leading benevolent societies is not only unscriptural but unphilosophical.

"The importance of preaching an uncorrupted Christianity at the South can not well be exaggerated; the depth of ignorance and degradation there is not understood at the North. The work of planting pure Christianity here is not the work of a day: almost every thing is to be done for the people.

"The success of a missionary must not be measured by the number of his professed converts. The question of slavery must absorb much of the attention of the people for some time to come. The true idea of religion must be set before their minds, and the false sentiments presented by corrupt religious teachers must be corrected, and the impressions made by them removed. * * * I have preached in thirteen neighborhoods where the anti-slavery Gospel had never been preached, and was allowed to preach a second time in all those places excepting two. I have made many ardent friends; have made no compromises, and in the midst of slaveholders have talked with them upon all subjects, slavery not excepted, as frankly as I would in my own village.

"There is a foolish and wicked fear of slaveholders at the North, and many men travelling South act like fools in their presence, leading them to look upon the North as a mean-spirited, 'chicken-hearted' people. A manly course can be pursued with them, not inconsistent with the meekness and humility of the Gospel."

FROM REV. JOHN G. FEE, BEREA, MADISON COUNTY, MARCH, 1855.

"Preparations had been made for a discussion with a young lawyer of Garrard county, about twelve miles from my house, on the subject of Colonization. He had actually entered upon it, and made his opening speech at one of my previous appointments. I went at the time appointed, with a brother in the church, expecting a pleasant debate. My opponent, at the dictate of his masters, declined any further discussion, violated his promise to maintain liberty of speech, and joined a meeting (or mob) which passed resolutions against my further preaching in the neighborhood, (near Crab Orchard, Lincoln county,) all at the time unknown to me or my friends. When I went, I found the accustomed good and attentive audience absent, (expecting no discussion,) and a lawless band of wicked, profane men (about 40) in their stead. They presented their resolutions, accusing me of rebelling against law, teaching doctrines immoral, and tending to violations of chastity, and insisting that I must desist from preaching there, adding, 'This is peremptory.' A physician was put forward as their foreman. In the company was one preacher and ten professors of religion, as I was assured by an aged member of the Baptist church, at whose house the meetings had been held. I replied to their resolutions and demands at some length. I demanded to be brought before law tribunals, if I had violated law. If I was teaching error, I asked some lawyer, doctor, or preacher, or any half-dozen of them, to appear before the peeple and show it, and let me have a chance of reply. They replied: 'We want no discussion; it only does injury.' This is the policy of slavery and overy other wicked work: it shups the light.

is the policy of slavery and overy other wicked work; it shuns the light.

"They then demanded that I should promise not to preach any more there. I refused to thus pledge myself, telling them I should be treacherous to God, to my own soul, and to their highest interest if I should do so, and that they would really regard me in that light; that I must, therefore, refuse to comply with their demanded. They then demanded that I should leave that house, threatening violence if I did not. I again refused, saying I should do no one thing that had the appearance of retreating or surrendering a right. They swore I should; took me by force, put me on my horse, then with boards and sticks forced my horse along, pouring upon me vile abuse and constant threats of violence. Then it was that I felt the force of the words uttered against Christ my Saviour: 'Away with him!' away with him!' In many respects this was to me a most trying occasion. I regretted it because of the effect upon the minds of many friends who were just beginning to lend a favorable ear, and upon thousands in the distance who will have their minds prejudiced by misrepresentation as to the cause, and because of the manifestations of depravity and wickedness in our citizens. State papers and politicians will again set against us like so many fierce dogs. Yet to me it has been a blessing. It has driven me nearer to God my strength. It has given me such sympathy with Christ as I had not before, and could not have had otherwise. How good is God! He makes the wrath of man to praise him. He converts the curses of life into blessings. 'Blessed are ye when ye are persecuted for righteousness' sake.' Since then I have been enabled to preach to the brethren twice from this text. But we have no State paper to speak through, and but few laborers. How shall we reach the people? But Moses waited in the wilderness forty years, and the missionaries in the Society Islands twenty years, before much manifestation of good. The harvest season at length came. It will yet come in this country, if we faint not. Pray for us; oh! pray for us!"

Mr. Fee, by request, attended the meeting of the Association held (during anniversary week) in the Tremont Temple, in Boston, May 31st, and made one of the addresses. On the following Sabbath he preached at Boston and at Newton Centre, and the next Sabbath, at Hartford, Conn., and addressed various audiences in other places on his way back to Kentucky. The people were everywhere deeply interested in the statements made by him of the churches which do not fellowship slaveholders, the progress of anti-slavery principles in Kentucky; and of the labors in which he and the missionaries and colporteurs associated with him were engaged; and were moved by his earnest appeals and views of the duty of Christians in relation to the overthrow of slavery, and the true christianization of the slave States.

Mr. Fee wrote, July 7th:

"You will remember that last March, a mob, on the border of Lincoln and Garrard counties, struck down, in my person, liberty of speech.

"The is likely to produce quite a sensation in the public mind, and possibly a new era in the anti-slavery enterprise in this State.

"We have endeavored to improve the occasion by showing the people that this is but a legitimate fruit of slavory, which is a system of selfishness and force, disregarding the interests of all men, white as well as black; that the principle that enslaves the latter will the former. Hundreds who before were silent are now speaking out in tones of marked disapprobation of the conduct of the mob. The people seem to have lost sight, for the time, of all controversies about modes of emancipation, and are making common cause against slavery and for freedom of speech. Slaveholders, in their lawlessness, seem not to see that they are actually precipitating the work of freedom. That mob, in two hours' time, probably did more to advance the cause of freedom in this and adjoining counties, than we could have done in two years of faithful preaching. God be praised, 'that he makes the wrath of man to praise him.'

"Within the last four or five weeks, C. M. Clay has made a number of speeches in this and the adjoining counties. He has spoken with great acceptance and effect. The meetings, he says, have been larger and more enthusiastic than formerly. We announced to the people that if they would come together on the fourth day of July, we would endeavor to restore the custom of our forefathers—celebrate the day, not with a barbeene—eating, drinking, and dancing; not with addresses in behalf of temperance or Sabbath-schools, (however good in themselves, and appropriate for their times, yet on that day, serving only to turn away the public eye from the condition of the englayed and the inconsistency of the nation,) but in behalf of human freedom

"Though the notice was short and limited, yet a large audience was collected of orderly, quiet citizens. C. M. Clay, in an address, eloquent and pertinent, enchained the audience for two hours. The evils of slavery, in driving back the spirit of liberty, politically and ecclesiastically, in retarding national prosperity, and now taking away liberty of speech, were delineated in a most impressive manner. This was followed by another short address from myself, showing the relation of the Church of Christ to the subject of liberty. All denominations were present, and quite a sprinkle of slaveholders; yet the most orderly conduct was observed, and the audience seemed deeply and favorably impressed. This was truly encouraging and refreshing. It but demonstrates, as former facts have done, that here as in many other districts, the people's minds are open to truth and conviction on the subject of slavery. 'The fields are white already to the harvest.' Oh! for faithful, godly, unsectarian ministers, who are willing to endure hardness for Christ's sake. Now is a crisis with us, as I believe. If we had faithful men to feed the people with truth—facts showing the obligations of non-slaveholders and the Church to the poor slave, I believe the people could be roused to determined and efficient action. But if this opportunity be not improved, then we may expect the slaveholding power to forestall future action.

"Now is the time for action. Who will say, Here, Lord, am I, send me. And who will say, Here, Lord, are means by which he may be sent. Let all be faithful stewards."

Mr. Fee writes at a later date:

"There is an impression made by the public press, which will, I fear, if generally believed, prove injurious to the cause of freedom in this State. The impression is, that free speech here depends upon one man; that 'C. M. Clay is the bulwark of free speech in Kentucky.' I wish not to detract from the faithfulness and courage of that gentleman, or any other man; but that free speech depends not upon C. M. Clay, John G. Fee, or any other man, but, under God, upon the virtue yet remaining in the hearts of the people, is manifest from the following facts:

⁴¹ I. In Lewis and Bracken counties we had, without weapons or armed friends, free speech on the subject of slavery secured to us before Mr. Clay visited those counties, or any other person had publicly taken the field to discuss the question.

"2. The same was secured, by the people, to the 'United Brethren,' in Adair and other counties.

"3. In Rockland county, (where the resolutions were passed that neither Mr. Clay nor myself should speak any more in the county, and before the Scaffold meeting, at which Mr. Clay was present,) brother Davis and myself held a series of meetings after the adoption of the resolutions, and five miles nearer to the place where they were adopted than when Mr. Clay spake, when Mr. Clay was not in the county. Disturbance was expected, but it did not come. The people there, as in many other places, are determined to hear, and to maintain liberty of speech.

"I have been constrained to make these remarks, because: 1. If the impression gets abroad that liberty of speech depends upon any one man, however great or valiant, then those who are willing to be laborers will be willing to labor only as they can labor under the immediate protection of that person. This all can not do.

2. Others, who now sympathize and cooperate with and pray for us, will cease to do so if they get the impression that the way for the Gospel has to be opened by an armed force. Hundreds of places are already open without force. I say, then, 'Come over and help us.'"

FROM OUR MISSIONARY IN LEWIS COUNTY.

"Two of the persons mentioned as hopefully converted have since died. Two others expect soon to move away. The remainder, three in number, will, I trust, in due time unite with the church.

"Within three miles of Glenville are three meeting-houses, Northern Methodist, O. S. Presbyterian, and 'Union,' though the prevailing influence in the last-named is Campbellit

"Within four miles of Bethesda are five church edifices. O. S. Presbyterian, Methodist North, Methodist South, Campbellite, and 'Union,' though mostly Campbellite.

"Last winter the protracted illness of one formerly opposed to us, was blessed to the overcoming of much prejudice, never again, we trust, to be revived.

"On the fourth Sabbath in June, Rev. W. C. Yancey, from Ohio, of the Wesleyan connection, preached at Bethesda, and officiated in the exercises of the Lord's Supper. The church was much revived, and a deep impression made on a few not professors of religion. The interest was increased by the labors of Pres. Blanchard, who preached a number of times (six) at the beginning of this month in the same place. He preached at Glenville also, to the great benefit of both pastor and people. From his labors some date their conversion.

"Some of the members, both at Glenville and Bracken, appear to be growing in grace. A good proportion are found at the regular prayer-meetings, and in their intercourse with their fellow-men, aim to observe the requirements and show the spirit of Christ. Yet it has been found necessary to discipline and exclude sev-

"Shooting-matches, parties of pleasure, pleasure parties on the Sabbath, are common among those who do not profess religion. Even among professors of religion, stern steadfastness is not always to be met with. Yet occasionally one is found ready for martyrdom sooner than betray his trust. Nor are these exceptional cases solely among the male members.

The recent occurrences in the interior of this State have awakened a fresh interest in the anti-slavery cause. In conversation, and by tracts, undivided effort is made for its advancement.

'The church at Glenville holds a monthly missionary meeting, in which much interest is felt by those who attend, though the number is small. The members of the Society contribute each five cents monthly.

"The prevalent error in this region is, so far as my observation extends, that the most important business of a Christian is to hear sermons. There is, to a land table degree, confusion of mind as to what constitutes a child of God, and what God requires of his children. It is my prayer, that from this state of mind 'the truth may make them free.1"

We give a few extracts from the Reports of one of our Colporteurs indicating some of the incidents of successive days' labors :

- I have visited and re-visited two hundred and sixty-one families. Found one handred and sixty-two of these to be pro-slavery, and one hundred and twenty-seven anti-slavery, though a number of them are as yet Colonizationists. This seems to be the legitimate result of the Colonization Society. It fosters the spirit of caste, and thereby induces the belief that the African and their descendants should be retained in slavery, except upon condition of banishment, and that for no crime on their part.
